We think, therefore, that the court below erred in deciding that the law was with the plaintiff, and in giving him judgment against the defendants. It must be set aside, and judgment for the defendants with costs.

SAME CASE, ON PETITION FOR REHEARING.

The Supreme Court cannot take original jurisdiction of a cause, even by consent of the parties, but an appeal from a final judgment of the Circuit Court may be heard and determined here, whether brought up regularly, according to prescribed forms, or when such forms are dispensed with by agreement.

Where a case is submitted to the Court, upon an agreed state of facts, for its judgment on the law, such submission is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence. But where facts alone are submitted, and the court is only called on to weigh the evidence, and decide accordingly, there being no question of law upon which the merits of the case depend, an appeal, or writ of error, does not lie.

97 The counsel for appellee applied for a rehearing in this case, and filed their petition according to the rule, setting forth the grounds of their application, substantially as follows:

1st. That Lloyd & Flagg, in the assignment of their effects, could not rightfully transfer to the appellants the cotton received from Galphin and Footman, the drawers of the bill held by Allen. It was not their's absolutely, but only for the purpose of paying acceptances first, and then the accounts of those individuals. The property, therefore, passed cum onere. 2d Story's Reports, 630, 638. 13th Peters, 483. 1st Condensed Supreme Court Reports, 137.

2d. The cotton was bound by the acceptance, because the acceptance was absolute, and the acceptors cannot divert it from the payment of the bills held by an endorsee, who has advanced his money upon the acceptance. 15th Peters, 394, 5, 6, 7.

3d. The assignees cannot occupy a better or a higher position than Lloyd & Flagg would themselves have occupied, if the assignment had not been made. If the drawers had placed funds in the hands of the acceptors, (Lloyd & Flagg,) those funds were applicable to the payment of the acceptances, and could not be applied to other debts due from the drawers to the acceptors. In this case, Allen's claim was due, and his right to be paid out of the proceeds of the cotton attached prior to the assignment to Holbrook and Archer. See 16th Peters, 129, 130, 131, 132.

4th. The acceptance by Lloyd & Flagg is as if they had said in express terms, that the cotton in their hands should be held applicable, and should be appropriated to the payment of Allen's claims. See the principle in 5th Wheaton, 277. 4th Condensed Supreme Court Reports, 647. See, also, 5th Peters, 599.

5th. In answer to the view taken in the opinion of the court, that Allen had abandoned his claim against Galphin, 98 is submitted that this liability of Galphin was not considered as involved in the case; and if it was, it is insisted that Galphin was not entitled to the notice of non-payment, which the court thinks was necessary, but is liable for having withdrawn the fund which was properly applicable to the payment of the bill.

6th. The cotton in the hands of Lloyd & Flagg was a trust fund for the payment of the drafts. 1st Barbour's New York Reports, 488. They being the factors of the drawers, and receiving their crops, it mattered not whether the cotton was in existence or not at the time the bills were drawn. The cotton was actually delivered, as the record shows, prior to the assignment.

There were other reasons stated in the petition, as constituting a sufficient ground for the application, which are noticed in the opinion of the court.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the following opinion:

The court have considered the petition filed in this case with the attention which the care and labor manifested in its preparation merit. They accede to most of the legal positions assumed by the counsel, but have been unable to perceive their application to the case as it is developed upon the record. A material fact is stated as if on the knowledge of counsel, but there is no evidence of it before us. It is said "Lloyd & Flagg could not hold the cotton, because they had engaged to apply it to Allen." We find nothing in this engagement in the agreed statement of facts. The same thing is substantially re-asserted, in characterizing the nature of Lloyd & Flagg's acceptance. It is said, "their acceptance is nothing more nor less than if they had said in express terms, the cotton in our hands shall be held applicable, and appropriated to the payment of Allen's demand." If this is meant as a mere legal inference, it assumes the fact that Allen's draft was the only 99 one drawn by Galphin during the whole year, or, at least, had precedence of all others. This nowhere appears. On the contrary, the record shows that Lloyd & Flagg were in the habit of accepting his (Galphin's) bills, and making advances to him; and it also appears that, at the close of the year, Galphin was indebted to them near $3,000, which we are left to infer was the aggregate of the acceptances and advances they were in the habit of making.

We agree to the law, as stated in the petition, on the subject of a factor's lien, but we cannot see its application.—The whole of Galphin's cotton was appropriated to the payment of his debt to Lloyd & Flagg, and the factor's lien upon it was consummated by this appropriation. If this factor's lien enured to the benefit of any particular part of Galphin's debt, it nowhere appears that it was the part contracted, on account of the acceptance in favor of Allen.

The whole difference between the court and the counsel appears to grow out of this, that the counsel seem to regard Allen's draft as the only one drawn during the year—while the court are compelled to consider it as only about the seventeenth part of the aggregate of all the acceptances and advances. There is no evidence that Allen's draft had priority. On the contrary, it fell due only twenty days before the failure and assignment of Lloyd & Flagg, and it may reasonably be presumed to be among the last in the order of precedence.

The court is referred by the petition to the record as a reply to a remark in the opinion of the court, "that the bill was not drawn upon any particular cotton, nor, indeed, upon the faith of any cotton at all." It was obviously the meaning of the court, in making this remark, that Galphin, though, perhaps, known to the counsel as a cotton planter alone, was only made known to the court as a planter, and who sent his crops to Lloyd & Flagg to be sold.

There may have been sugar, or tobacco, or corn, as part of 100 the crop, for these are all staples of the country, and, therefore, the court thought it a very vague supposition to identify a particular draft, constituting the seventeenth part of Galphin's whole indebtedness, with any particular lot of cotton which may constitute but the seventeenth part of his crop. There is nothing apparent to justify the identification; and if it be said that Allen might select what funds he pleased, after it had passed out of the hands of Lloyd & Flagg, it would lead to this absurdity, that none of the cotton, or sugar, or corn, or tobacco, which had once belonged to Galphin, and had been sold by Lloyd & Flagg, could ever escape the operation of this lien, no matter through how many hands it has passed, nor how many and various forms it had assumed.

The court is surprised to find at the conclusion of the petition, the following objection to the judgment of the court: "One other point remains to be noticed. This case was submitted to the Judge of the Circuit Court, upon an agreed state of facts. There was no demurrer to the evidence, and no bill of exceptions. Where, then, is the authority of this court to adjudicate points of law—to decide questions of law raised by the pleadings, and instructions to the jury? It cannot try the case as a jury, nor as the court did below, by an agreement of the facts."

Little need be said in answer to this objection, beyond a reference to the agreed statement, signed by the counsel, who signs as senior counsel to this petition. At the close of that statement, we find these words: "The foregoing are agreed upon as the facts of the case, and on which the judgment of the court is prayed. And it is further agreed, that if either party is dissatisfied with the judgment of the court, the cause is to be carried by consent, without bond, in appeal to the ensuing term of the Supreme Court, to be docketed and tried during the term."

101 It is true, that if the subject matter of this case was not within our jurisdiction, we should be bound to notice it, though the party were thus estopped by their own consent from raising the objection, but we do not so consider it. The maxim that consent will not give jurisdiction, is misunderstood, if it is supposed to mean that none of the forms prescribed as the ordinary mode of prosecuting appeals, may be waived by consent. The Supreme Court cannot take original jurisdiction, even by the consent of the parties, but they can hear and determine an appeal from a final judgment of the Circuit Court, either when brought up regularly, according to certain prescribed forms, or when those mere forms are dispensed with by agreement.

In 1st Florida Reports, 271, the Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The correct rule in the cases tried by the court, sitting as a jury, would seem to be, that, where facts alone are submitted, and the court has only to weigh the evidence and determine accordingly, no writ of error lies; and where mixed questions of law and fact are presented to the court for its decision, no writ of error lies, unless the court is called upon to decide questions of law, or such questions of law arise necessarily out of the facts, and are distinctly presented to the court upon them, so that the decision of the points of law will decide the merits of the cause, and the decision of the court is wrong." In this case, such was the fact, and the submission of the agreed facts to the court for its judgment on the law, was precisely equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence. The same rule is sanctioned in the case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company v. Gray, 3d Florida Reports, 262. 5th Cranch, 358. 3d Cranch, 174.

The petition for a rehearing must be denied.

102 MARY ANN PORTER, EXECUTRIX, APPELLANT, v. GEORGE W. FERGUSON, APPELLEE.

The declaration of a party, made at the time of transaction, and expressive of its character, motive, or object, are indicative of a present purpose and intention, and are admissible in proof, like any other material facts.

Letters written and sent by a principal to his factor, with the goods consigned to his care, are indicative of the purpose and intention of the principal in regard to them, and are admissible in evidence to show the instructions and orders given to the factor, or agent.

An instruction or charge given by the court, which has nothing to do with the issue produced by the peadings, is erroneous. The jury should respond to the issue of fact made by the pleadings. An instruction or charge, therefore, which is outside the case, having a tendency to mislead or divert the minds of the jury from the true matter in controversy, is good ground of reversal.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Monroe county.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought by the appellee, George W. Ferguson, against the appellant, executrix of Joseph Y. Porter, and was tried at the Fall term of the court, in the year 1850, HON. JOSEPH B. LANCASTER, Judge of the Southern Circuit, presiding.

The declaration sets forth an alleged verbal agreement between Ferguson and Porter, by which the former undertook to make and send, from time to time, the latter, who was a merchant at Key West, arrow root, for shipment thence to New Orleans; and a promise, on the part of Porter, to receive the arrow root, and ship it to the port of New Orleans, for sale in that market, for and on account of Ferguson. The declaration then avers that plaintiff, in compliance with his agreement, sent to Porter seventeen hundred and twenty-five pounds of arrow root, worth $140, which was received by him, but which, contrary to his 103 agreement, he shipped to Charleston, in the Fall of 1846, and that it was lost at sea. By reason whereof, the defendant became liable to pay to plaintiff the value of the said arrow root.

The defendant pleaded non assumpsit.

At the trial of the cause in the court below, the plaintiff introduced Thomas J. Ferguson as a witness, who was sworn, and deposed to the contract, as laid in the declaration.

On the part of the defendant, John W. Porter, who was a clerk at the time of the alleged contract of defendant's testator, being sworn as a witness, contradicted in every important particular the testimony of plaintiff's witness.—According to the testimony of J. W. Porter, it appeared that defendant's testator undertook to make advances, and did make advances, upon arrow root sent to him by Ferguson, and that the agreement between them was, that Porter was to take the complete management and control of the arrow root—sell it in any manner he might think proper, and to the best advantage, and ship it, if he pleased to do so, from Key West to any port where he might deem it expedient to sell it, or which he might think best for plaintiff's interest; and that, in the exercise of the discretionary power which he had under the agreement, he shipped the arrow root in question to Charleston, hearing that it was a better market than New Orleans at that time.

There was no other material or important evidence introduced or offered on the trial of the cause in the Court below.

The Court gave instructions, which presented the true issue to the jury; but, at the request of the counsel for plaintiff, the following instruction in substance was also given, viz: "If the jury believe from the testimony, that it was the usage of trade for consignees for shipment at Key West to insure on goods of others sent to them for shipment, 104 without instructions as to insurance, and that J. Y. Porter shipped the arrow root in question without insuring it, and it was lost at sea, he was liable for the loss, and they ought to find for plaintiff." To this charge, defendant's counsel excepted; and this instruction (among other errors alleged to have been committed by the court below on the trial of the cause, all of which are noticed in the opinion of this Court,) is assigned for error.

Verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the court below.

Hogue, for Appellant.

Towle & Papy, for Appellee.

THOMPSON, Justice. delivered the opinion of the Court.

Several grounds of error are assigned upon the transcript of the record of the proceedings and judgment in this cause, which will be noticed in their order.

1. The first error assigned is upon the admission of the affidavit of the respondent, to prove the loss and destruction of certain original letters of Porter, the testator of appellant, so as to let in secondary evidence thereof. This point was very properly surrendered and abandoned by the counsel for appellant on the argument here. The affidavit of a party, as to the loss of a deed, document, or other writing, after evidence of the existence thereof by other testimony, is clearly admissible. 1st Greenleaf on evidence, Secs. 349, 558, and authorities cited in the margin.

2. The second error assigned is founded upon the exception taken at the trial to the introduction of the letters of respondent to Porter, which were produced by the appellant under a rule, and offered in evidence by the respondent. These letters appear to have been written at the opening, and during the continuance of the correspondence between accompanied the respective consignments of the goods as the parties as principal and factor, and which seem to have 105 they were, from time to time, made. The declarations of a party, made at the time of a transaction, and expressive of its character, motive, or object, are regarded as verbal acts, indicating a present purpose and intention, and, therefore, admitted in proof, like any other material facts. 1st Greenleaf on Evidence, §108. These letters are to be considered as a part of the res gestae, having been written and sent by the principal to the factor, with the goods consigned to his care, and are indicative of the purpose and intention of the principal in regard thereto. They are the instructions and directions of the owner of the property to the factor, his agent, and if they are not proper evidence, it is difficult to conceive how a factor could ever be made responsible to his principal for a deviation from the orders given. It is true, they are not conclusive evidence, for the factor may have refused to receive the consignment under the instructions, or may have insisted on some modification, or alteration thereof; but this is for him to show. Upon every point of view, the testimony was properly received, and this exception is overruled.

3. The third assignment of error is upon the exception taken at the trial to allow question to be put to the witness, John W. Porter. This witness was introduced for the purpose of impeaching the credit of Thomas J. Ferguson, the witness for the plaintiff below; and the question propounded was, "Have you the means of knowing the general character of Thomas J. Ferguson, and if yea, from such knowledge, would you believe him upon oath?" The question being objected to by plaintiff's counsel, was ruled to be improper, and disallowed by the court.

In the English Courts, the practice is, to propound the question to the impeaching witness, in the precise terms employed in the questions asked of the witness here, and involving in its scope the entire moral character of the person in question. See Phillips on Evidence, 292. Mr. Greenleaf, 106 in his treatise on evidence, (volume 1, page 541, note 3,) says: "Whether this inquiry into the character and reputation of the witness, should be limited to his reputation for truth and veracity, or may be made in general terms, involving his entire moral character and estimation in society, is a point upon which the American practice is not uniform." In North and South Carolina, and in Kentucky, the common law doctrine is practiced and defended; in other States, the rule prevails, which limits the inquiry to the general reputation for truth and veracity. A majority of this court are in favor of the recognition of the limited rule, as that which is most consonant with reason and propriety. For my own part, amidst the conflict of doctrine in the American Courts, I prefer, as the safest course, to hold to the common law practice. However, we are all of opinion, that, in the present case, the evidence sought could have been of but little, if any, importance. Besides the attack upon the character and reputation of a witness, there are other modes of discrediting him; one of which is by disproving the facts stated by him, by the testimony of other witnesses. This was, also, sought in this case, by the testimony of the same witness, John W. Porter, whose statements were in direct opposition to that of the witness, Ferguson. Would the additional statement of Porter, that the witness, Ferguson, was a man of bad moral character, and in his opinion, unworthy of belief upon oath, give more, weight to his opposing statements, or further tend to weaken the impression made by Ferguson's evidence? We think not. While the veracity of both stood unimpeached by other evidence before the jury, if the opposing and contradictory statements of Porter did not intrinsically possess sufficient merit to contervail the statements of Ferguson, it is very clear to our minds, that an impeachment by Porter of Ferguson's character for truth and veracity, would not meet with any consideration from the jury. This exception is likewise overruled.

Porter, Executrix, vs. Ferguson.—Opinion of Court.

4. The fourth assignment of error is upon the instruction 107 given by the Court to the jury, upon the prayer of the counsel for respondent. If due attention had been given to the matter put in issue in this cause, it would have been found one of much simplicity; but the pleadings seem to have been disregarded at the trial by all parties, and questions wholly foreign to the issue have been raised, discussed and decided, and are now brought before this court for review. The object of pleading is to ascertain, with certainty and precision, the matters of fact which are affirmed on the one hand, and denied on the other, and are thus mutually proposed and accepted by the parties for decision; and the question, so produced, is called the issue. Under our practice, of allowing the defendant to plead as many pleas as he may think proper for his defence, even though they be inconsistent with each other, sometimes a case presents many issues of fact for the determination of the jury, but this case is not of that character.

The declaration is on a special assumpsit, and sets forth a contract or agreement by parol between Ferguson and the appellant's testator, which is in substance as follows: that Ferguson, who was a manufacturer of arrow root, would, from time to time, send and deliver to the said Porter, as his factor, parcels of the said arrow root, and that Porter should receive and ship the same to the port of New Orleans, and there sell, or cause the same to be sold, for and on account of Ferguson; that, in pursuance of said agreement, Ferguson, in September, 1846, delivered to Porter seventeen hundred and twenty-five pounds of said arrow root, of the value of $140, and which the said Porter, under the agreement aforesaid, should have shipped to New Orleans, but in violation of his agreement, and against the consent of Ferguson, he shipped the goods to Charleston, whereby the same were wholly lost.

The plea is non assumpsit. What is the question of fact evolved by these pleadings? By Reg. Gen. of January 108 Term, 1847, title "Pleadings in Particular Actions," § 1, it is provided that, "in all actions of assumpsit, except on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the plea of non assumpsit shall operate only as a denial in fact of the express contract or promise alleged, or of the matters of fact from which the contract or promise alleged may be implied by law." Applying this rule, and guided in its application by the examples given in the succeeding paragraphs of actions of a kindred character, we say the point of fact in controversy raised by the plea of non assumpsit in this case is, whether such a contract or agreement as that alleged in the declaration, was, in fact, made between these parties—the breach of that contract is not put in issue thereby.

At the trial of the cause, the court, on the prayer of the respondent, instructed the jury as follows, viz: "If the jury believe, from the testimony, that it was the usage of trade for consignees for shipment at Key West at that time, to insure on goods of others sent to them for shipment, without instructions as to insurance, and shipped by them; and J. Y. Porter shipped the arrow root in question without insuring it, and it was lost on the voyage at sea, he became liable to pay plaintiff the value of it, and in that case, they ought to find for the plaintiff, &c." Now, what has this instruction to do with the issue which the jury were sworn to try? The instruction directs the attention of the jury to a breach of the contract or agreement, when the breach is not put in issue by any plea—a breach, too, which is not alleged in the declaration. The breach alleged is for shipping to Charleston, when he was bound by his undertaking to ship to New Orleans, whereby the goods were lost—the deviation is the gist of the breach; the negligence or omission to effect an insurance on the goods against the perils of the sea, which, by the usage of trade, he should have done, is not charged. Whether the instruction is or is not 109 correct in point of law, is here not necessary to be decided—it was not in issue, and, therefore, irrelevant, and should not have been given; and if it tended to mislead the jury, and withdraw their minds from the consideration of the true issue, it is erroneous.

The instructions given to the jury in conclusion, it is true, do put the issue made by the pleadings to the jury, but these instructions are also justly obnoxious to the same charge of introducing extraneous manner, for they also put to the jury the question of the breach of the contract, when, in fact, the breach was neither denied, nor confessed and avoided, by plea. As before remarked, the appellant had, in the court below, put her defence upon the simple and isolated ground, that her testator never made any such agreement as that alleged in the declaration. No evidence was pertinent or proper, save what would conduce to prove or disprove this fact, and saving, also, the proof the value of the goods, as a guide to the jury in the assessment of damages, in case they found the issue for the plaintiff.

It becomes, therefore, very important to inquire, whether the jury were probably misled by the instruction first given, and their attention thereby withdrawn from the consideration of the true, and directed to a false issue? It will be seen, from the evidence set forth in the bill of exceptions, that the testimony on the subject of the agreement was very contradictory—the witness for the plaintiff stating it distinctly and clearly as it was set forth and alleged in the declaration, and the witness for the defendant stating as distinctly and clearly the reverse, by affirmative allegations of other and inconsistent terms and conditions of the agreement in relation to the arrow root. In the absence of the first instruction, we should have presumed that the jury, under the last instruction, had duly exercised their province of weighing the testimony, and had responded to the issue, that there was such contract, agreement and undertaking as 110 that alleged in the declaration; but when we reflect that the task of deciding between the opposing and contradictory statements of two persons is at all times unpleasant, and that jurors, like other men, are ever ready to avail themselves of any fair and honorable means to decide the controversy without passing upon and impugning the veracity of any of the witnesses, and examine the first instruction given them, we are led irresistibly to the conclusion that the jury in this case must have based their verdict upon that charge. They could find this instruction upon the contract as stated by either witness. It placed the plaintiff's claim, not upon the contract set forth in the declaration, but upon the negligence of the defendant's testator in his capacity of factor, in omitting to do that, in the performof his duty as factor, which, by the usage of trade, he should have done, to wit, to insure the goods shipped against the perils of the sea, by means of which negligence, the goods were lost. Both witnesses proved a contract of factorage. The plaintiff's witness a special and particular agreement, that the goods were to be re-shipped by the factor to New Orleans, for sale there—the defendant's witness proved that the agreement was, that the factor was to ship to any port or place he pleased, or which he might think to the interest of his principal. By changing the issue from the one made by the declaration and plea, to-wit, the making the agreement itself, and putting it before the jury, on the question of negligence, it is evident the jury would conclude it unnecessary to decide the question of credibility resulting from the contradiction of the witnesses, because, if the liability of the factor depends on the question of diligence, and they find he has been negligent under the agreement proved, their duty is accomplished, by finding that issue. They could, under the statements of either witness as to the contract, respond to the case made by the instruction, and probably felt themselves bound to do so, although they may have believed that the plaintiff had failed to prove the contract 111 as laid in his declaration; and yet the only issue they were sworn to try was, whether there was, in fact, such contract.

The breach laid in the count not being denied or confessed or avoided by plea, was admitted, and the jury finding the issue upon the agreement for the plaintiff, were authorized to proceed to the assessment of the damages sustained, according to the evidence on that point of the value of the goods. We may remark in this connection, that, although the declaration contains, in addition to the special count before referred to, a count for goods sold, and money had and received; yet it is not claimed or pretended that any evidence was offered to the jury to authorize a finding upon that count, and for which reason we did not notice it, in adverting to the case made by the declaration.

5. Three instructions were asked for in the court below by the appellant here, and upon the refusal of the court to grant the prayer an exception was noted, and this exception forms the fifth assignment of error. We do not express any opinion upon the principles of law asserted by these instructions, but we say, that, as they relate entirely to the question of the assumed obligation of the factor to procure insurance on the goods, a matter not legally and properly in controversy in the cause, they were irrelevant, and for that cause ought not to have been given.

We regret very much indeed, as the amount involved in this controversy is small, that we are compelled to remit the case for a new trial, but believing as we do that the jury were misled by the oral issue made at the trial upon a breach of contract, not the breach assigned in the declaration and not in any wise in controversy in this suit, we have but one plain duty before us, which is to order and adjudge that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, in accordance with this opinion.

KIDDER M. MOORE AND J. C. MONTFORD, EXECUTORS, APPEL- 112
LANTS, v. DANIEL HAMILTON, GUARDIAN, APPELLEE.

Executors have no authority to invest money belonging to the estate of their testators on personal security. If they do so, it is at their hazard, and on their own responsibility. They are personally liable, if the security proves defective.

The statute of this State requires executors, administrators and guardians to take mortgage security for the money of minors invested by them, and this power must be exercised under the direction, and with the sanction and approval, of the Court of Probate.

When the accounts of executors or administrators are finally adjusted and closed, it is their duty to pay over to the guardian of the minors their distributive share, and not loan it out, (if in money) even on mortgage security.

Bank bills are treated as money, and it is not to be presumed that the Legislature in using the word money, meant only gold and silver. It was not intended that executors and administrators should treat such bills as other personal property, and sell them at public outcry.

Where executors or administrators treat bank bills, left by a deceased person, as money, if they invest it in a mode not in accordance with the directions of the law, even though they act in good faith, and with an honest purpose of benefitting the estate, they are responsible for any loss that may ensue from the exercise of such discretion in a manner not warranted by the law.

On the 23d day of January, 1849, the accounts of Kidder M. Moore and John C. Montford, executors of the last will and testament of William Turner, deceased, filed as to the Spring Term of the Court of Probates of the County of Leon, was examined by James E. Broome, Judge of Probate of said County. Daniel Hamilton, guardian of the infant children of the deceased, who are distributees under the will, by Thomas Randall, his attorney, having notified the court that he objected to the allowance of an item claimed by said executors as a credit, amounting to $1,612

113 50, a sum due and owing from William P. Craig and Edward Lockerman, who, it was alleged, were insolvent; and the court having, on the testimony of Richard Hayward, considered that, at the time of the loan of said sum to Craig & Lockerman, the executors had acted in good faith and with prudence, and to all appearances, for the best interest of the estate of Turner, allowed the said executors a credit for the amount claimed as insolvent. To this allowance, Hamilton, guardian as aforesaid, excepted; on the ground that the loan made was contrary to law, and prayed an appeal to the Circuit Court of the county of Leon, which was granted.

The testimony of Richard Hayward, which was taken before the Probate Judge, was as follows: That he came to the Territory of Florida in company with Edward Lockerman, in 1828—that he knew said Lockerman in Maryland. He was, at that time, considered unembarrassed, and possessed ample means to carry on his business—that he did, apparently, a prosperous business up to the year 1840, or 1841. That deponent was well acquainted with the business of said Lockerman, and in the month of March, 1841, would have considered him (the said Lockerman) as good as any man in the Territory, and would have taken the endorsement of said Lockerman with as much confidence as he would have taken that of any other man of his acquaintance here. Deponent believes, in March, 1841, that the said Edward Lockerman was worth fifty thousand dollars over and above his liabilities. Deponent knew William P. Craig in the year 1841—supposed him to be good for his contracts. He held a large property—had lost largely in St. Joseph's speculations, but deponent supposed him solvent, and would, at that time, have loaned said Craig, without security, sixteen hundred dollars of the bills of the Union Bank of Florida, to be returned in good funds.

The Circuit Court of the county of Leon, Hon. Thomas 114 Baltzell, Judge of the Middle Circuit, presiding, at the Fall Term of said Court, A. D., 1850, set aside and reversed the decision of the Judge of Probate, and remanded the cause, with directions to disallow the said item, and from this judgment, Moore and Montford appealed to this court.

The consideration of the note given by Craig & Lockerman, for the $1,612.50 loaned by the executors, was Union Bank bills of that amount, which were admitted to be 25 per cent. below par funds at the time of the loan, and the note was made payable to K. M. Moore, one of the executors of William Turner.

The appellants, by their counsel, assign the following errors apparent of record in this cause:

First. The item of sixteen hundred and twelve fifty one-hundredth dollars, in the account rendered by the appellants, as executors in the Court of Probate, ought not to have been disallowed by the Circuit Court, as a credit in favor of the executors, who are appellants

Second. The proceedings are irregular, in not exhibiting to the court the names of any persons entitled to any interest in the subject matter in controversy.

Judge Baker, of the Middle Circuit, sat in the place of Justice Thompson, who had been of counsel in the Circuit Court.

Archer, for Appellants, contended—

That the Judge of the Circuit Court erred in deciding that the law, 207, Thompson's Digest, applied to this case. That law requires loans by executors to be made under the direction of the court, secured by mortgage. This was not, strictly speaking a loan, but a sale of personal property, which the executors are authorized to dispose of. See Thompson's Digest, 202. Union Bank paper was perishable property—which paper, at the time of the alleged loan, was depreciated 20 or 25 per cent. The executors made the best disposition of it, by selling it to those who are 115 proved to have been good and solvent men at the time; and an executor can only be required to manage the estate as the testator himself would have done. Union Bank notes were not money, but choses in action.

As to the second error assigned, the infant children have no legal title to any portion of the estate, and can have none until the estate is closed and finally settled up. Citing argument of counsel in Moseley v. Williams, 2d Florida Reports.

Branch, for Appellee, cited—

Thompson's Digest, 207, to show the law prescribing the duty of executors, administrators and guardians, in cases like the one before the court. The executors in this case should be held to the consequences of their failure to do their duty according to law. If they should be so held, then they were not entitled to the credit which they were allowed by the Judge of Probate, and the Judge of the Circuit Court did not err in reversing the decision, and directing the item claimed to be disallowed, for the reason that the loan was made contrary to law.

Executors are responsible for money loaned on personal security. See 2d Williams on Executors, 1547. If they loan on personal security, it is at their risk. 9th Law Library, 122.

In this case, it appears from the account filed in the office of the Probate Judge, that these executors claimed and charged commissions on Union Bank money. They sold real estate in 1841, for Union Bank paper, and thus recognized it as money. Besides, in 1840, the paper of this Bank was current money in the country, though it did not pay specie, having suspended in 1837. But if these executors had regarded the paper of this Bank as perishable property, as is contended for by the counsel for appellants, why did they not put it in their schedule as such? Their account, stated by the court from accounts and vouchers in the of- 116
fice of the Judge of Probate, filed in 1844, shows not only that they did not so regard it, but that they actually were allowed, and got the benefit of the depreciation of the Union Bank notes.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

This case comes before the court on an appeal from Leon Circuit Court, and the principle facts presented by the record are these: On the 30th of March, 1841, Moore, one of the executors of William Turner, deceased, having in his hands the sum of $1,612 50 in bills of the Union Bank, belonging to the estate of his testator, loaned the same to Craig & Lockerman, who executed and delivered to him their note, in the following words:

$1,612 50. On the first day of January, next, we, or either of us, promise to pay to K. R. Moore, one of the executors of William Turner, deceased, sixteen hundred and twelve fifty one-hundredth dollars, for value received.

W. P. CRAIG,

The drawers of this note becoming insolvent, it remained uncollected in the hands of the executors. Afterwards, on the 25th of October, 1849, an account of the executors with the estate, bearing date in April, 1844, was filed in the office of Probate for Leon county, and in this account appears this item of $1,612 50, reported as insolvent. To this account is annexed a statement of the Judge of Probate, that the account as stated is on the supposition that the $1,612 50, received at the death of the testator, was in Union Bank notes, &c. On the same day, the attorney for respondent filed in the Probate office the following exception: "Daniel Hamilton, guardian of the infant children, who are distributees under the will of William Turner, deceased, by Thomas Randall, his attorney, appears in court, and makes exception to the decision of His Honor, the Judge of Probate, by which the executors are allowed a credit for $1,612 50, the amount of the loan made to Craig and Lockerman, on their returning the note and judgment thereon as being insolvent, on the ground that said loan was made contrary to law, and prays an appeal." 117

Moore and Montford, Executors, vs. Hamilton.—Opinion of Court.

By evidence taken before the Judge of Probate, it appears that, at the time the loan was made to Craig & Lockerman, they were wealthy and amply able, as was supposed, to respond to their liabilities; and it further appears by the record, that the bills of the Union Bank, at or about the date of the note, were depreciated to the extent of twenty-five per cent.

The allowance of the credit of $1,612 50 constitutes the subject matter of the present controversy; and the question presented to the consideration of the court is, as to the authority of the executors to dispose of the bills of the Union Bank in the manner they did.

The authority of executors to invest money belonging to the estate of their testators on personal security, has been the subject of frequent adjudications in the English Courts. In some of the earlier decisions, a discretion to some extent, when exercised in good faith and with due caution, seems to have been conceded to executors in this respect; but the more recent cases make no such concession, and the doctrine may now be considered as settled in England that an executor cannot invest on personal security; if he does, it is on his own responsibility, and at his own hazard. Precedents in Chancery, 272. Wilkes v. Steward, Cooper's Equity Reports, 6.

In the case of Terry v. Terry, Chancery Precedents, 273, the court say, that the rule is now well established, that an executor or administrator, lending money of the deceased on bond, or promissory note, or other personal security, though not guilty of a legal devastavit, yet is guilty of a breach of trust in equity, and is personally liable, if the security proves defective. 118

It is true, that, where an executor exercises reasonable care and diligence in the strict line of his duty, he will not be liable for any deficiency of the money in his hands, or for the insolvency of any person who may be entrusted with it; yet, if he travel out of that line of duty, and assumes to invest any part of the property of the estate in funds, or upon securities not authorized by law, and a loss ensue by insolvency or otherwise, he will be liable, however unexpected the result, or however free his conduct may have been from improper motive. See Clough v. Bond, 3 Mylne & Cr., 496.

If an executor, without good reason, leave money due upon personal security, which, though good at the time afterwards fails, he will be responsible. 5th Vesey, 1839. 1st Maddock, 290. And the case is much stronger, where he makes the investment improperly, as upon personal security. 2d Williams on Executors, 1547. See, also, 7th Blackford's Reports, 529. 2d Wheaton's Reports, 32.

In a case reported in 2d Cox's Chan. Cases, 1, Lord Kenyon held that a trustee could not lend an infant's money on private security; if he did, he would become responsible, if the obligors became insolvent, though they were in very ample circumstances at the time of the loan; that the rule was a wise and excellent one, and should be adhered to.

Independent of the authorities referred to, the provisions of our statute seem comprehensive enough to determine the question before us. "Executors, administrators and guardians may, by leave of the court, retain in their possession the money of any minor, paying for the same lawful interest, or shall, under the direction of the court, put out the money of the minors at interest, upon such mortgage security as the court shall allow, and if such security be taken bona fide, and shall prove insufficient, it shall be the loss of the minor, &c." Thompson, 207. It will be observed that the statute not only restricts the powers of executors to mortgage security, but as a further protection of the interest of minors, very properly annexes to the exercise of that power, the sanction and approval of the Court of Probate. 119

To avoid the operation of this statute, it is contended by counsel for appellant, that these infant children, who are distributees under the will of Turner, have no legal title to this money, or any portion of the estate, and can have none, until the account of the executors is closed, and the estate finally settled up. This doubtless is true, and yet they have such an interest in this fund and the other property, as would authorize the courts to interpose their power, and protect the estate from waste and mismanagement. Our statute recognizes this interest as a direct and personal one, by empowering the court of Probate, upon their application, through their guardian, and proof of mismanagement on the part of the executors, to require of the latter bond and security for the due administration of the estate. Thompson, 210. Besides, the effect of the argument is to render the provision of the statute, as to executors and administrators, wholly unmeaning and inoperative; for upon their accounts with the estate being finally adjusted and closed, it is their duty to pay over to the guardian of the minors their distributive share, and not loan it out, (if in money,) even on mortgage security.

It is also insisted that these bank bills are not money, and are, therefore, not within this statute. That they are not money strictly speaking is conceded, and the same may be said of the bills of all other banks; and when depreciated, they lose, to a certain extent, even their representative character. Less their depreciation, like other bank notes, they are, in conformity with common usage and common understanding, regarded as money.

In the case reported in 12th Johnson's Reports, 220, the court say, that bank bills are treated civiliter as money, and a tender is good, unless specially objected to.

The Legislature, in the use of the word money in this statute, doubtless, intended to give to it its general signification; for it can hardly be supposed that it was contemplated to resrict the word to gold and silver, and require executors to loan that on mortgage security, while bank bills should be regarded and sold at public outcry, as other personal property. 120

But independent of these considerations, the defence set up by these executors is far from being a meritorious one; for in all their dealings with the estate, they have regarded the bills of the Union Bank as money. If they considered them as the other personalty belonging to the estate, why put them in their schedule as money? Why retain the bills of this bank in their hands, for the avowed object of paying the debts of the testator, and for which purpose it is not pretended they were not available? Besides this, by reference to their account, we find that in 1841, they sold the real estate of the testator for bills of this bank, amounting to the sum of $1,695, and charged commissions on this amount with interest, less the depreciation, at the rate of six per cent. As to the sum now in controversy, we find in their account this charge—"To commissions on cash on hand at the death of the testator—say $1,623 50, at 6 per cent—$97 41."

It further appears that, after being allowed by the Probate Court the sum of $553, for depreciation on the proceeds of their own sale of the real estate, they retain $750 in these bills to pay out as money, for and on account of the estate.

These facts sufficiently indicate their own opinion as to the character of these bills. The court is not disposed to give them a different character, and one, in its opinion, not contemplated by the statute. The court is of opinion that bank bills left by a deceased person, and coming into the hands of an administrator or executor, should be regarded as money, under the provisions of our statute; and that the executors in this case, having failed to invest this money in 121 the mode prescribed by law, the estate should not suffer on account of the misapplication of this fund.

In loaning this money, these executors no doubt acted in good faith, and with an honest purpose of benefiting the estate; but in discharging the trust committed to them, they have assumed to exercise a discretion which the law does not warrant, and it is out of the power of this court to shield them from its consequences.

The court can discover no reason in this case for relaxing the rule, as laid down in the authorities; but, on the contrary, many considerations of a public nature might be invoked, why the English rule, strict as it is, should be rigidly adhered to, and especially where the interest of minors is affected..

Let the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

JOHN B. DOGGETT, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, v. MARCELLUS JORDAN, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

When a petition for rehearing is postponed or continued, there should be an order made simultaneously with the order of continuance, vacating or suspending the judgment.

The principle settled and decided at the January Term, 1849 and 1850, in the case of Doggett vs. Jordan, approved and re-asserted. See 2d Florida Reports, 541, and 3d Florida Reports, 215.

It is not a good ground for the rehearing of a cause, and setting aside the mature and deliberate judgment of the court, that it differs from a previous judgment, made upon a misapprehension of the record. If this was allowed, it would be to perpetuate error, for the sake of consistency.

This cause was decided at the January Term, 1850. See 3d Florida Reports, 215. The defendant in error filed a petition for rehearing, which, for want of time, was not considered at that term.

122 The petition sets forth the ground of the application, and is as follows, viz:

Defendant in error by his counsel moves and petitions the court for a new hearing of this cause, and assigns the following reason:

The court, in the opinion pronounced on yesterday, reversed the judgment of the Circuit Court in favor of Jordan, for a cause which was assigned as error at the last term of this court, and expressly overruled "per curiam."

The Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the court in this cause, at the last term, (See Reports 1849, page 551, 552,) says: "The fifth error alleged seems to have been assigned under a misapprehension of the provisions of our judiciary act, the 12th section of which (Duval's Compilation, page 92—Thompson's Digest, page 327, No. 2,) declares "That when any original writ or summons has been sued out against two or more defendants, and returned by the sheriff, or other officer, served upon one or more of the defendants, and that the other defendants do not reside in said district or county, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff, at his option, to proceed to judgment against those upon whom process has been served, or to obtain from the court time to perfect service," &c. We have seen that the summons in this case was issued against John B. Doggett and Henry Doggett, and that it was returned "served on John B. Doggett, and that Henry Doggett did not reside in this (Leon) county." This brings the case within the provisions of that statute. The plaintiff elected to proceed to judgment against John B. Doggett the defendant upon whom process had been served, and we see "no reason to doubt his right to do so. The fifth error, therefore, is not sustained."

It will be perceived, by reference to the "fifth" error here alluded to and overruled, that it is identical with the only error now assigned and sustained. The facts in regard to this point were exactly the same at the last term 123 as at this. We contend, therefore, that this court has already decided his point in this cause. The defendant in error (Jordan) has acted upon that decision, by going to trial with the pleadings and return of the sheriff the same as they were at the last term. Had the court, when this case was brought before it at the last term, sustained the "fifth" error assigned, Jordan would have had it in his power, at the new trial, to have altered his pleadings, so as conform to the opinion of the court; but the court having refused to sustain the "fifth" error, and having decided that it was not error in him to proceed as he then did, and now does, in regard to this point, he went into the new trial with the pleadings and return of the sheriff unaltered. At the new trial, he obtained another verdict and judgment. We respectfully submit whether that verdict and judgment should be now set aside and reversed, for a cause which was then determined by this court, after argument and deliberation, to be no proper ground for error.

Long & Walker, for Petitioner.

Branch, for Defendant.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The petition for a rehearing in this case was filed during the last term of the court, but for want of time, its consideration was postponed to the present term.

We have found no precedent for an order of continuance in relation to a petition of this nature, but we suppose that it is a necessary incident to the general powers of the court, and so deeming, we have no hesitation in considering it. The difficulty which it has been suggested might arise from granting a rehearing after the former judgment was executed, might be avoided by an order vacating or suspending the judgment, made simultaneously with the order of con- 124 tinuance. This was omitted at the last term, but we understand no action has been taken upon the judgment in this case, and, therefore, no inconvenience can result from the consideration of the petition. The future observance by the court of the practice of suspending its judgment, when it finds it necessary to continue a petition for rehearing, will sufficiently provide against the occurrence of any difficulty hereafter.

The ground upon which the petitioner asks for a new hearing is a single one, and is thus stated: "The court, in the opinion pronounced on yesterday, (during the term of 1850,) reversed the judgment of the Circuit Court in favor of Jordan, for a cause which was assigned as error at the last term of this court, and expressly overruled "per curiam."

In proof of this allegation, the petition refers to the opinion of Chief Justice Douglas, upon the fifth error assigned in the record of 1849, which error is in these words: "The court erred in entering judgment against John B. Doggett alone, if John B. Doggett was liable as a partner of Henry Doggett." This error was not sustained, for the reasons given by the Chief Justice, which was based upon the return on the writ first issued in the case. In the argument of counsel in this case, printed at length in the report of the case, no reference is made to this fifth error whatever.

The case having been sent back for a new trial, was brought up again to the Supreme Court in 1850, and the only error assigned was the same in substance with the fifth error as assigned on the previous appeal. On this occasion, the error was sustained.

On looking into the opinion of the court, it will be at once perceived that the attention of the court was called to a different state of the record from that which they supposed it to be in the year previous. In the first case, the attention of the court was directed to the return on the first writ, and we think their decision in reference to that return was correct. In the second case, their attention was directed to the fact that, subsequently to the return on the first writ, the plaintiff procured, by order of the court, an alias summons to issue to Henry Doggett, upon which the sheriff made return in the following words, to wit: "Not in the county."

It also appeared from the record, that judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, Jordan, against John B. Doggett, and that there was no order of the court, showing what disposition had been made of the suit as to Henry Doggett.

The error assigned was "a departure in the judgment from the writ and declaration, which renders said judgment reversible—that the writ and declaration being joint against John B. Doggett and Henry Doggett, and the judgment against John B. Doggett alone, there should have been some order or judgment of court, showing what disposition had been made of said suit as to Henry Doggett." For reasons which seemed sufficient to the court, and which, to our minds, are conclusive, this error was sustained and the judgment below was reversed.

If there was error in the first decision of this case, it arose from the fact that the court did not have their attention called to a particular portion of the record, to which it was called on the second occasion, by a more particular assignment of error. The granting of a new hearing now, having in contemplation the setting aside the more mature and deliberate judgment of the court, because it differed from a previous judgment, made upon a misapprehension of the record, would be to perpetuate error, for the sake of consistency——a policy which is vicious in all professions, but in a Court of Law of the last resort, it would be evidently unbecoming and mischievous.

126 We are relieved from all apprehension of any injustice being done in this case, by the fact that the judgment now complained of being an order for a new trial, is not conclusive as to the rights of either party. A simple amendment of the sheriff's return, would effectually remove any obstacle that the opinion of the court interposes to the prosecution of the plaintiff's claim in the court below. New trials are available for the correction of the mistakes of the courts, as well as those of the jury.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

SAMUEL B. LOVE, SHERIFF, APPELLANT, v. WILLIAM WILLIAMS, APPELLEE.

The lien of an execution does not constitute, per se, a right of property in the thing itself, but a right to levy upon and sell it, for the satisfaction of the debt. But any sale or assignment of the defendant's personal property after the delivery of the writ of fieri facias to the sheriff is ineffectual as to the lien of the writ.

Where two writs of execution are delivered to the sheriff, and he executes the one last delivered first, the property of the goods is bound by the sale, and the money must be paid over to the plaintiff in the writ under which the sale was made. The plaintiff in the writ last delivered has his remedy only against the sheriff, for the breach of duty in not executing first that writ which was first delivered to him.

Where the sheriff has been guilty of a breach of duty in not levying the execution which was first delivered, the courts cannot give relief summarily, by motion rule. The proper remedy is an action on the case for a false return, or for not levying the writ.

The record in this case shows the following state of facts and proceedings in the court below, viz:

William Williams, on the 14th November, 1842, obtained judgment against James Lanier, Robert L. Harrison and Uz Wood, for $1,328 10, in the late Superior Court in Gads- 127
den county. A fieri facias issued thereon, and on the 11th May, 1844, an alias writ of fieri facias was sued out, returnable when satisfied, which was delivered the same day to John G. Camp, Marshal of the Middle District, and was in his hands, unexecuted, when the State government was organized, and on the 1st November, 1845, was turned over by him to Benjamin C. West, who had been elected sheriff of the county.

A few days prior and up to the 12th November, 1849, (the appellant, Samuel B. Love, having been elected sheriff,) the late sheriff was engaged in delivering the precepts and papers in his office to his successor, the appellant, which was thus effected:—Robert C. Lester, the Clerk of the Court, was employed by the late and newly elected sheriffs to prepare a list or schedule of the executions, and which the new sheriff, Love, receipted to his predecessor for. Lester does not recollect whether the above mentioned fieri facias was among the papers so turned over; but James Hine, who was deputy for the former sheriff, says he saw the fieri facias among the papers so turned over to Love.

On the 12th November, 1849, the court-house at Quincy was destroyed by fire and, with it, all the records and papers of the clerk's and sheriff's offices, except the files of the causes for trial at the approaching term.

On the 14th November, 1849, Richard H. Wilson, executor of James Wilson, recovered judgment in the Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit for Gadsden county against Robert L. Harrison, for $2,057 29, on which he sued out a fieri facias on the 27th November, 1849, and which was delivered to the appellant, Love, the sheriff of the county, on the same day, and by him levied on the 29th of the same month upon three slaves and 400 bushels of corn, the property of the defendant in execution. The property was sold on the 7th January, 1850, for the sum of $1,050; of which sum, thirty-four dollars and two cents were levied for his 128 costs and commissions, leaving a balance of one thousand and fifteen dollars and ninety-eight cents nett proceeds of said sale.

On the 7th January, 1850, the plaintiff in the first fieri facias served the sheriff with a notice, in the following terms:

William Williams, plaintiff, v. James Lanier, R. L. Harrison and Uz Wood, defendants.—Assumpsit.

In November term, A. D., 1842. Judgment for, to wit, $1,500, in late Superior Court for the county of Gadsden, State of Florida. Last alias writ of fieri facias came to the hands of the proper officer, 11th day of May, A. D. 1844. The above described writ of fieri facias is in your hands, and there is still due and owing upon the same to the said William Williams the sum of, to wit, $1,600.

You are hereby notified that the said William Williams will hold you accountable for any property or money that is now, or may hereafter, come to your possession, belonging to said James Lanier, Robert L. Harrison and Uz Wood, or either of them, until said writs of fieri facias are fully and completely satisfied. WILLIAM WILLIAMS, by his Attorney, John Erskine.

To SAMUEL B. LOVE, Esq.,
Sheriff of Gadsden County, State of Florida.

Endorsements thereon, viz: I accept due, and sufficient, and timely service of the within notice.

And on the 10th January, 1850, the said Williams filed his petition to the Circuit Court, praying the establishment of the record of the judgment and of the writ of fieri facias, which had been destroyed by the fire of the 12th November, and such proceedings were had, that, on the 20th day of May, 1850, the court ordered that the judgment be 129 revived and substantiated, with the same force and effect as if it had not been destroyed; and on the 22d day of May, 1850, ordered and directed that a substantial copy of the writ of fieri facias, which issued on the 11th May, 1844, should be prepared by the clerk and issued, and that, when issued, should be substituted in the place of the original, which was destroyed.

On the 21st May, 1850, Williams, the plaintiff in the fieri facias against Lanier, Harrison and Wood, moved for and obtained a rule upon the appellant, to show cause why he does not pay over to the plaintiff $1,050, in his hands, collected from the defendants in said suit.

To which rule, the appellant answered as follows, viz: "In answer to the rule entered in this case, on the motion of John Erskine, Esq., attorney for the plaintiff, the sheriff says that he does not know whether any execution ever came to his hands in the above stated case; but if the execution in this case did come to his hands, it was destroyed in the fire, which consumed the sheriff's office on the 12th day of November, A. D., 1849. That, afterwards, on the 27th day of November, 1849, an execution came to his hands in favor of Richard H. Wilson, executor of James Wilson, against Robert L. Harrison, for the sum of $2,057 29-100, which he levied on the following property: Judy, about 24 years of age, and her three children—Sarah, about 6 years—Kinch, 4 years, and John, about 2 years; which property was sold, under and by virtue of said execution, for the sum of $1,150, which, after deducting $34 02-100, left a balance of $1,015 98-100—of which sum, he paid over to R. E. Gibson, attorney of Richard H. Wilson, executor as aforesaid, $1,000, leaving in his hands $15 98-100, subject to the order of this court. S. B. LOVE, Sheriff."

Exhibiting with his return a copy of the fieri facias of Wilson's executor v. R. L. Harrison, with the levy and sale endorsed thereon.

130 On Thursday, November 21, 1850, the Circuit Court made the rule absolute, directing the sheriff to pay over to the respondent's attorney the amount collected by the said sheriff on the fieri facias in favor of R. H. Wilson, executor, v. R. L. Harrison, and to be applied, it is presumed, to the satisfaction of the fieri facias in favor of respondent, against Harrison, et al.

From this judgment the sheriff brought this appeal to this court.

Gibson, for Appellant.

This is a rule on the sheriff to show cause why he has not paid over the money. The rule is designed to be in accordance with the statute to be found in Thompson's Digest, page 358. Tidd's Practice, pages 58-9.

This remedy was only given by the statute, in cases where money has been actually collected on an execution. The rule should have alleged that the money mentioned in the rule had been collected on the execution of Williams v. Harrison, et al.

The English practice is to rule the sheriff to return the writ, and if the party is not satisfied with the return to sue the sheriff for a false return. Clerk v. Withers, 1 Salkeld, 322, 323. Tidd's Practice, page 309. Thompson's Digest, page 355.

The court below confounded the practice under the statute and the English practice, by ruling the sheriff to return the writ, and then declared the return false, and entered up judgment.

The sheriff had a mandate from Gadsden Circuit Court to execute, to wit, the execution of Wilson v. Harrison, and this he must do, until a superior mandate supervenes.

The notice was incomplete, in not stating that the execution was lost, but if complete, was not sufficient to stop the execution of the fieri facias. Thompson's Digest, page 360.

The only remedy the appellee had, if any, was to have 131 filed a bill, making the sheriff, Wilson, and the defendants in his execution parties, and to have obtained a writ of injunction, which would have come with authority.

Supposing this proceeding to be proper, yet the execution which appears on the records is irregular, and not authorized by either of the orders which appear on the record.

The first order simply says that the judgment shall be established, and that the plaintiff may have execution thereof.

The second order, which authorizes the establishment of the original execution, (for which the one on the record seems to be designed,) though entered at the May term, was suspended until the Fall term; yet this execution was issued in May.

This case simplified, resolves itself into this, that the sheriff had an execution in his hands, which was destroyed by fire; in the meantime, another execution comes to his hands, which he executes. When ruled on the first execution, he returns that he never had it, but it is proved that it was in his hands, and that it was burned in the fire which consumed the Court House, which is a sufficient excuse. 1 Hill's South Carolina Reports, 69, Mitchell v. Anderson.

The execution of Williams was dormant—it had slept for years, and there was a manifest want of diligence, in not procuring it to be satisfied, before the judgment in favor of Wilson was obtained. On the subject of dormant executions, see 17th Johnson, 274. 11th Johnson, 107. 1 Bayley, 295.

Erskine, for Appellee, said—

1. If the sheriff had paid over to Wilson's attorney the money received from the sale of Harrison's property, under the execution in favor of Wilson, before the notice, there might be a question; but as notice was given, he should have paid it over to Wiliam Williams, the plaintiff in the elder fieri facias. Sanders v. Bridges, 3d Barnewall & Al- 132 derson, 95.

2. The first execution must have the priority, though the levy and sale were under the younger. Hutchison v. Johnson, 1st Term Reports, 729. Citing, also, Willis v. Shepard, 2d Florida Reports, 397.

3. The property of a defendant in execution is not divested by the levy—not till sale, or execution executed.

Archer, in reply, referred

To the rule served in this case, contending that there was a want of particularity and certainty in it—that the proceedings to establish the destroyed record and writ of execution were not evidence against the sheriff in this controversy. The plaintiff, Williams, it is true, had a lien from the time the execution came to the hands of Camp, the marshal; but the question here is, ought not the sheriff to be excused, under the special facts of the case?

There is a difference between the existence of a lien, and a complaint against an officer for not enforcing the lien. The question is, what was the proper course to pursue, admitting the existence of the lien? Manifestly the remedy was not by summary proceedings by motion. The proper course was, first to produce a return, and if that return was false, then the remedy was by action on the case.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

At the Spring term, 1850, of the Circuit Court, sitting in Gadsden County, Williams, who was plaintiff in a judgment and execution against Robert L. Harrison and others, obtained a rule against the appellant, to "show cause why he should not pay over to the plaintiff one thousand and fifty dollars collected from the defendants."

The appellant in his answer to the rule says: He does not know whether any execution ever came into his hands in the said case, but if it did come to his hands, it was destroyed by the fire which consumed the sheriff's office on the 12th November, 1849. That the sum named in the rule was made by a seizure and sale of Harrison's property on a fieri facias in favor of Richard H. Wilson, executor, against said Harrison, which was delivered to him on the 27th November, 1849, and that he had paid to the attorney of said Wilson $1,000, and after deducting his costs and expense in making said sale, he had in his hands the sum of $15 98.

Upon this answer, evidence was introduced showing that the execution of Williams against Harrison and others, which was of the date of the 11th May, 1844, had been delivered to the Marshal of the Middle District on the said May 11th, 1844, and had been transferred and delivered to B. C. West, late sheriff of the county of Gadsden, on the 1st of November, 1845, and was by the said West turned over to the appellant, together with a number of other writs, a day or two prior to the fire.

Williams places his claim to the sum of money on the ground that his execution was first delivered to the sheriff and had priority, and that the money should have been paid to him, notwithstanding it was made by a seizure and sale of Harrison's goods by virtue of the junior writ of fieri facias in favor of Wilson's executor.

Two questions are presented for the decision of the court upon the argument here:—First, as to the character and extent of the lien of an execution upon the goods of the debtor; and, secondly, whether the respondent, if he has sustained an injury, did in the court below pursue the proper remedy in the assertion of his claim?

1. As to the lien of the execution. At common law, the fieri facias had relation to its teste, and bound the defendant's goods from that time, which was always some day in the term in which the judgment was entered; but this relation proving inconvenient and mischievous in practice, the goods continuing liable in the hands of those who had purchased bona fide and for a valuable consideration from the defendant, between the teste of the writ and the day of its actual issue, the statute 29th Car. II, c. 3, § 16, was intended to correct the mischief. This statute, which is of force here in this particular, enacts that "no writ of fieri facias, or other writ of execution shall bind the property of the goods of the party against whom such writ of execution is sued forth, but from the time such writ shall be delivered to the sheriff," &c. See Tidd's Practice, 1,000.

"Neither before the statute nor since," sayse Mr. Tidd, is the property in the goods altered by the delivery of the writ to the sheriff, but it continues in the defendant till execution executed." And this, no doubt, upon the principle that a lien does not constitute, per se, a right of property in the thing itself, but a right to levy upon and sell it for satisfaction of the debt. In Lowthal v. Tompkins, 2 Equity Cases Abridged, 380, Lord Hardwicke explains what is meant by goods being bound from the delivery of the execution; that if defendant makes an assignment of his goods, unless in market overt, the sheriff may take them in execution, and this view is sustained in all the cases. We have no markets overt in this country, and therefore any sale or assignment of the defendant's personal property, after the delivery of the fieri facias to the sheriff, is ineffectual as to the lien of the writ. But the contest here is not between the purchaser of goods from the defendant and the plaintiff in the fieri facias, but it is between the plaintiff in one execution and the sheriff, in which the former claims that the money which the latter made on another writ shall be paid to him, because, as alleged, he holds the elder writ and his lien is prior in point of time. Is this position correct? Do the liens of different executions attach in the order of priority of the time of their respective delivery to the sheriff upon the property of the defendant in execution, or upon the proceeds of the sale of it in the sheriff's hands, so as to authorize a rule upon the sheriff to pay the money over as the money of the plaintiff in the first writ delivered?

It is true that all the authorities lay down the proposition that, as between different plaintiffs, if two writs of execution are delivered to the sheriff on the same or different days, he ought to execute that first which was first delivered, unless it be fraudulent or dormant; but if he executes, that is, levies and sells, by virtue of the writ last delivered, the property of the goods is bound by the sale, and the party cannot seize them by virtue of the writ first delivered. Tidd's Practice, 1000, and authorities cited in the margin. Bradley v. Wyndham, 1 Wilson's Reports, 44. Hunt v. Hooper, 12 Meeson & Welsby, 664. Thus, in Smallcombe v. Cross and the sheriff of London, 1 Lord Raymond, 252, the sheriff levied on the defendant's goods under the writ last delivered and sold them to Smallcombe. By the direction of the plaintiff in the elder writ he again levied on the same goods under that writ and sold them to Cross. The first purchaser, though under the junior writ, brought trover for the goods and recovered. The Court, per Holt, Chief Justice, resolved that the sheriff has not an election to execute that writ which he pleases, but should proceed upon the writ first delivered; yet that if he do otherwise and execute the writ last delivered first, the property of the goods is bound by the sale, and the party cannot seize them by virtue of his execution first delivered, but may have his remedy against the sheriff. The reason given is, "that sales made by the sheriff ought not to be defeated; for if they are, no man will buy goods levied upon a writ of execution." And in the subsequent case of Payne v. Drewe, 4 East's Reports, 523, 545, the case of Smallcombe v. Cross and other precedent cases were commented upon and approved; and Lord Ellenborough, in delivering the judgment of the court, lays down the rule thus: "that where there are several authorities equally competent to bind the goods of a party when "executed by the proper officer, that they shall be considered as effectually and for all purposes bound by the authority which first actually attaches upon them in point "of execution, and under which an execution shall have "been first executed."

Upon the authority of these cases it is clear that the lien of Williams' execution did not attach upon the property, so as to defeat the sale by the sheriff under the junior writ of Wilson's executor, for both authorities were equally competent to bind the personal property of the defendant, Harrison, and the latter having first attached in point of execution, the property is to be considered bound by it to the exclusion of all others. In Rankin v Scott, 6 Peter's Condensed Reports, 506, a distinction is well taken between the lien of a judgment on land and the lien of an execution upon personalty. In the first case the lien is by matter of record; in the other it is not, not even by the writ, except from the time of delivery to the sheriff. The purchaser of personalty cannot suppose that the officer has committed any impropriety in the performance of his duty, and even if he desired to examine into the propriety of his action, he has not the means of doing so; while, on the other hand, if land is offered for sale by the sheriff, the lien being by judgment, it is a matter of record, and the purchaser can, by examination of the records, satisfy himself whether there are any other and superior or prior liens upon the property. This case of Rankin v. Scott is cited approvingly by this court, in the case of Moseley v. Doe ex dem. Edwards, 2d Florida Reports, 438, 439.

Has the plaintiff in the writ first delivered, any lien on the money in the hands of the sheriff, made by the seizure and sale under the second writ? The case of Payne v. Drewe, before cited, as well as the cases of Rybot v. Peck-

137 ham, 1 Term Reports, 731, n., and of Rowe v. Tapp, 9 Price R. 317, are conclusive that he has not. The last case is directly upon the point. Two writs of fieri facias had been delivered to the sheriff at different times, at the suit of different plaintiffs, against the same defendants; being ruled to return the second writ, he returned that he had levied on certain goods and chattels of the defendant, which remained in his hands for want of buyers; the plaintiff then sued out a venditioni exponas, to which the sheriff returned that he had sold the goods and returned the proceeds of sale, to apply to the other writ of fieri facias, which had been first delivered him. The court, on motion, quashed the return, and made the order absolute upon the sheriff to pay over the money to the plaintiff in the second fieri facias.—The case of Saunders v. Bridges, 3d Barnewall & Alderson, 95, cited by the counsel for the respondent here, is not opposed to the case last cited. In Saunders v. Bridges, which was an action for a false return, the sheriff had levied the elder writ and made the money; subsequently the defendant obtained an order setting aside this writ, and directing the money to be returned to him; the sheriff paid over the money to the defendant, and returned nulla bona to the junior writ—the court held he should have retained it to satisfy the second writ; that as he did not ask the court for directions, nor give notice to the plaintiff in the second writ of the service of the rule upon him, he had paid the money in his own wrong, and made himself liable.

It would seem, from Hutchinson v. Johnson, 1st Term Reports, 729, that, if the sheriff having two writs in his hands, should levy under the second, he may afterwards sell under the first, and thus escape liability; but it is equally clear from all the authorities, that, if he levies and sells, by virtue of the writ last delivered, he must pay the money over to the plaintiff in that writ; and the plaintiff in the writ first delivered has his remedy only against the 138 sheriff, for the breach of duty in not executing first that writ which was first delivered to him.

2. As to the remedy pursued by the respondent in the court below. The rule nisi obtained on the 21st May, 1859, from its structure, is based on the act of February 17th, section 7, (Thompson's Digest, 358,) which gives a summary remedy by rule against the sheriff to pay over, with twenty per cent. damages, money which he has collected upon an execution, and has retained for the space of thirty days after its receipt; and the argument of respondent's counsel in this court is upon the superior right of the plaintiff in the elder writ, by virtue of his supposed prior lien upon the property levied on, or its proceeds when sold, to consider the money thus made by the sheriff as applicable to his execution. As we have seen, he has no such right; but if the sheriff has been guilty of a breach of duty in not levying his writ first, his remedy is against the sheriff; and can the courts proceed summarily by motion, or rule, to administer to his relief? We are not aware of any such authority, either by the common law, or by statute of this State, and none has been cited in the argument. The case of Willis ex. v. Shepard, 2d Florida Reports, 397, has been cited by the counsel for respondent; but although this court does there suggest a form of proceeding by rule in cases of this sort, yet the authority, we think, is against the present case. The court suggests that where there are adverse claimants to money in the sheriff's hands, "the proper course is for each claimant to take a rule against the sheriff; the allowance of one will be the refusal of the other; by an order of consolidation, all can be tried together, and in case of appeal by any, the stay of the others may be had, as directed, until final decision." Yet in that case, the rule which was entered, being by one execution creditor against the sheriff and the other execution creditors jointly, presented the same state of case as several rules by each of the execution creditors against the sheriff would do, after an order 139 of consolidation had passed. The parties all appeared before the court and litigated each other with their respective claims, and the court having decided upon the questions made, and ordered distribution of the funds, the dissatisfied party appealed to this court. The judgment was reversed, the court saying that there was "no such proceeding at common law, or by statute, as a rule between two individuals to try the right of money in the hands of a third person, the sheriff," and we think the judgment was right. In like manner, we are compelled to say that we are not aware of any such proceeding at common law, or by the statute of this State, which authorizes a summary proceeding by motion or rule against the sheriff for a false return, or for not levying an execution in his hands to be executed. A statute was passed in 1833, authorizing the plaintiff in execution, upon a return of nulla bona, to controvert the same, and make up an issue thereon, to be submitted to a jury in a summary manner, and authorizing a judgment to be entered on the verdict of the jury, (Duval's Digest, 9, § 8;) but this section of the act was repealed by the act of February 15, 1834, (Duval's Digest, 13, § 5.) The suggestion in Willis, executor, v. Shepard, as to the remedy by rules, probably, was not well considered, as the attention of the court was not drawn to the subject as a point necessary to the decision of the cause.

We are satisfied that the proper remedy, if the plaintiff in the elder fieri facias has been in fact injured by any malfeasance or nonfeasance of the sheriff, is that which was presented and urged in argument by the counsel for appellant. The plaintiff has a right to call upon the sheriff for a legal return upon the process at every term of the court, by section 8 of the act of March 15, 1844, (Thompson's Digest, 355.) If the return is false, as where the sheriff returns nulla bona when he might have made the money, or has given undue preference to a writ subsequently deliver- 140
ed, the plaintiff must resort to his action on the case, for a false return or for not levying the writ. Tidd's Practice, 1022. In such an action, the facts upon which the liability of the sheriff is claimed to be founded, as well as his defence, will, under the guidance and instruction of the court, be passed upon by a jury. This is his right, and he cannot be deprived of it, without his express consent.

The conclusion at which we have arrived, renders it unnecessary that we should consider the other points made and discussed in the argument at the bar.

The judgment of the court below is reversed with costs.

SEMMES, Justice, dissented:

I regret I am compelled, in this case, to differ in opinion from the court, but a sense of duty requires me to dissent from some of its views. The execution in favor of Williams, while in possession of the sheriff, it is true, was destroyed by fire; but this does not affect the question. The execution was still in full force, and its lien and priority were unimpaired. The lien acquired by this execution on the property of the defendant in fieri facias was, I admit, defeated by the sale; but its priority over the junior writ was still subsisting and unaffected as to their respective rights. The fact that the sale was made under the junior execution did not defeat or affect this priority over the proceeds of the sale, which stood in lieu of the property. No act of the sheriff could defeat it. It was the duty of that officer to look to the outstanding executions, to determine to whom the money belonged; and the time each execution came to his hands determines their respective priorities.

Had the sheriff retained in his hands, as it was his duty to have done, the proceeds of this sale, to be applied to the senior execution, it would, in my opinion, have been a sufficient answer to any rule or action against him by the 141 junior execution creditor—money must be paid on executions according to their priorities. 2 Watt's Reports, 303.

The sale in this instance was valid, and, consequently, the lien of Williams' execution was gone, because the law here interposes and protects the rights of an innocent purchaser. See 10 Watts' Reports, 212. And this is the only reason which can be assigned why the sale under a junior execution is valid. One of the great objects designed to be effected by the statute 29th Charles II, was to secure the possession of purchasers under execution. 1 Term Reports, 729.

The levy of the junior writ did not in any respect affect the priority of the senior, and the only effect of the sale was to divest the defendant in execution of the title, and vest it in the purchaser. If the elder execution creditor attempted to assert his previous lien on the property, it then became a question with him and the purchaser, and the law favors the latter—not by reason, however, of the junior writ having acquired any priority by virtue of the levy and sale; but, when the creditor claims the proceeds of sale, the question is then between him and the sheriff; or, if the junior creditor interposes, still the priority of the claim determines the then respective rights. Numerous authorities in England and in this country could be referred to which show that where several executions are levied on the same property, and it is sold under all, the proceeds of sale are always applied to the senior writ. If the doctrine be true, as is asserted, that the levy and sale of property under a junior execution, entitles it to the proceeds, then the principle in all these authorities is false, and the executions should be satisfied pro rata out of the fund raised by their joint levy and sale. But the principle in these cases is true, and is a necessary consequence from the statute giving priorities to executions—that no matter under what writ the sale is made, the proceeds of right belong to the senior execution. I do not understand the authorities referred to in 1 Term Re-142 ports, 729 and 4 East, 523, 545, as asserting any other principle than that the sale is valid, though under the junior writ; a doctrine which no one questions.

But the American authorities, so far as I have had time to examine them, decide on principle "that it is wholly immaterial upon whose execution the sale was made; the execution first in the hands of the officer is entitled to the proceeds of the sale." 6 New Hampshire Reports, 73 and the numerous authorities referred to. 3 Watts & Sergeant, 438. 2 Hawks' Reports, 309. Also, 5 Cowen's Reports, 396. In the last authority, it is true, the levy was under the first execution, but this did not give it any greater preference than the law had previously given it, and the court decided that the proceeds of sale of right belonged to the senior writ though made under the junior.

If, then, it be true that the execution which first comes into the hands of the sheriff has a priority to the proceeds of sale, why compel the execution creditor to resort to his action against the sheriff to recover that which is in the hands of the latter, and which he has no right to control? The principle is not altered by his having paid it out; for whether a fictitious or a real payment, he did it voluntarily, after notice by the attorney of Williams, and, consequently, with a full knowledge of his liabilities. The money raised on execution is always considered in the custody of the law, and the sheriff, being the ministerial officer of the court, should, under its order and direction, make the proper application of it. Why allow this officer a discretion in this matter which the law does not warrant but in every instance condemns? I fully accord with the court in the case reported in 1st Strobbart's Reports, 24, that it belongs to the court to advise and command its own officers—to dispose of the funds collected under its process—to decide the conflict of suitors as to such funds, and that in the exercise of these functions its power is complete. Where a case ari-

ful who is entitled to the money, the court may, in its discretion, forbear a summary order, and leave the claimants to litigate their rights by suit.

In this case, it is no answer to say, that the sheriff is liable by suit to the injured creditor. So he is, where he refuses to make a return; and it cannot be doubted but that it is competent to the court to compel him by attachment to do his duty in this respect. Without this summary remedy in the court, its officer is placed above and beyond its control, and execution creditors can only recover their money at his option and pleasure. If it is conceded that the court has the power to order a return of executions, the principle itself is conceded, and the court can direct the application of the money.

In this case, no action for a false return could be maintained; the return of the sheriff, as far as it went, was true; it was not controverted. Williams may have a right of action against the sheriff for neglect of duty, but I cannot see the propriety of compelling him to resort to an action at law against the sheriff and his securities, when, in my opinion, he has, through the aid of the court, an efficient and summary remedy. I am not aware of any principle of law which denies to an execution creditor the remedy allowed in this case by the court below. The power is incident to every court, and its exercise is highly salutary, and prevents tedious and protracted litigation. The practice which has prevailed in the courts of the State, I believe to be sound in principle, and its obvious utility no one doubts. A contrary practice will, I fear, make an execution, which is the end, but the beginning of a law suit.

Luke Lott, Plaintiff in Error, v. Banks Meacham, Exe- 144
cutor of Jonathan Thomas, Defendant in Error.

An estate in remainder may be limited after a life estate in personal property by will and effect should be given the intention whenever it is manifest that such estate was designed to be created.

The legal estate in a chattel bequeathed by will remains in the executor until he assents to the legacy; and when there is an estate in remainder created by the will, the assent to the estate for life will enure to the benefit of the remainder-man.

T. bequeathed the whole of his personal estate to his wife for life, and directed that at her death the whole of his property, real and personal, should be sold and equally divided between his six children—Held, that it was clearly the intention of the testator that his children should not take the property in specie, but that the title to the property, on the expiration of the life estate, vested in the executor, as remainder-man, in trust, to be sold by him for the benefit of the children; and the exercise of the power of sale in such a case, unless otherwise directed, belongs to the executor exclusively, virtute officii.

When there is a trust reposed in an executor, and a power of sale coupled with it in order to execute the trust, is not competent to the Court of Probate to discharge the executor until it appear that he has performed the duty.

Banks Meacham, executor of Jonathan Thomas, brought an action of replevin against the plaintiff in error, in the Circuit Court of Gadsden County, for the recovery of certain slaves, alleged to be the property of the plaintiff as executor.

The defendant pleaded not guilty—ne unques executor, and that the goods and chattels in the declaration mentioned were the property of him, the said defendant, and not of the plaintiff.

At the trial of the cause in the circuit court, before the Hon. Thomas Baltzell, Judge of the Middle Circuit, at the Spring term, 1848, the plaintiff, to prove and maintain the issue joined, offered in evidence a certified copy of the will Lott vs. Meacham, Executor.—Statement of Case.

145 of Jonathan Thomas, and the following clause, relating to the property in dispute, was read to the jury, viz:

"Item. I lend to my beloved wife, Mary Thomas, for her own use, support and maintenance during her widowhood, the following property, viz: the tract of land whereon I now live, eight negroes, Old Will, Chloe, Tom, Mary, James, Patsey, Ben and Rachael, together with one horse, four mules, all the balance of my stock of cattle, hogs, goods, &c., with all my household and kitchen furniture and farming utensils of every article and kind; to have and to hold all and singular the above mentioned property, for and during her single state, or widowhood, and no longer. And in the event of her marrying, I will and order that my executors take charge of the above mentioned property, so as to handsomely support and maintain her, my beloved wife, for and during the whole remaining part of her life; and at her death, I further will and order that the whole of the above property be sold, and equally divided between my six children here below named, viz: Elizabeth McCall, John F. O. Thomas, Micajah Thomas, Joseph Thomas, Ann Mariah Thomas and Susan C. Thomas, their heirs or assigns forever."

The said plaintiff further proved that he was named executor in said will, and that, on the 13th February, 1832, he made probate thereof in the County Court, and letters testamentary thereon were issued to him in due form of law. He also proved that he, as executor, delivered the possession of the property in said devise and bequest specified, to Mary Thomas, the devisee and legatee of the life estate given therein, which was by her held to the period of her death; that said Mary did not intermarry after the death of the said testator, and that, after the death of the said Mary Thomas, the said property was taken possession of by the persons named in said will to take the proceeds of the same after her death, and that, by amicable agree-146 ment among themselves, they distributed and divided the said property. He also proved that the property taken from the defendant by the writ of replevin here, was of the said property, so delivered by the said plaintiff to the said Mary Thomas, under said will.

The plaintiff then introduced and read in evidence an order and decree of the County Court of Gadsden county, made July 16th, 1836, discharging him, the said plaintiff, from the executorship, according to the statute in such case made and provided, "excepting that in regard to the property bequeathed to Mary Thomas, and which, upon her marriage, is to be taken charge of by said executor, and upon her death, to be sold by him and divided," as provided in the will, he was, by said order and decree of the County Court, required fully to execute and perform said duty, on the occurrence of either of said events.

On the part of the defendant, it was proved that he had, before the institution of the suit, intermarried with Ann Mariah Thomas, one of the persons named in said clause of said will, and that he was in possession of the slaves in dispute, with the consent and concurrence of all the persons so named. This being all the testimony offered, and the case closed as to the evidence, the following instruction was given by the court to the jury, towit:

The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff, as the executor of Jonathan Thomas, on the death of the widow, is entitled to the possession of the property devised to her, to administer the same, according to law, and the directions of the will—the court stating at the same time, that, unless there were debts of the estate to pay, or some cause of interference by the executor, it was not disposed to allow an amicable division made by the heirs to be disturbed.

And the defendant prayed the court to instruct the jury as follows, viz:

1. That the devise and bequest in the will of Jonathan Thomas of the property in dispute, created an estate in re- 147 mainder in the persons appointed to take, after the death of Mrs. Mary Thomas, the tenant for life, and that this estate in remainder was created at the same time with the creation of the particular, or life estate.

2. That the assent of the executor to the bequest, by the delivery of the property in dispute to Mary Thomas, the tenant of the particular estate, is an assent to the remainder granted to the persons named to take in remainder, and having so assented, he cannot now retract that assent.

3. That the property in dispute, being in the possession of the defendant, as one of the persons entitled to take in remainder, in virtue of his material rights, he was entitled to that possession, as against the plaintiff in this action.

4. That the plaintiff having by his own showing, been fully discharged by the County Court of Gadsden county, from all the duties of such executor, on the 16th July, 1836, cannot now maintain this action;

Which said instructions, so prayed by the defendant, the said Judge refused to give to the jury, and the jury found for the plaintiff.

And the said defendant by his counsel, to the instructions so given by the said judge to the jury, and to the refusal of the court to instruct the jury as prayed, excepted.

The plaintiff in error, by his counsel, assigned the following errors, viz:

First. The court erred in the instructions given to the jury.

Second. The court erred in the refusal to instruct the jury, as prayed by plaintiff in error.

Hon. GEORGE S. HAWKINS, Judge of the Western Circuit, sat in the place of Justice THOMPSON, who had been of counsel in the court below.

Dupont & Maxwell, for Plaintiff in Error.

Davis, for Defendant in Error.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court: 148

This was an action in replevin, brought in the court below by respondent, executor of Jonathan Thomas deceased, against appellant, for the recovery of certain negro slaves.

The appellant claims the property in right of his wife, formerly Anna Mariah Thomas, one of the legatees under the will of the testator, bearing date the 16th of April, 1830.

The respective rights of the parties to this suit depend upon the construction to be given that portion of the will which bequeaths the property in controversy, with other slaves, to the widow during her life, and the proceeds of it, after her death, to the children of the testator.

It is contended by counsel for appellant: 1. That the devise and bequest, in the will, of the property in dispute, created an estate in remainder in the persons appointed to take after the death of the widow, the tenant for life; and that this estate in remainder was created at the same time with the creation of the life estate. 2. That the assent of the executor to the bequest, by the delivery of the property in dispute to Mary Thomas, the tenant for life, is an assent to the remainder granted to the persons named to take in remainder, and having so assented, he cannot now retract that assent. 3. That the property in dispute being in possession of the defendant, as one of the persons entitled to take in remainder in virtue of his marital rights, he was entitled to that possession as against the plaintiff in this action. And 4. That the plaintiff, having been fully discharged by the County Court of Gadsden county from all the duties of such executor, on the 16th of July, 1836, cannot now maintain this action.

Whatever may have been the rule at common law, the principle is now well settled that an estate in remainder may be limited after a life estate in personal property, and the courts will sustain and give effect to the intention, whenever it is manifest from the will that such estate was

149 designed to be created. 6 Peters' Reports, 68. 13 Pickering's Reports, 330.

It cannot be doubted that, if the will of Jonathan Thomas created an estate in remainder in his children to the property in dispute, to take effect on the death of Mary Thomas, the tenant for life, the plaintiff in replevin, not having the right of possession, could not recover under the proofs in this case. The whole merit in the controversy is embraced in this point, and to its consideration the attention of the court has been mainly directed.

That an estate in remainder was created under the will, to take effect on the termination of the life estate and for the benefit of the children of the testator, cannot be questioned. But in whom did this estate in remainder vest?—Was it the children, directly, or the executor in trust for these beneficiaries?

On the death of the testator, the title to his whole personal estate vested under the will, in autre droit, in the executor; and this interest can only be divested by the act of the executor, or by operation of law.

The tenant for life, although having an inchoate right to this property under the devise in her favor, could not take possession of it and thereby acquire the title, without the assent of the executor; and so well settled is this principle that the legal estate in a chattel bequeathed by will remains in the executor until he assents to the legacy, that, before such assent, he may maintain trover or detinue for the recovery of the property from the possession of even the legatee; though the latter acquired that possession under the sanction and direction of the will itself. And this right and control in the executor, over the entire personal estate of his testator is for his protection, and results from his liability to creditors. 2 Williams on Executions. The assent to a legacy being once given, being evidence of assets in the hands of the executor, cannot as a general proposition, 150 be retracted. The specific legatee acquires the right of possession to the legacy, subject to such restrictions and conditions as are imposed by the will; and it is equally true, as is contended, that, whenever an estate in remainder is created under a will, the assent on the part of the executor to the estate for life will inure to the benefit of the remainder-man. The title vests in the latter immediately on the termination of the first estate, and he may maintain trover and recover, even against the executor. 5 Term Reports, 374. 6 Iredells Reports, 88. 3 East, 120.

In this case the executor of Thomas, having delivered the property into the possession of the life tenant, the assent on his part was express, and she thereby became vested with the title to the life estate. Had the bequest been limited to the words, "I lend to my wife for her use," &c., there would have been force in the argument of counsel for respondent, that the use and enjoyment of the property by the tenant for life did not divest the executor of the title, but that it remained in him, as trustee. But the direction of the will that she should "have all and singular the said property for and during her single state," is a sufficient indication that it was the intention of the testator that the title to the property should pass and remain in his wife during her widowhood. Had she afterwards married, (an event contemplated in the will,) she was to be divested of the possession and that, with the right of possession, was to revert back to the executor. But whether this even happened or not, it could not affect the estate in remainder after the termination of the life interest. The words of the will are, that, on the death of the widow, "I further will and order that the "whole of said property be sold and equally divided between "my children," &c. The import of these words is too plain to be misunderstood; and it is manifest that it was not designed by the testator that his children should take the property in specie, but the proceeds of it when sold. This is not only a legitimate, but the only sensible and consistent in- 151 terpretation which can be given the words of this will; and it follows that, by the terms of this bequest, the title to this property, on the expiration of the life estate, vested in the executor, he being the remainder man—holding the property, it is true, in trust, to be sold by him for the benefit of his children. But it is said this power of sale is not vested in the executor or any one by name. The power is an incident to the office of executor, and its exercise, unless otherwise directed, belongs exclusively to him, virtue officii.

If a testator directs any part of his estate to be sold, without making a trustee of the power, it naturally and by implication devolves on the executor. See 2d Johnson's Chancery Reports, 20, 254. 3rd Atkinson, 714. This power of sale would, of necessity, imply that the title to the property was in the executor—the title is indispensable to the exercise of the power. But under the will, it is not a mere naked power to sell which is vested in the executor, but a power coupled with a trust. The legatees have a title, at least in equity, to the proceeds of the sale when realized, though no title in law to the specific property. The power to sell reposes a personal trust, which cannot be delegated.

Where the terms of a will create a trust in personal property, and no one is appointed to execute it, the executor becomes the trustee. 2d Story's Equity, § 976. 13 Pickering's Reports, 330.

In this case, the executor is bound to carry out the trust by a sale of the property and a distribution, as directed by the will. Any material deviation will render the exercise of his power void. Where the power and the trust are blended as here, and the latter can only be executed by an exercise of the former, the power is imperative, and equity will compel a sale, and an execution of the trust. See 1st W. Black., 162.

The entire argument of counsel for appellant is based upon an assumed state of facts, (and which are contradicted 152 by the terms of this bequest,) that the children were to take the specific property embraced in the devise to the life tenant. If this were true, there could be no question but that they would take the estate in remainder, and that the title to it would vest in them immediately on the death of the widow; and his absolute property in the specific chattel would negative all idea of a trust being created or contemplated by the testator. But here the children were not to take the property, nor was it to be divided, as in the authorities referred to by counsel, but it was directed to be sold, and the proceeds divided among them.

In the event that the widow had married, the property would have passed to the executor, and been held by him in trust. Would his right to the possession have terminated on her death? or could these legatees have recovered that possession by an action at law, or suit in chancery? Manifestly not. If the life tenant had disposed of her estate, and delivered possession of the property to the purchaser, the right of action, on the termination of the life estate for the recovery of the property, would have been in the executor, and not in the legatees.

But it is said the object and purpose of the testator has been as effectually accomplished by the legatees dividing this property, as could be done by a sale by the executor, and a distribution of the proceeds. This may be true, but it does not invest this court with the power of giving a different direction to the property from that the testator designed.

The great rule in the exposition of wills is, that the intention of the testator, as expressed in his will, shall prevail. 1st Blackstone's Reports, 672. And if he has directed a particular mode as to the disposition of his property, and it can be accomplished without violating any legal principle, it is not the province of the courts to make a 153 new will for the testator, but to carry out the one he has made for himself.

It is contended by counsel for appellant, that the respondent was discharged from his office of executor, and that he cannot, therefore, maintain this suit. Had the order of the Court of Probate referred to, been designed to operate as a final discharge, it could not have the effect intended. It is not competent for the Probate Court to discharge an executor on his application, unless he has fully administered, or in the words of the statute, unless it appear he has faithfully discharged the trust reposed in him. Thompson, 211. It is not pretended that the administration of this estate was completed; but, on the contrary, independent of the subject-matter of this suit, the order of the Court of Probate itself affords conclusive evidence that the executor had not fully discharged the trust confided to him under the will. But the order was not designed as a final discharge—the sale of this property, and a distribution of it under the will, were expressly excepted, and the executor was required to perform these duties, and make his return according to law. If the proceedings before the Court of Probate, on the 16th of July, 1836, are to be regarded in the light of an annual or partial settlement on the part of the executor, they, doubtless, for that purpose, would be valid; but if they are to operate as a partial discharge in the strict sense of that term, the order itself is a nullity.

It is further insisted by appellant's counsel, that, if the respondent is considered in the character of trustees, as to the sale and distribution of this property, he cannot recover in this suit as executor. The court cannot appreciate the force of this argument. It was not necessary that the respondent should have used his title as executor in the suit for the recovery of this property—it was a mere descriptio personae; the legal title being in him, he could have recovered in his own right. 5th Cowper's Reports, 265. Inde-

154 pendent of this, although it is manifest that a trust is created as to this property, yet, in the opinion of the court, the character of executor is not merged in that of trustee. As executor, the respondent holds the property in trust for the purposes contemplated in the will, and as such he is liable to the legatees.

In a case reported in 9th Pickering, 395, where a testator directed his executor to invest the residue of his personal estate in public funds, and apply the income thereof to the support, maintenance and education of his children during their minority, &c., it was held that, though a trust was created, it was incumbent on him as executor to discharge these duties, and failing to do so, he was liable on his administration bond. See, also, 4th Massachusetts Reports, 634. 6th Massachusetts Reports, 37. 3d Maddock's Reports, 73.

The court, in the discharge of its duty, is compelled to sustain the judgment of the court below; but, in view of the amicable division of this property by the legatees, it does not hesitate to say, that, upon a proper application to a Court of Chancery, full and adequate relief can be obtained.

Let the judgment below be affirmed.

[Judge HAWKINS dissented from the judgment of the Court, on the ground that defendant in error was, under the will, a trustee, and could not maintain the action, as executor.]

MOSES E. LEVY AND OTHERS, APPELLANTS, v. JOEL B. SMITH, TAX ASSESSOR AND COLLECTOR.

The act of 1845, which provides that all land in this State subject to taxation, shall be classed into three classes or grades, exempts only land belonging to the United States, to public schools, and charitable and religious institutions.

Every description and quality of land in the state subject to taxation must, necessarily, fall within some one of the grades established by law, and it is for the owner to discriminate and assign his land to the class to which, according to its quality, it belongs.

The classification made by the Legislature of land subject to taxation, does not 155
contravene that article of the Constitution (Article 8, Section 1,) which requires "the General Assembly to devise and adopt a system of revenue, having regard to an equal and uniform mode of taxation, to be general throughout the State."

This case was brought up by an appeal from a decree of the Hon. THOMAS DOUGLAS, Judge of the Eastern Circuit. A similar decree was made by the Judge in the court below, in the cases of Benjamin A. Putnam and Henry G. Marquand against Joel B. Smith, tax assessor, from which, also, appeals were taken by the complainants, and questions involving the same principles brought up for the decision of this court. The facts presented by the records in these cases, and the nature of the decree appealed from, are sufficiently stated in the opinion pronounced by the court, affirming the decree of the Judge of the Circuit Court.

Fairbanks & Forward, for Appellants.

Hogue, A. G., for Appellee.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The principal facts presented by the record in this case are these: In the year 1848, the tax assessor for the county of Alachua assessed for that year the State tax on certain lands belonging to appellants, known as the Arredondo grant; and on the appellants refusing to pay this assessment, the tax collector advertised the lands for sale. On the third of May, 1849, the appellants filed their bill in chancery against the respondent, praying for an injunction, and alleging, among other things, that a large portion of said lands was not embraced within either of the classes designated by the revenue laws of the State, and consequently was not subject to taxation under their provisions.

According to the proofs, it appears that the said grant contains two hundred and sixty-two thousand six hundred and forty-six acres; that thirty-four thousand acres of this 156 tract is permanently covered with water, and that about one hundred thousand acres, over and above that covered with water, is unfit for agricultural purposes. The court below sustained the bill, so far as to decree that the thirty-four thousand acres were not subject to taxation, but dismissed it as to all other matters; and from the decree, this appeal is taken.

The counsel for appellants contend—first, that the lands contained in this grant are exempt from taxation under the revenue laws of the State; and, secondly, that these revenue laws are unconstitutional.

The court has had no difficulty in considering these points, and it feels no hesitancy in saying that neither can be sustained.

The second section of the revenue law passed in 1845, and which is now in force, provides that "all the land in this State subject to taxation, shall be classed into three classes, or grades, viz: first, second and third rates," and upon lands falling within each of these grades, there is assessed a specific tax. Thompson, 87. By section fifth, (Ibid, 91,) it is made the duty of the owners of land to return to the assessors a particular description of the situation and quality of the same, and to which class it belongs.

It is said the provision of the act implies that there are lands in the State which are not subject to taxation, and that it is to be inferred that the Legislature designed to exempt pine and other lands unfit for agricultural purposes; otherwise, they would be put on the same equality with arable lands. The answer to this is obvious. The lands referred to in the statute, as being exempt from taxation, are those belonging to the United States, to public schools, and charitable and religious institutions. Thompson, 87. In order to establish an uniform system of taxation, the Legislature has seen proper to divide all other and quality of land must, of necessity, be embraced in one or the other of these grades.

It is not true that the effect of this revenue law is to place good arable lands on an equality with pine and other lands of inferior quality. They belong to different classes—there is a difference in the tax imposed, and the law has authorized the owners to discriminate, and assign to the proper class the respective qualities. It is in proof that these appellants exercised this power, and returned to the respondent the respective portions of the lands contained in this grant, as first, second and third qualities; and we do not understand why this classification, made by themselves of their own lands, should now be complained of as unjust or oppressive. It would be a most arbitrary construction of the revenue law to exclude from its provisions any land liable taxation, however, poor or inferior its quality. Such an interpretation would be against the manifest intention of the Legislature, and defeat the obvious end and purpose of the statute.

But it is said the constitution of the State authorizes the "General Assembly to adopt a system of revenue, having regard to an equal and uniform mode of taxation, to be general throughout the State;" and that the system adopted by the Legislature is not equal and uniform, for the reason that some lands embraced within the third class are of inferior quality to others. This may be true, and the same may be said of lands embraced within the other classes; but this is no reason for believing that the system is not one of equal and uniform character throughout the State. Some slight inequality in the value of lands included in the same class doubtless does exist; but it is not confined to one section, but prevails throughout the whole State; so that lands belonging to one person, and coming within any of the three classifications are subject to the same specific tax as all
it is in just proportions; it is uniform, because it conforms to the same rule. It is a specific, and not an ad valorem tax; and if it is not the most equitable and just, it is for the Legislature and not the courts to correct the evil. The system may not be free from defects. It is not the best and only mode by which equality in taxation can be secured still it cannot be expected that the Legislature could devise any mode whereby taxation could be so apportioned in every particular, as to operate with precise uniformity upon every individual.

The court is, therefore, of opinion that the revenue law of 1845, classing all lands in this State subject to taxation into three grades, and imposing a specific tax upon the same, is equal and uniform throughout the State, and that the law is constitutional.

Let the decree of the court below be affirmed.

JOSEPH DAWKINS, APPELLANT, v. LUKE W. SMITHWICK, APPELLEE.

In assumpsit upon a parol contract, the day upon which it is made being alleged only for form, the plaintiff is at liberty to prove that the contract, whether express or implied, was made at any other time.

When time enters into the contract and becomes material, it is traversable, and the plaintiff must prove it; and when time is material, it makes no difference that it is alleged under a videlicet.

When the time laid in the declaration was the Sabbath, the court will take judicial cognizance of the fact; yet, if the time is immaterial and laid under a videlicet, the court cannot judicially know that the contract declared on was actually made on that day.

In such case the defendant, having failed to plead the fact and thus make the time material, cannot move in arrest of judgment.

Luke W. Smithwick brought an action on the case, in 159
the Circuit Court for the county of Leon, against Joseph Dawkins, to recover damages for deceit practiced by defendant in an exchange of horses—the horse of defendant being represented to be sound when, in fact, he was diseased at the time, and continued so to be, so that he was of no value to plaintiff. The exchange was alleged to have taken place on the first day of July, 1849.

Plea not guilty, and verdict for the plaintiff at the Spring term, 1850.

The defendant then moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that the contract mentioned in the declaration was made on Sunday. The motion was overruled, and from the judgment of the court thereon this appeal was brought.

Maxwell, for Appellant.

1. Whenever there is any defect appearing upon the face of the record, for which a writ of error would lie, and which has not been attacked by demurrer, the court, upon motion, will arrest the judgment. If the declaration presents a case which would not entitle plaintiff to judgment, and the defendant fails to demur, advantage can be taken of the defect by motion in arrest. 2d Archbold, 247.

2. The court will take judicial notice of the days of the week, so that having any date given, it will look to the Almanac, which is the law of the land, to see the day of the week, and will apply any law that may arise accordingly. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 249, 218. See, also, Hoyle v. Cornwallis, 1st Strange, 387-9, which is precisely in point with this case on this question. Upon the principle there established, if the record only states the day of the month, and that day is found by reference to the Almanac to be Sunday, this is sufficient to authorize a court to consider the fact that the day was Sunday an intrinsic part of the record. In the present case, the plaintiff bases his right to recover upon a contract stated by the declaration itself to have been made 160 on a day of the month which the Almanac shows was Sunday. The fact, therefore, under the authorities cited, is sufficiently apparent upon the record.

But it was contended below that the time being stated under a videlicet, the plaintiff, under the rules of pleading, cannot be held to it strictly, but may prove any other time, and, therefore, the defendant could not avail himself of his objection by motion in arrest, but should have pleaded it. The rule of pleading does not apply where time is material, or of the essence of the contract, for then the "real day must be truly stated." 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 287. 3rd Durnford & East, 531. 2d Cowper, 671. These authorities show that where an usurious contract is declared upon the day must be truly stated, and if proof of any other day is made, the variance is fatal. So here, if the law is, that such a contract is void by reason of the day on which it was made, the day forms the gist of the matter, and must be correctly stated. If the plaintiff had alleged a different day, then the defendant, to avail himself of his defence, might have pleaded the fact that the contract was made on Sunday, or else he might have proved that fact, and then urged the variance as fatal, because of the materiality of that day to the rights of the parties.

The court not having given any opinion upon the other question presented by the counsel, viz: whether the contract, having been made on Sunday, is in violation of the statute of this State, and, therefore, void, it is not necessary to state the argument on that point.

The error assigned by appellant is that the court refused to arrest the judgment.

The court could not arrest the judgment, unless for some error patent in the record. Appellant points out as error

Dawkins vs. Smithwick.—Opinion of Court.

161 in the record the allegation in the declaration that "the said plaintiff heretofore, to wit, on the first day of July, in the year 1849," &c., exchanged horses, &c. Appellant says that the court will judicially take notice that the first day of July, 1849, was Sunday. We admit the court will take notice that the first of July, 1849, was Sunday, but deny that the court will take notice that the contract stated in the declaration was made on the day laid therein, it being laid under a videlicet. Plaintiff is not concluded by that averment, but might have proved that the trade was made on another day. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 318.

If defendant intended to rely upon the supposed fact that the contract was made on Sunday, he should have pleaded it specially. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 517, note h.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

This was an action on the case commenced by the respondent against appellant, in Leon Circuit Court, on a contract of warranty, in the exchange of horses. To the declaration, the appellant filed his plea of the general issue, and at the March term of said court, 1850, a verdict was found for respondent, assessing his damages at seventy-five dollars. Afterwards, at the same term, on the 3d of April, the attorney for appellant moved the court in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the declafation seeks to recover on a contract which is void, by reason of having been made on the Sabbath. This motion was overruled by the court below, and from its decision, this appeal is taken.

The rule of law, as laid down by appellant's counsel, in regard to motions in arrest of judgment, is fully recognized by this court—that, whenever there is any defect appearing upon the face of the record, for which a writ of error would lie, and which has not been attacked by demurrer, the court, upon motion, will arrest the judgment. 2d Archbold, 247.

162 If the contract declared on in this case was void under the statute, by reason of its having been made on the Sabbath, it is very evident the plaintiff in the court below was not entitled to a judgment, if the fact was properly presented by the pleadings.

An important preliminary question is presented for the consideration of this court, and which arises from the pleadings in the case. It is, whether the appellant, having failed to set up by special plea the defence relied on in his motion in arrest of judgment, is not concluded by the verdict of the jury? But it is insisted by counsel for appellant, that, by reason of matters intrinsic appearing on the face of the declaration, he was not driven to his special plea, but that his defence was available, either by general demurrer, or by motion in arrest of judgment. It is true that, if the declaration presents a case which would not entitle the plaintiff to judgment, by reason of substantial error appearing on its face, the motion in arrest should have been sustained.

That portion of the declaration which is important to the decision of the case is in the following words: "Luke W. Smithwick, plaintiff, by attorney, complains, &c., for that whereas the said plaintiff, heretofore, to wit, on the first day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, at Leon County," &c.

It is said that the first day of July, as laid in the declaration, was the Sabbath, and that the court will take judicial cognizance of the fact. This is true. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 217. 1st Strange's Reports, 388. It does not, however, relieve the question from the difficulty but involves another and an important inquiry, whether the time stated in the declaration was material to the issue? If so, it was competent for the defendant to move in arrest of judgment; but if, on the contrary, the time was immaterial, the only mode of making the defence available was by special plea.

The time stated in the declaration is laid under a videlicet, but this cannot affect the question; for if the time be 163 material, it can be traversed, notwithstanding the scilicet. The general rule, as laid down by Sir William Blackstone, is doubtless the correct one. He says, the true distinction is, where the time when a fact happened is immaterial, and it may have happened on another day, if alleged under a videlicet, it is not traversable; but when the precise time is the very point and gist of the action, then the time alleged under the videlicet is conclusive and traversable. 1st Blackstone's Reports, 495. 4th Johnson's Reports, 456, and see 2d Saunders, 291.

In personal actions, the pleadings must allege the time, including the day, month and year, when each traversable fact occurred. See Stephens' Pleadings. And although it be true, that the time at which each material fact stated in the declaration took place, must be alleged, yet, as a general rule, the plaintiff is not bound to prove the time as stated, nor is it essential that the time as stated accord with the truth. Archbold's Pleadings, 115.

The same rule of law which governs the venue, applies, also to the stating of time—it extends to traversable facts only. In the case of the venue in transitory matters, the place is not material to the issue, and one may be alleged, and another proved. See Stephens' Pleadings.

In illustration of the foregoing general principles, it has been held, that in assumpsit upon a contract, the day upon which it is made being alleged only for form, the plaintiff is at liberty to prove that the contract, (parol,) whether it be express or implied, was made at any other time. 2d Strange's Reports, 806. 2d Salkeld, 561; and it is no objection that the day of the promise, as laid under a videlicet, brings it within the statutes of limitations. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 257.

The statement, therefore, of the real and precise time is not necessary, or if stated, the party is not concluded by it, unless it constitutes a material part of the contract declared 164 upon, or unless a written instrument is professed to be described. 4th Term Reports, 590.

In all actions on promissory notes, bills of exchange, &c., the date, being a material part of the contract, must be stated, so as to conform to the contract itself—the slightest variance will be fatal. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 115. But the day laid in a declaration on a parol contract is not material upon evidence. Ibid, note 66. In the case of an usurious contract, where time is the very gist of the matter, the real day must be stated and proved; (Stephens' Pleadings; and so it may be said in every case where the precise date of any fact is necessary to ascertain and determine with precision the cause of action.

In the case before the court, time did not enter into the contract—it was no part of it. The plaintiff in the court below was not concluded by the time stated in the declaration—it was competent for him to have proved the contract to have been made on any other day than that alleged.

If the time did enter into the contract and, consequently, was material, then it was traversable by the defendant; but in this case, the time could not be traversed, because the plaintiff was not bound to prove it as laid.

The case relied on by appellant's counsel, in 1st Strange's Reports, 388, is not inconsistent with the opinion of this court. In that case, the question before the court arose upon a writ of inquiry, which appeared to have been executed on the 15th day of June, which was Sunday—the court determined that it would take notice of the day, without its being specially assigned for error, and that the execution of the writ being on Sunday was void by statute. 29th Car., 2, 5, 7. But in that case, the time was material—it was not controverted, it could not be controverted—it was a part of the record, and a material part in the execution of the writ—the court was bound by it, and could not,

165 in its judgment, look beyond it. The only principle determined was, that the court would take judicial cognizance that the day on which the writ was in fact executed was Sunday. In this case, the first day of July, it is conceded, was the Sabbath; yet this court cannot judicially know that the contract declared on was made on that day, though averred in the declaration, for the time as laid, may be altogether different from the time as proved.

The court is, therefore, of opinion that the judgment of the Circuit Court, overruling the motion in arrest of judgment, was correct.

Ex parte Robert W. White. On Petition for a Mandamus.

The 2d section of the 5th article of the Constitution of Florida provides that "the Supreme Court, except in cases otherwise directed in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co-extensive with the State, under such restrictions and regulations, not repugnant to the Constitution, as may, from time to time, be prescribed by law; provided, that the said court shall always have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other remedial and original writs as may be necessary to give it a general superintendence of all other courts:"—Held, that the jurisdiction of this court is two-fold—first, appellate jurisdiction proper, and, secondly, a general superintendence and control of all other courts, and this by means of all appropriate, original and remedial writs known to the common law. No original proceeding can be instituted in this court, unless it be to exercise this power of superintendence or control over some other court. The exception in the first clause of the section points to the power contained in the proviso, and this power the court would not have had from the mere grant of "appellate jurisdiction only."

The term, "other remedial and original writs," means writs ejusdem generis, such as writs of procedendo, prohibition, &c.

166 On the 6th day of January, 1851, Robert W. White filed in the office of the Clerk of the Supreme Court the following petition:

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the State of Florida:

The petition of Robert W. White, of Jefferson County, in this State, respectfully showeth unto your Honors, that, on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1850, he purchased of David S. Walker, Register of Public Lands for the State of Florida, the west half of the southeast quarter of section sixteen, township one, range three, south and east, at the rate of five dollars per acre, amounting to four hundred 80-100 dollars, and that your petitioner paid one-fourth of the purchase money, and interest on the balance, and gave his bonds for the said balance, as required by the laws of this State. That at the same time, your petitioner entered into a written agreement with said Walker, as Register as afore said, by which it was "understood that, notwithstanding said sale, said land was to be offered at public sale, and if it should sell for five dollars per acre, then said White was to take it that price. If it should sell for over five, he was to take it or not as he liked; but if it should sell for over two dollars and fifty cents per acre, and under five dollars, he was to take it at that price"—a copy of which, your petitioner annexes hereto. Your petitioner further shows that, at the same time, it was understood by and between your petitioner and said Walker, but not in writing, that your petitioner could, at any time before said sale, perfect his purchase, by agreeing to take the land at the price of five dollars per acre, and thus rescind the understanding or agreement in writing above referred to. That afterwards, and on the 19th day of December, 1850, your petitioner wrote to said Walker, as Register, as aforesaid, a letter, in which your petitioner stated that he had concluded "to take the land at five dollars per acre, instead of waiting for it to be sold under the last appraisement"—which last appraisement fixed the value of said land at two dollars and 167 fifty cents per acre. That your petitioner subsequently tendered the balance of the money for said land to said Walker, Register as aforesaid, and demanded a deed from said Walker for the same; but the said Walker refused either to accept the amount tendered, or make a deed to your petitioner, for reasons based on said written agreement, in conjunction with other matters, which your petitioner insists had no connection with this purchase, and should not operate against your petitioner in the premises. Your petitioner, therefore, prays that a rule on the said David S. Walker, Register as aforesaid, to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued by this honorable court, commanding the said Walker, Register as aforesaid, to convey by deed the said land to your petitioner, upon the payment of the balance of the purchase money due, may be granted, and that, finally, the said Walker, Register, may be commanded to convey said land, as prayed to be directed in said rule, and your petitioner, as in duty bound, will every pray, &c.

ROBERT W. WHITE,
By M. D. Papy.

A rule was taken, returnable at a future day, and on the 3d day of February, 1851, David S. Walker, Register of Public Lands, made the following return to the rule served, viz:

In obedience to the rule upon the Register to show cause why he should not convey by deed to said R. W. White certain land purchased by said White, viz: the west half of the southeast quarter of section sixteen, township one, range three, south and east, upon the payment to him of the balance of the purchase money due therefor, the Register most respectfully shows cause, as follows, to-wit:

On or about December 9, 1850, said White called at the office of the Register and made inquiry about the terms on which he could purchase said tract, and was told that he could have it at five dollars per acre. Said White replied 168 in substance that the land was not worth that price and refused to give it unconditionally, but, after much solicitation, persuaded the Register to enter into the arrangement with him evidenced by the following agreement in writing, signed by said White and the Register, to-wit:

"R. W. White has this day purchased the west half of the southeast quarter of section sixteen township one, south of range three, east, at five dollars per acre, one quarter of which he has paid and given his notes for the balance, as the law requires; but it is understood that, notwithstanding said sale, said land is to be offered at public sale, and if it shall sell for five dollars per acre, then said White is to take it at that price. If it shall sell for over five, he is to take it or not, as he likes; but if it sells for over two dollars and fifty cents per acre, and under five, he is to take it at that price.

[Signed] R. W. WHITE,
[Signed] D. S. WALKER.
December 9, 1850."

After said White had entered into this written agreement and was about leaving the office of the Register, he remarked in substance, that he presumed he would have the right at any time to enter said land, absolutely, at five dollars per acre, to which the Register replied affirmatively.

On or about the 19th December, 1850, the Register received from said White the letter herewith filed and prayed to be taken as part of this answer, stating that he had concluded to take said tract at five dollars per acre, at which it had been originally appraised, instead of waiting for it to be sold under its last appraisement of two dallars and fifty cents per acre. The Register would certainly have acceded to this proposition and have entered said land in said White's name, which has not yet been done, but before he had acted in the matter, one K. M. Moore came to Ex parte Robert W. White.—Opinion of Court.

169 the office of the Register and complained that he had applied to enter said land long before said White, and had been refused the privilege of doing so, on the ground that said tract could not be purchased at private sale until it should first have been offered at public sale at the reduced price, in pursuance of section 6, Thompson's Digest, 115.—Said Moore stated that his application to enter said land was to the predecessor of the present Register in the Register's office, and said Moore also reminded the present Register of a conversation said Moore had with him about the purchase of said land some time since, at Newport, which the Register did not think of at the time of said arrangement with said White. And said Moore insisted that great injustice would be done him, under the circumstances, if said land should not be put up at public auction in pursuance of the written agreement between the said White and the Register, so as to allow said Moore to bid on the same.

Under this state of facts the Register informed said White that he felt it his duty to decline to give him a deed, but would adhere to the written agreement herein set forth, or the Register now offers to rescind that agreement altogether, and refund to said White the money he has paid and return him his notes.

The case was argued by Papy for the petitioner, and by Walker for the respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice, pronounced the opinion of the court.

Upon the rule on the Register to show cause why a mandamus nisi should not issue, the question presents itself—Has this court jurisdiction, or the power to entertain this application and award the relief asked for?

The 2d section of the 5th article of the Constitution provides that "the Supreme Court, except in cases otherwise directed in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co-extensive with the State, un-170 der such restrictions and regulations, not repugnant to the Constitution, as may, from time to time, be prescribed by law; provided, that the said court shall always have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other remedial and original writs as may be necessary to give it a general superintendence and control of all other courts." Thompson's Digest, 50.

It cannot be doubted that this is an application to this court for the exercise of an original jurisdiction; and it is argued for the petitioner, that the section above cited gives the power to this court to issue the writs specially named in all cases as its original jurisdiction, and that the phrase with which the sentence concludes: "as may be necessary to give this court a general superintendence and control of all other courts," is to be restricted to the "other remedial and original writs," not specifically named. And it is further contended that this interpretation is necessary in order to render operative the exception in the first clause of the section, that 'the Supreme Court except in cases otherwise directed in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only;" for, unless the jurisdiction excepted is original and contained in the power to issue the writs specified, there is none given by the Constitution but the appellate jurisdiction, and effect should be given to every part and clause of the instrument.

The exception in the first clause of the section under consideration was probably inserted by the Convention ex abundanti cautela, although it would hardly have been necessary, if any original jurisdiction had been granted in any other part of the Constitution to have enabled this court to exercise it. The language is general; it does not refer to any particular grant of jurisdiction; the general character of the court was to be one of appellate authority, and it was to be confined to that, "except in cases otherwise directed." It does not necessarily follow that some other jurisdiction must be intended to have been conferred by the 171
Constitution, or if other jurisdiction is given, it should be original. The exception, however, may, and we think does point to the power contained in the proviso. The office of a proviso generally is either to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of it, as extending to cases not intended by the Legislature to be brought within its purview. Minis v. The United States, 15 Peters' Reports, 445. As before remarked, the general character of this tribunal was intended to be appellate only. An appeal is defined to be the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior court (3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 55); and it is said to be the essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction that it revives and corrects the proceedings in a cause already instituted, and does not create that cause. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.—1 Peters' Condensed Reports, 282. By a strict application of the term appellate jurisdiction it would seem that neither a mandamus nor any other original and remedial writ could issue from a superior court to any subordinate tribunal, unless it results as an incident to the appellate power in the revision and correction of the proceedings of a cause therein. Smith v. Jackson, 1 Paine Circuit Court Reports, 454. Hence the necessity for the proviso in this section of the Constitution, to qualify and restrain the generality of the language used in the enacting clause, and to except therefrom the powers mentioned in the proviso. By this proviso power is given to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other remedial and original writs as may be necessary to give this court a general superintendence and control of all other courts, a power which we think was not necessarily included in the grant of appellate jurisdiction. It places this court, with regard to all other courts of this State in the same position, in this respect, which the Court of King's Bench, in England, oc- 172 cupies in relation to the inferior courts of that kingdom. It gives a superintending authority and control—the power to overlook and to govern, check and restrain all other courts.

The position, that the exception in this section may refer to the power to issue the writs specifically enumerated as the original jurisdiction, and that the "other remedial and original writs" not named, are to be alone controlled by the clause, "as may be necessary to give this court a general superintendence and control of all other courts," cannot be maintained upon any proper rule of construction. The proviso forms but one sentence; the writs specifically named are designed to illustrate the meaning intended more clearly than could be done by general terms; the terms "other remedial and original writs," means writs ejusdem generis, of a kindred character, such as writs of procedendo, prohibition certiorari, &c., which are to effect a like object, the exercise of a superintendence and control of all other courts. It is true that some of the writs thus specifically designated do not seem appropriate to the exercise of this power. An injunction, for instance, though often used to restrain proceedings in another court, yet is directed to and acts upon, the parties alone; it neither assumes any superiority over the court in which they are proceeding, nor denies its jurisdiction; but it is granted on the sole ground that, from certain equitable circumstances, of which the court that issues it has cognizance, it is against the conscience of the party to proceed in the cause. Eden on Injunctions, 14. So a quo warranto is a writ which lies for the government against any person or corporation claiming or usurping any office, franchise or liberty to inquire by what authority the claim is supported, in order to determine the right. Wharton's Dictionary of Jurisprudence, 859. Cases, however, may arise, in which these writs may be used in exercising this power, but if they do not, it is a matter of but little moment—it cannot alter the construction, or change the meaning of the instrument. It is very certain they can only be used, if at all, for the purposes and objects expressed. 173

By the interpretation which we give to this section of the Constitution, effect is given to every part of it, and from it, we deduce the conclusion that the jurisdiction of this court is two-fold—first, appellate jurisdiction proper, by which we understand the revision of the proceedings of the subordinate courts, and the correction of errors in their judgments; and, secondly, a general superintendence and control of all other courts, and this by means of all appropriate, original and remedial writs known to the common law. No original proceeding can be instituted in this court, unless it be to exercise this power of superintendence or control over some other court.

Reference has been made to the Constitution of the State of Alabama, and to the action of its Supreme Court, in the cases of Mead v. Dunn, and Murray v. Ayers, cited from Minor's Reports, 46, 323, as affording some aid in the proper interpretation of this section. On comparison of the Constitution of Alabama with that of our State, it is found that in the clauses defining the jurisdiction of the respective Supreme Courts, the only difference consists in the use of the terms "inferior jurisdictions," in the place of "all other courts," in the conclusion of the section. In the cases above mentioned, the question of jurisdiction was not raised or decided—in one of the cases, it is suggested by the court as a doubtful point. In the case of Davis v. The Tuscumbia Railroad Company, 4th Stewart & Porter, 421, 440, which was an original application by bill in equity for an injunction to stay waste, the court says: "We have no doubt that this court has authority to issue writs of injunction, when a case calling for the exercise of such authority is presented by the bill;" but does not give the reasons for such opinion. It was probably deemed unnecessary, inasmuch as the injunction asked for was refused, because of a want of equity in the bill. In the case of the State ex relatione v. Paul, 5th Stewart & Porter, 40, the question of the authority of the Supreme Court of Alabama to exercise the original jurisdiction of granting a quo warranto in the first instance was expressly waived, and the writ denied on other grounds; but in ex parte Simonton et al., 9th Porter, 383, 389, which was an application for a writ of habeas corpus, praying that the right of the petitioners to be admitted to bail might be considered and allowed, the question of jurisdiction was brought directly before the court for its determination, and it was held that the Supreme Court "does not possess the constitutional power to award the writ which the petitioners have asked for, unless it be to give it a general superintendence and control of inferior jurisdictions. To bring a case within these qualifying terms, it should be shown either that some Court, or that some Judge of a court, invested with authority to act in the premises, has undertaken to decide upon the case of a party aggrieved, or else without any just cause therefor, has refused to entertain the same." This may now be considered the settled interpretation of this section of the Constitution by the Supreme Court of Alabama, having been recognized in the subsequent cases of John, a slave v. State, 1st Alabama Reports, 95. Ex parte Mansony, Ibid, 98. State v. Williams, Ibid, 342. Ex parte Tarlton, 2d Alabama Reports, 35. In the case of the State v. Porter, 1st Alabama Reports, 688, 708, the Supreme Court of Alabama extend the authority of that court to entertain original jurisdiction of a writ of quo warranto to cases in which no court subordinate of the Supreme Court could act. Without expressing any opinion of the propriety of the decision in the case last cited, we consider that the view taken by the Supreme Court of Alabama, in the case of Simonton, 174 of the Constitution of that State, agrees substantially with that we have expressed in relation to the Constitution of Florida; and as the position in this case does not ask for the exercise of the superintending and controlling power of this court upon the action of any other court, the prayer of the petition must be denied, and the rule discharged with costs. 175

IN RE JOHN INERARITY, ADMINISTRATOR OF JOHN FORBES DECEASED, v. CURTIS AND GRISWOLD, TRUSTEES, &C.

The late Territorial Government was the creature of the Government of the United States—to continue in existence during the pleasure of Congress, or until the admission of the Territory into the Union as a State.

The powers exercised by the Federal functionaries, after the admission of Florida into the Union were exercised by State authority, under the State Constitution, and by virtue of the express provisions of the schedule and ordinance, in order that no inconvenience might arise from a change of government. For this purpose, and pro hac vice, the Federal officers were continued, and acted as State officers.

The records of the Territorial courts are records of the General Government, and the assent of Congress is necessary for their transfer to any other court. Upon the admission of a state into the Union, the concurrence of both the State and Federal Government is requisite to the transfer of records in cases of appropriate State jurisdiction.

The Congress of the United States, by the act of February 22d, 1847, authorized the transfer of certain classes of records and pending causes to the District Court of the United States, thus claiming and exercising the power of ownership over such records. The exercise of this power by Congress was a rightful exercise of power; and so far as Congress has not claimed these records as belonging to the General Government, it may be regarded as a sanction of the action of State authority over the subject.

The records and papers of the Territorial Courts did not pass to any court or courts, until the government, whose records they were, provided, either expressly or by implication, for the transfer, and the judicial action of some other tribunals; and, consequently, the mere fact that the courts of the State became possessed of such records, did not warrant jurisdiction; nor was the mode by which they are said to have become possessed, rightful and proper. 176

The Supreme Court of Florida is not the successor of the Court of Appeals of the Territory, and cannot award process to execute the decrees of that court.

The act of the General Assembly of July 25th, 1845, section 13, does not place the records therein mentioned in the custody of the Supreme Court, nor does it authorize any judicial action upon them. The Clerk of the Supreme Court is merely made the keeper of the records, &c., of the Court of Appeals; but as such, he is not amenable to this court, and might refuse to obey its mandate in relation thereto.

The nature and object of the petition filed in this case, the grounds of the application, and of the argument of counsel for defendants in opposition to the motion, are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Judge BAKER sat in the place of ANDERSON, Chief Justice, who had been of counsel in the case.

Davis, for the Petitioner.

Archer, for the Defendant.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a petition for the transfer and delivery to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, of the record of the proceedings of the court of Appeals of the late Territorial Government of Florida in a cause wherein Curtis and Griswold, trustees of the Apalachicola Land Company were appellants, and John Inerarity, administrator of John Forbes, and James Inerarity were respondents, removed by appeal from the Superior Court of the Western District, for Escambia county, to the 177 said Court of Appeals. The application is made by John Inerarity, who was the plaintiff in the original suit in the Superior Court.

The decree of the Court of Appeals was pronounced at the January Term, 1844, and both parties appealed therefrom to the Supreme Court of the United States. While the cause was pending in that court, on the 3d of March, 1845, Florida was admitted into the Union, as a State, by an act of Congress of that date. The appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States was decided at January Term, 1848, and the decree of the Court of Appeals was by that decision affirmed. The petition sets forth that the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States has issued to the District Court for the Northern District of Florida, according to the provisions of the 3d section of the act of Congress of February 22d, 1847, (Acts 2d Session 29th Congress, Chapter 17,) commanding the said District Court to proceed to the execution of the decree of the Court of Appeals; but that the said court cannot execute the said mandate for want of the record of the judgment and proceedings in said cause, which it is alleged are in the archives of this court; and praying that an order may pass directing the delivery of the same to the Clerk of the District Court, &c.

This application is resisted by Messrs. Delafield and Curtis, Trustees of the Apalachicola Land Company, who are represented herein by counsel, on several grounds: 1. That the General Assembly of Florida have vested power in this court to take the papers and keep them. 2. That the subject matter of the suit is not cognizable by the Federal Courts, under the acts of Congress; and 3. That this court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, and ought itself to do whatever is necessary to execute the judgment of the Court of Appeals, if the same appear to be affirmed, and grant process, &c.

In the consideration of this subject it will be important to 178 ascertain the character of the courts of the late Territorial government, and to what power the records of the said courts appertained on the dissolution of the government; and also, whether this court has now any judicial or other power over them, de facto or de jure, so as to authorize an order directing their delivery to the District Court, as prayed for by the petitioners, in case we find the District Court is entitled to the records in question.

The Territorial government of Florida was the creature of the government of the United States, under the authority of the second clause of the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution, which vests in Congress the power to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the ter- "ritory and other property belonging to the United States." By the act of March 30th, 1822, amended by the acts of March 3d, 1823, of May 26th, 1824, of May 15th, 1826, of May 23d, 1828, and of July 7th, 1838, and by other acts, (see Thompson's Digest, Appendix, 585 to 612,)) all the territory ceded by Spain to the United States, known by the name of East and West Florida, was erected into a Territory of the United States, under the name of the Territory of Florida, and the power and authority of that government ascertained and distributed into and among three departments, executive, legislative and judicial. The judicial power was vested in a court of appeals, in five superior courts and, also, in such inferior courts and justices of the peace as the legislative department should from time to time establish. The superior courts were courts of general original jurisdiction at common law and in equity, and had also jurisdiction of matters peculiarly cognizable by the courts of the Federal judiciary; and the Court of Appeals was a court of appellate jurisdiction over the judgments, sentences and decrees of the superior courts; the judgments and decrees of which latter court were subject to review by appeal or writ of error in the Supreme Court of the United States, under certain rules, regulations and restrictions.

This Territorial government was to continue only during 179 the pleasure of Congress, and until the admission of the Territory into the Union of the States. Upon the happening of the latter event, by virtue of the act of Congress of March 3d, 1845, the Territorial government was displaced and abrogated fully and entirely, and no power or jurisdiction existed within the Territorial limits of Florida except that derived from State authority. It is true that the Governor, judges and other officers, continued to exercise authority and jurisdiction after the 3d of March, 1845, and until the full and complete organization of the State government; but the power and jurisdiction so exercised were by State authority and under the Constitution. The Schedule and Ordinance, forming the 17th article, in order that no inconvenience might arise from the organization and establishment of the new government, declared by section 1st, That all laws and parts of laws then in force, or which might thereafter be passed by the Governor and Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, not repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution, should continue in force until, by operation of their provisions or limitations, the same should cease to be of force, or until the General Assembly of the State should alter or repeal the same; and by section 4, That all officers, civil and military, then holding their offices and appointments in the Territory under the authority of the United States or under the authority of the Territory, should continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and appointments, until superseded under the Constitution; and that all actions at law or suits in chancery, or any proceeding pending, or which might be pending in any court of the Territory of Florida, might be commenced in or transferred to such court of the State as may have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof. By force of these provisions the State Government was put into immediate operation, and the interregnum that must have otherwise intervened, thus avoided. The officers civil and military 180 were pro hac vice State officers, and the government a State authority and jurisdiction. It was not a continuation of the former Territorial government, but the adoption and adaptation of the machinery of the old, to the purposes of the new government.

That the effect of the admission of the Territory into the Union, as a State, was to deprive the several departments of that government of all their power, authority and jurisdiction is clear and incontrovertible. The right of sovereignty in the General Government which gave life and vigor to them was gone. The officers and the courts of the old system were continued, but they held by a new tenure; they could point no longer to the government of the United States as the source of their power but to the Constitution of the State of Florida. It was a government ad interim, to prevent anarchy and confusion during the period of time necessary to be consumed in arranging the new government, electing officers, &c., &c. The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Benner v. Porter fully supports this view of the subject. 9 Howard's Reports, 235. On the subject of the records of the courts of the Territory, the Supreme Court, in the same case, commenting on the previous case of Palao v. Hunt, 4 Howard's Reports, 589, says that there is no ground for qualifying the opinion expressed in that case, believing it to be sound and incontrovertible; but deem it proper, in the reiteration of that opinion, to do so with more fullness, as to its effect in respect to cases of State jurisdiction. The court says: "The "Territorial courts were the courts of the General govern- "ment, and the records in the custody of their clerks, the "records of that government; and it would seem to follow "necessarily from these premises, that no one could legally "take the possession or custody of the same without the "assent, express or implied, of Congress. Such assent is 181 "essential, upon the plainest principles, to an authorized "change of custody. On the admission of a Territorial "government into the Union, as a State, the concurrence of "both the Federal and State authorities would seem to be "required in the transfer of the records, in cases of appro- "priate State jurisdiction, from the old to the new govern- "ment. An act of Congress would be incapable of passing "them under the State jurisdiction, as would be an act of "the Legislature of the State to take the records out of the "custody of the Federal government. Both should concur."

The paragraphs quoted from this decision are in entire consonance with our own views and opinions, and fully expressive thereof. We think it is entitled to great weight, as well from the ability and learning of the judges, as from the character of the forum in which they preside, the determination of such political questions being within its peculiar province; and, besides, the opinion is expressed upon the examination and review of the former opinion of the court, in Palao vs. Hunt, before alluded to, and may, therefore, be considered as a judgment pronounced upon the fullest deliberation.

The decision of the case of Palao v. Hunt produced the action of Congress by the act of February 22d, 1847, before adverted to, which placed the records and proceedings of certain classes of cases under the control and jurisdiction of the District Court of the United States, established and organized within the State of Florida, under the 1st section of the 3d article of the Constitution of the United States. The causes and matters of record of the old Territorial Courts thus transferred to the District Courts may be stated as follows:

1. Causes pending in the Superior Courts of the Territory, under the acts of Congress of May 23d, 1828, and May 26th, 1830, providing for the settlement and confirmation of private land claims in Florida,

182 2. Causes which were pending in the Court of Appeals on the 3d of March, 1845;

3. The records and proceedings of the several courts in causes determined before the said period, and from which writs of error could have been sued out, or appeals could have been taken and prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the laws in force prior thereto;

4. The records and proceedings of the several courts, in causes determined therein prior to said March 3d, 1845, on which writs of error had been sued out, or appeals taken, under the laws then in force, to the Supreme Court of the United States;

5. All causes pending in any of the Superior Courts, or Court of Appeals, on the 3d of March, 1845, not legally transferred to the courts of the State, and which the said courts continued to hold cognizance of and proceeded to determine after that day, or which are claimed to have been since pending therein as courts of the United States; and

6. All cases of Federal character and jurisdiction commenced in said Territorial Courts after said day, and in which judgments or decrees were rendered, or which are claimed to have been since pending therein

The record of the decree and proceedings of the case of Curtis and Griswold, trustees, &c., appellants, and Inerarity, respondent, falls within the class fourthly above described, the decree of the Court of Appeals in said cause having been appealed from prior to the admission of Florida into the Union, and, of course, pending in the Supreme Court of the United States at that time.

The Supreme Court, in Benner v. Porter, explaining the opinion expressed, that the assent of Congress was essential to the authorized transfer of the records of the Territorial Courts, in suits pending at the time of the change of government, to the custody of State tribunals, says, that "it is Inerarity, Adm'r, vs. Curtis and Griswold, Trustees.—Opinion of Court.

"proper to add of avoid misconstruction, that we do not 183
"mean thereby to imply or express any opinion on the "question, whether or not without such assent, the State
"judicatures would acquire jurisdiction. That is altogether
"a different question; and, besides, the acts of Congress
"that have been passed in various instances on the admis"sion of a State, providing for the transfer of Federal "causes to the District Court, as in the case of the admis"sion of Florida already referred to, and saying nothing at "the time in respect to those belonging to State authority,
"may very well imply an assent to the transfer of them
"by the State to the appropriate tribunal. Even the omis"sion on the part of Congress to interfere at all in the mat"ter, may be subject to a like implication, and a subsequent "assent would, doubtless, operate upon past acts of trans"fer by the State authority." There is, we think, much force in this view of the question, as to causes pending of which the courts of the United States have not exclusive jurisdiction, or cannot, under the constitution and laws of the United States, take jurisdiction at all; and where, as in the case of Florida, the act of February 22d, 1847, provides for the transfer of the records and proceedings of certain classes of cases, saying nothing about other classes of which the State Courts could take jurisdiction, the inference is irresistible that Congress intended that the State authorities should assume jurisdiction over the latter, or if they had already assumed it, the omission may well be considered as a tacit acquiescence in, and ratification of, the authority thus claimed and exercised; and in view of the difficulties and confusion which would otherwise arise, in case of a hasty or improvident assumption of authority over the subject by the new State, we should be so inclined to consider the question. Concurring as we do in the opinion expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases referred to, we feel no hesitation in declaring that the courts of the Territory of Florida were courts of the United 184
States, and the records of said courts the records of that government—that the State authorities had no just right to assume the exercise of any authority or jurisdiction over them, except so far as the government of the United States. by express authority or just implication, shall accord the power to do so. So far as Congress, by the act of February 22d, 1847, claimed to exercise jurisdiction over certain classes of records and pending causes, it is in our opinion the exercise of a rightful power, and the courts to which the jurisdiction and authority over them is granted are entitled to the custody; and so far as Congress has not claimed these records, it may be considered as the sanction of the General government to the exercise of jurisdiction by the State authorities over the subject.

We are not unaware that the cases of Stewart v. Preston, (1st Florida Reports, 1, 9,) and Beatty v. Ross, (1st Florida Reports, 198, 210,) decided in this court, hold a contrary doctrine to that which we have announced; but the question was a new one, and there were no reported adjudications to aid the court in arriving at a proper conclusion, and if under these circumstances, this court has proceeded upon an erroneous view of the subject, the better course is to retrace our steps as the error becomes apparent. The case of Stewart v. Preston was decided in 1846, at the first term of the court, and before Congress had taken any action on the subject. The act of the General Assembly of Florida of July 25th, 1845, provided that all cases pending in the said court of Appeals should be transferred to this court, and should be tried and determined therein and thereby, excepting from the operation of the enactment cases cognizable by the Federal Courts; and the Clerk of the Supreme Court having obtained possession of the records and files of the court, the cause was docketed for hearing in this court. The counsel for res-

Inerarity, Adm'r, vs. Curtis and Griswold, Trustees.—Opinion of Court.

185 pondent made a motion to strike the cause from the docket, on the ground amongst others that this court had not jurisdiction, the case being brought before it neither by writ of error, nor appeal, nor consent of parties, and because it had not been transferred by any competent authority. The court expressed no opinion upon the questions raised in the very able argument of the counsel for respondent, but placed their judgment upon the authority of the General Assembly to transfer the case, and upon the inconvenience which must inevitably result from a different view. The court did not perceive any sufficient cause for questioning the power of the Legislature to pass the law, and considering that the cause was to be disposed of by some tribunal, and as no law had been passed by Congress providing for the transfer of such a cause, by appeal or writ of error, from the Superior Court to a District or Circuit Court of the United States, or to the Supreme Court, it was ruled that the case must be tried by this court, or not be tried at all.

Entertaining the opinions which we have expressed, we are compelled to disapprove of the conclusion, as well as the argument of the court in this case; and we feel well assured that if Congress had at the time asserted the claim subsequently made by the act of February 22d, 1847, the opinion of the court would have been otherwise. The concluding clause of the 4th section of the 17th article of the Constitution, as well as the 14th section of the act of Assembly of July 25th, 1845, must be considered ineffectual to give jurisdiction of those pending suits to the State Courts, until they received the concurrent sanction of the Congress of the United States, as before mentioned.

The case of Beatty v. Ross had been commenced by the service of process from the Superior Court of the Middle District prior to the 3d March, 1845; before the return day of the process, the Territory was admitted into the Union of the States, and the Territorial Government was thereby abrogated and displaced. The process was actually re-186 turned to the Superior Court after that time, and when by force and operation of the Constitution, it was a State Court. The plaintiff filed his declaration, and the defendant entered his appearance by counsel, which, according to the practice, was so far equivalent to the plea of the general issue, as to prevent a judgment by default at that time. Thus the Superior Court, as a State Court, became rightfully possessed of jurisdiction of the cause—the subject matter was clearly within its jurisdiction, and the defendant, by his appearance by counsel, had acknowledged it as to his person. At the trial term, and after the cause had been transferred to the Circuit Court of the State, the defendant, after a default noted for want of a plea, at the intervening rule day, filed his petition to remove the case to the District Court of the United States, on the ground that he was an alien. The court refused the prayer of the petition, and final judgment by default was given against him, and on appeal to this court, the judgment of the Circuit Court was affirmed. We have made this allusion to the circumstances of the case, because we believe the judgment of the court was correct, although we cannot concur with the learned judges who then sat here, in the course of reasoning which led them to the conclusion. The recital of the facts shows that the case was rightfully in the Superior Court, as a State Court, and it was fully competent for the General Assembly to transfer it to the Circuit Court, on the organization of the latter tribunal. Being in the Superior Court, as a State Court, this application of the defendant to remove it to the District Court of the United States, should have been made at the time of entering his appearance, (section 12th, act of Congress, September 24th, 1879,) and was too late when made at the trial term of the cause in the Circuit Court, (Gibson v. Johnson, Peters' Circuit Court Reports, 44.) The court, in Beatty v. Ross, is undoubtedly correct in the position, that the District Court, established by Congress within the State upon its admission, was not entitled of right to the records and papers of 187 the Superior Courts of the Territory, and to try suits commenced and pending therein; that it is not the successor of the Territorial Courts, and that the courts of the United States, established by Congress under the Constitution, take only by grant, and can exercise jurisdiction in those cases only where it is conferred upon them. But these principles do not, in our opinion, conduce to prove that the State Courts are successors of the Territorial Courts; for if they are such successors, then they must continue under the authority which created their predecessors—when the very reverse is the case, the State Courts claiming the authority of the Constitution and laws of the State, and having and possessing the power and jurisdiction thereby conferred. We do not consider that the State Courts follow and come in the place of the territorial courts, although the former may sit in the same counties, and dispense justice as the latter courts did, by the same rules of practice, and to the same people. They may be, in one sense of the term, successors, but certainly are not in that sense which would imply power, authority and jurisdiction over the records and pending suits. The records and papers of the Territorial Courts did not pass to any court or courts, until the government, whose records they were, provided, either expressly or by implication, for the transfer to and judicial action of some other tribunals. With this view, we cannot sanction as rightful and proper the mode by which the courts of the State are said to have become possessed of the said records and pending suits, nor can we approve of the conclusion deduced from such acquisition. The court says, "that the Judges of the Superior Courts, and other officers of the Territorial Courts, having been adopted and continued by the Constitution until the organization of the State Courts," "took possession of the records and papers after our admis"sion, and exercised jurisdiction over suits pending and in"stituted in those courts." "They administered the local "laws of the State, deciding suits between citizens and citi- 188
"zen, and trying indictments for assaults and offences of a "like character. The State Judges succeeded them in the "different counties, and thus became possessed of the rec"ords and suits; being so possessed, it was, in the opinion "of the court, not only competent for them to adjudicate
"the cases presented for trial, but it was their bounden du"ty to do so." This, we think, cannot be sustained on any just principle, and would be very mischievous in practice. If a court should take jurisdiction of a cause instituted in another court, merely because it has acquired the actual possession of the record of the suit, no matter how acquired, and without authority of law, it would lead to perpetual conflicts of authority, as unseemly as they would be destructive of good order; and the mischiefs would be increased, where the respective courts were created by different governments.

The learned court, for the purpose of showing that they were not mistaken on this point, make a reference to Smith v. McIvor, (9th Wheaton's Reports, 532,) and the principle decided therein that, in all cases of concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first has possession of the subject-matter must decide it conclusively, is invoked for the purpose of sustaining the argument; but it is very clear to our minds, that the force and effect of the principle decided is misapprehended and misapplied. The jurisdiction alluded to is one which is rightfully obtained by authority of law, not a mere possession of the records of another court, and of the files or issue books of causes depending therein obtained by force, artifice, or accident. An examination of the case cited will show that the principle decided was there applied to a case where a suit in equity was brought for the purpose of litigating the same question that had been previously adjudicated between the same parties in a court of law, without the addition of any equitable circumstances to give jurisdiction, and of which question courts of law and equity had 189 concurrent jurisdiction——it was held that the decision at law was conclusive upon the rights of the parties, and that if a court of equity entertained such a suit, it would act as an appellate court to affirm or reverse a judgment already rendered by a competent tribunal. Besides, in the application of this principle, the court assumed the jurisdiction of the State courts, which was the very question at issue, and which was to be proved.

But it seems to us the great error in the argument of the learned court is the assumption that the courts established by Congress in the Territory of Florida were not courts of the United States. The court says, "We attribute no im- "portance to the fact that Congress established the superior "courts. This did not make them United States Courts." What, then, did it make them? It would seem that every court must be the court of the power which creates it; and it is admitted they were created by Congress, in which body the legislative department of the General government is deposited. But this error seems to have arisen from a misapprehension of the decision of the Supreme Court U. S. in the American Insurance Company v. Canter, (1 Peters' R., 546,) and which is cited to sustain the position. We understand the Supreme Court in that case to have decided that the courts established by Congress in the Territory of Florida were "not constitutional courts, in which the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the General Government can be deposited;" but declared them to be legislative courts created under the power which Congress possesses over the Territories of the United States. Neither in this, nor in any other case, has the Supreme Court declared that they were not courts of the United States; but, on the contrary, in the recent cases before cited, they are expressly asserted and claimed to be courts of the United States, and their records the property of the United States.

Whether the District court of the United States to which Congress has assigned the power and jurisdiction over the 190 record in question, can rightfully take judicial cognizance of the subject matter of the suit, is a question with which we have no concern. If it be well founded it must be urged in that court. We decide only that the records in question may be rightfully disposed of by the General government, and that this court is not the successor of the court of Appeals, and is not authorized to exercise judicial power over the cause, or to award process to execute the decree of that court.

It remains to be inquired whether the record in question is in the archives of this court, or we have such power over it as will enable us to grant the prayer of the petition. No power or authority is claimed in the Constitution of the State over the records of the courts of the Territory in causes which had been determined in the Court of Appeals prior to the admission of the State, but by the act of the General Assembly of July 25th, 1845, section 13, it is provided "that the clerk of the Court of Appeals of the Terri- "tory of Florida shall, on the demand of the clerk of the "Supreme Court of this State, forthwith deliver to him all "the dockets, records, writs, files, books and papers of said "Court of Appeals, and property and furniture of every "nature and kind whatsoever, and the seal thereof, to be "kept by said clerk of the Supreme Court in a room to be "assigned him by the Governor in the Capitol, for his office." There can be no doubt as to the proper interpretation of this act. It does not place the records in the custody of this Court, neither does it authorize any judicial action upon them, nor give this Court any power over them. It is no doubt competent for the General Assembly to require of the clerk of the Supreme Court the performance of duties in addition to the duties-proper of his office and wholly foreign thereto, and such we understand to be the scope and effect of the 13th section before referred to. But it does not follow, as a legitimate deduction therefrom, that this Court would thereby acquire power and jurisdiction over him in relation to those additional duties.

Inerarity, Adm'r, vs. Curtis and Griswold, Trustees.—Opinion of Court.

As keeper of the records and papers of the Court of Ap- 191 peals, the clerk is not amenable to this court in the same manner and to the same extent that he is as the keeper of our records. We cannot exercise a summary jurisdiction over him in relation thereto, nor order him to deliver up, nor make any other disposition of the matters so given him in charge by the State; and he might well refuse obedience to our mandate in respect to them, unless it should be in some proceeding instituted in and decided by the Circuit Court as a court of original jurisdiction, and brought before and decided by this court, in the exercise of its legitimate appellate authority. This is also the view taken of the statute by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Palao v. Hunt, (4 Howard's Reports, 589); indeed, it is not susceptible of any other.

The only records and papers of the Court of Appeals over which we have any control, are those of the suits pending and undetermined therein at the time of the change of government, and which were, by the section 14 of the act of Assembly of July, 1845, transferred to this court, and of which the court assumed jurisdiction and decided.

We have not the authority to give the petitioner the relief which he asks and to which he seems to be entitled, but are compelled to deny his prayer and refer him to the remedy pointed out by the section 2d of the act of Congress of February 22d, 1847, or to some other appropriate remdy, if there be any, in the Circuit Court, as a court of original jurisdiction.

Motion denied with costs.

THE DIRECTORS AND TRUSTEES OF THE ST. ANDREW'S BAY 192
LAND COMPANY, PLAINTIFFS IN ERROR, v. NICHOLAS MITCHELL, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

Parties to a contract liable according to the form in which they respectively execute the contract. One party may be liable in an action of assumpsit, while the other is liable in covenant.

The form of an action against a corporation is not determined by the form in which its agent contracts, nor is it material whether an agent of a corporation is appointed by an official act under the corporate seal, or by a mere resolution of the directors.

Where a contract has been made by an agent or a committee for a corporation, it is necessary, in a declaration upon such contract by the corporation, to allege that the plaintiff made the contract by an agent or committee.

But when an action is brought with the view of making a party personally liable, who pleads that he entered into the contract with plaintiff as director or agent of a corporation, it is incumbent on him, in order to exonerate himself from the claim against him in his individual capacity, to aver and prove that he had authority to make the contract.

It is not necessary for the existence of the right, that the charter of a corporation should confer the power of contracting by an agent or committee; but where the charter prescribes any mode in which the officers or agents of a corporation must act, that mode must be strictly pursued, to render their acts or contracts obligatory on the corporation.

The plaintiffs in error brought an action of covenant against N. H. Mitchell, in the Circuit Court of Walton county, upon the following instrument, signed and sealed by said Mitchell:

TERRITORY OF FLORIDA—WASHINGTON COUNTY.

This memorandum of an agreement made and entered into between the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company on the one part, and Nicholas H. Mitchell of the other part, witnesseth: That the said company has this day leased to the said Mitchell, until the first day of January, eighteen hun-

193 dred and forty-five, the block or square, lying on St. Andrew's Bay, the houses and premises known as the hotel block, for and in consideration of one dollar, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and for the further consideration that the said Mitchell shall, as soon as he can, take possession of the premises, keep or cause to be kept, until the said first day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, an orderly and comfortable hotel, for the accommodation of such persons as may visit or move to said bay. The said company to finish the buildings, and the said Mitchell to furnish his own furniture, and provisions, and other articles convenient for such an establishment, and to make such fencing and other arrangements as he may deem necessary, the said company furnishing the plank and nails that may be required.

The said company further agrees that, at the expiration of the term of the lease, it will purchase from said Mitchell the furniture which may be in said house, at such price as may be fixed by two persons selected by the parties, one by each, and in case of their disagreement, an umpire selected by them.

The said Mitchell is to have the use of the house near said premises, known as Long's house, as a stable, until a stable shall be erected by the company.

Signed, sealed and delivered duplicates, this 11th day of May, 1841, the words "the said Mitchell" being inserted in the first line.

[Signed,] The St. Andrew's Bay Land Company by

RICHARD H. LONG, [Seal.]
WM. NICKELS, [Seal.]
A. H. BUSH, [Seal.]
N. H. MITCHELL, [Seal.]
} Committee.

The defendant demurred to the declaration, on the ground that the action did not lie, and the court below sustained the demurrer.

194 Keyes, for Plaintiff in Error.

Covenant was brought by the company against Mitchell, upon an agreement signed and sealed by Mitchell, and to which the signature of the company was made by Richard H. Long, William Nickels and Allen H. Bush, who, as a committee, signed their names, and made scrawls after them.

The objections taken upon the demurrer to the declaration were—

1. That the action was misconceived. It is answered that covenant is the remedy for breach of agreement under seal. 1st Chitty's Pleadings, 115. 1st Archbold's Nisi Prius, 250.

2. That there was a want of mutuality of contract. It is answered that Mitchell might maintain assumpsit upon the agreement, and, therefore, that there is no want of mutuality. The Bank of the Metropolis v. Guttchlich, 14th Peters, 19. Bank of Columbia v. Patterson's administrator, 7th Cranch, 299. 1st Archbold's Nisi Prius, 250.

3. That there was not a reciprocity of action. It is submitted that reciprocity of action is not essential to the validity of a contract. 1st Comyn on Contracts, 3 (margin.) But on the contrary it is believed that the common law regards one remedy, when applicable, as efficacious as another.

Yonge, with whom was Woodward, for Defendant in Error.

"A contract is an agreement, upon a sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing." In this case, there is nothing to show that the St. Andrew's Bay Company made any agreement. The paper that purports to be an agreement is signed by N. H. Mitchell, of the one part, and A. H. Bush, William Nickels and R. H. Long, as a committee, of the second part. The signature is in these terms, "St. Andrew's Bay Land Company, by A. H. Bush, William Nickels, R. H. Long, committee." They do not sign as agents, but as committee, and there is nothing to show what 195

powers were conferred upon that committee, or by whom they were appointed, nor is it alleged in the agreement or the pleadings, that they were the agents or committee of the company. Had it been so alleged, of course the demurrer would have admitted the fact; but without the allegation of agency, no body is bound by the contract but the individuals themselves, to wit, Bush, Nickels and Long—certainly not the company. White v. Skinner, 13th Johnson, 307. 2d Caines' Reports, 254. 5th East, 148.

The charter of the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company confers no power to contract by committee, and still less does it confer such power on these particular persons, Bush, Nickels and Long. Not having pursued their charter, the company are not bound, and here, for want of mutuality of obligation, N. H. Mitchell is not bound. Chitty on Contracts, page 13.

It is stated in the body of the agreement, that the agreement is given under the hands and seals of the parties, which parties are stated in the body of the agreement to be N. H. Mitchell and the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company. Now, there being no seal affixed to the name of the company, but only to the names of the committee, it is not sealed by the company. Randal v. Van Vechten, 19th Johnson, page 60. The intention of the parties, then it is clear, was to make a special agreement, which was not accomplished. It is imperfect, incomplete and inchoate, and therefore, not binding.

THOMPSON, Jusaice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The plaintinfl in error, who was plaintiff in the court below, brought covenant against the defendant in error, on an agreement which was signed and sealed by Mitchell, but which was not sealed by the Company, but was sealed by the committee who represented the corporation, with their private seals.

On demurred to the declaration, judgment was given for 196
the defendant. At the foot of the demurrer, the following point is stated, viz: "That the form of action is misconceived herein, to wit, that the corporation, having contracted through a committee not authorized under its corporate seal, and thus not being liable in an action of covenant, the defendant is not liable in this form, but only in assumpsit."

It has been further urged in argument here, that there is nothing to show that the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company made any agreement, the writing having been signed by certain persons as a committee, who do not allege that they were agents, or set forth their powers—that the charter confers no power on the company to contract by committee, and, therefore, the company is not bound, and the agreement is void, for want of mutuality.

That the action of covenant is the remedy which the law assigns for all breaches of a contract under seal, has been too long and too well settled to be doubted at this day, and there can be no reason to doubt the fact that the defendant in this case did both sign and seal the writing upon which the suit is founded—it is so alleged in the declaration, and admitted by the demurrer. But the position here seems to be, that because the plaintiff may not be liable in this form of action for any breach of the contract on his part, the defendant is not—that the respective parties to a contract can only have their remedies against each other for breaches of the same contract in the same form of action. We do not so understand the law. The parties are liable according to the form in which they respectively execute the contract—it is not necessary that the form of the remedy should be the same. In Sutherland v. Lishman, (3d Espinass' Reports, 42,) the plaintiff had sealed as well as signed the agreement—the defendant had not; the plaintiff brought his action in assumpsit, and Lord Eldon ruled, the objection that the action was misconceived having been taken, that the binding by deed ought to be mutual, to make it nces-

St. Andrew's Bay Land Company vs. Mitchell.—Opinion of Court.

197 sary for the plaintiff to sue in covenant; the defendant never having sealed the articles, could not be sued in that form of action, and assumpsit was rightly brought. In Randall v. Van Vechten, 19th Johnson's Reports, 657, Platt, Justice, says that the form of an action against a corporation is not determined by the form in which the agent contracts, though it is otherwise in the case of individuals. He says further: "Nor will it make any difference whether the agents for the corporation were appointed under the corporate seal, or by a resolution in the journals. It may legally be done in either mode; and whether it be in the one mode or the other, cannot vary the form of the action against the corporation."

The case of Rose v. Poulton, (2d Barnewall and Alderson, 822,) is directly in point; the deed was intended to be executed in full by the respective parties, and there were mutual covenants; the plaintiffs, who had not signed and sealed the deed, brought their action of covenant, and it was sustained.

As to the second point, it seems that the fact that this action is brought by and in the name of the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company, has escaped the attention of the counsel for defendant in error. The declaration alleges that the deed in question was signed and sealed by the defendant, and by him delivered to the company, and throughout treats the contract as made to and with the company—all which is admitted by the demurrer. The deed itself, of which profert is made, and which is filed with the declaration, states that it is a "memorandum of an agreemnt made and entered into between the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company on the one part, and Nicholas H. Mitchell of the other part," and it is signed, "The St. Andrew's Bay Land Company by

"RICHARD H. LONG,
"WM. NICKELS,
"A. H. BUSH, } Committee.

As, also, signed and sealed by the defendant.

198 Although it is signed and sealed by the committee, the deed professing to have been made by the corporation, the signatures of the committee will be presumed to have been made on its behalf, and this presumption will amount to full proof where, as in this case, the corporation ratifies and adopts the act, by bringing suit against the other party for a breach of the contract, as upon a contract made with it. Nor do we consider it necessary that the committee, acting for the corporation, should state their authority to do so, and set forth whether it was by deed or otherwise. The defendant when the contract was entered into, might have required the exhibition of the authority of the committee, or he might have waived such exhibition, and have relied on the personal responsibility of the individuals composing the committee, in the event that they had assumed to act without sufficient warrant, and the corporation had refused to acknowledge their action. But we have here to do with the declaration, which alleges that the co mpany made the contract, and which allegation is in due form, the facts being stated according to their legal effect. It was unnecessary to allege that the plaintiff entered into the contract by an agent. Bank of Metropolis v. Guttchlich, 14th Peters' Reports, 27.

The effect of the ruling, in White v. Skinner, cited by counsel for defendant in error, from 13th Johnson's Reports, 307, is misapprehended. In that case, the defendant, who was director of a manufacturing company, was sought to be held personally liable on a contract which he had entered into, as a director of the company, with the plaintiff. He pleaded in bar that he was one of the directors and an agent of the company, and had executed the agreement in that capacity, and not otherwise, of which the plaintiff had notice. On demurrer to the plea, it was held that, to exonerate himself from the claim made upon him in his private, individual capacity, he was bound to aver and prove that he had authority to seal for his co-directors, and, therefore the plea was bad, in not setting forth that he had such au- 199 thority; that if he was not personally bound, he ought, by his plea, to have shown that, upon the covenant, the plaintiff had a right of action against some other person. The difference between this case and the point in support of which it is cited, is so obvious that further comment is deemed unnecessary. There is no doubt that if the committee acted without authority, the individuals composing it would be individually liable; but that question cannot arise here, the company having adopted and ratified the act of the committee, and are here complaining of a breach of the contract by the other party thereto

3. The remaining point to be considered is, that which alleges a want of power by the charter in the company to contract by a committee. All aggregate corporations from necessity must act and contract through any by means of agents, but we have never thought it of any importance by what name or description the agents were known and designated. The agent or agents employed may be called president, director, trustee, cashier, or secretary, or even a committee, without altering substantially their character as agents. Where the charter or act of incorporation prescribes the mode in which the officers or agents of a corporation must act, to render their acts or contracts obligatory on the corporation, that mode must be strictly pursued; but we do not understand from the charter of this company that there is any particular mode prescribed by which it is to contract within the limits of its authority, nor is there any particular officer designated whose sanction or signature is necessary to give validity to the act. In the Bank of the Metropolis v. Guttchlich, 14th Peters, 27, the agreement had been made by the president and cashier of the bank, and the objection was, that the act was not within the competency of those officers as such. The court says, "it was unquestionably in the power of the bank to give authority to its own officers to do so." From the charter of this company, we do not see any objection to the authori- 200 zation of a committee to make the agreement in question for it. It might well be questioned whether this position, if well founded, properly comes up on this demurrer book, but we have considered it as if it was rightfully presented, and do not think it sufficient.

Upon the whole record, we are of opinion that the Circuit Court should have overruled the demurrer, the declaration and the matters therein set forth being clearly sufficient to enable the plaintiff to sustain the action, and, therefore, we order and adjudge that the judgment of the Circuit Court, sustaining the demurrer of defendant to plaintiff's declaration, be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court of the Western Circuit, sitting in and for the county of Walton, with authority to said court, upon application of defendant, to give leave to answer over to said declaration, and for such other and further proceedings as may be necessary and proper in the premises.

Judgment reversed, with costs.

NICHOLAS H. MITCHELL, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, THE PRESIDENT, DIRECTORS AND TRUSTEES OF THE ST. ANDREW'S BAY LAND COMPANY, DEFENDANTS IN ERROR.

The private seals of a committee, professing to act for a corporation, are not the seals of the corporation; and though the corporation may have authorized the committee to contract, and may, therefore, be liable in some form of action, yet covenant is not the proper remedy.

"An action of covenant can only be maintained against a person who has executed a deed under seal."

201 Nicholas Mitchell brought an action of covenant in the Circuit Court of the County of Jackson, against the President, Directors and Trustees of the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company, upon a certain indenture or memorandum of an agreement signed and sealed by Richard H. Long, William Nickels and Allen H. Bush, who were alleged to be a committee of, and acting for, and duly authorized by, the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company.

The defendants pleaded that the said persons named in the declaration were not authorized under the seal of said company to execute the writing named in the declaration. To which plea, there was a replication that the said persons were authorized; and, further, that their act, or execution of the said writing under seal, was ratified by the president, directors and trustees of said company. Special demurrer to the replication, which was sustained in the court below.

The writing upon which this suit was brought is the same as that set out in the case of the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company against Nicholas Mitchell.

Woodward and Yonge, for Plaintiff in Error.

Keyes, for Defendants in Error.

This case was decided upon special demurrer to replication for duplicity. Upon which, exception was taken to the declaration.

The point adjudicated by the circuit court was, that covenant could not be maintained by Mitchell on the agreement set out in the declaration. The case is submitted upon Randall v. L. VanVechten et al, 19th Johnson's Reports, 60, m. The Bank of the Metropolis v. Guttchlich, 14th Peters, 19.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

The decision of the court below in this case was, "that the said declaration, and the matters and things therein con-202 tained, are not sufficient in law for the plaintiff to have and maintain his action against the said defendants."

The correctness of this decision is the point submitted to this court, and we shall, therefore, disregard the other questions which would arise on the pleadings, if it were material to notice them.

Nicholas Mitchell complains of the president, directors and trustees, constituting the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company, of a plea of breach of covenant: "for that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on the eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-one, at the county of Washington, to wit, at the county aforesaid, by a certain indenture or memorandum of an agreement then and there made and entered into and sealed with the respective seals of Richard H. Long, William Nickels and Allen H. Bush, composing and constituting a committee of, and acting and duly authorized for, and on behalf of the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company, the said defendants, which said memorandum of agreement, so sealed, said plaintiff brings now here into court, bearing date the day and year aforesaid, after reciting that the same was made between the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company of the one part, and Nicholas H. Mitchell of the other part, leased unto the said Nicholas," &c.

The question is, can an action of covenant be sustained against the St. Andrew's Bay Land Company on the indenture here described? To use the words of Mr. Chitty, "covenant is a remedy provided by law for the recovery of damages for the breach of a covenant, or contract under seal. It cannot be maintained except against a person who, by himself, or some other person acting in his behalf, has executed a deed under seal."

The defendants certainly did not execute the indenture described by themselves, and the only inquiry is, whether they executed the deed under the seal by some other person? The declaration says the indenture was sealed with the respective seals of Long, Nickels, and Bush, and though it is alleged these persons were duly authorized by the Land 203 Company, such allegation can only mean they were authorized to make the agreement, not to affix the seal of the company; and what is still more material, there is no allegation that the seal of the company was affixed, and no such seal is in fact affixed, to the agreement which is appended to the declaration. The committee might have been fully empowered to make the agreement and, having made it, the company would be fully responsible for a breach of it to the plaintiff, in some form of action; but surely not in an action of covenant, which "cannot be maintained except against a person who has executed a deed under seal."

The private seals of the committee are not the seals of the corporation, and consequently the plaintiff is here suing a defendant in covenant, who, according to his own showing, has not executed a deed under seal.

We refer, in support of these familiar positions, to White v. Skinner, 13 Johnson's Reports, 307; Randall v. Van Vechten and others, 19 Johnson's Reports, 60, and Taft v. Brewster and others, 9 Johnson's Reports, 334.

The judgment of the court below on the demurrer must be affirmed.

BENJAMIN MEGIN, APPELLANT, v. JAMES FILOR AND OTHERS, APPELLEES.

An appeal or writ of error from a decree pro confesso, or a judgment by default will not be entertained, unless there has been a judgment on demurrer, or otherwise, prior to the default, and even then the defendant will not be heard upon these matters occurring subsequent to the default. But when questions affecting his interests are brought up to the Appellate Court by the other party for adjudication, he must be cited

The statute of this State requires notice of appeals and writs of error, in the 204 case of non residents, to be served in one of two modes—either upon the agent or attorney of the party defendant, or by publication in some newspaper having the most general circulation, for the space of thirty days; and this must be done, as well where there is a decree pro confesso, or a judgment by default against the defendant in appeal or writ of error.

Benjamin Megin filed his bill in the Circuit Court of the Southern Circuit for the county of Monroe, against Thomas Taylor, Philip Sawyer and James Filor, alleging that he was a creditor of Taylor, one of the defendants; that Taylor in 1843 purchased certain town lots in the city of Key West from Sawyer, and that the latter conveyed said lots to Filor, in trust for the infant daughter of Taylor; that this transaction was in fraud of creditors, one of whom was the complainant, and that the arrangement was made and contrived for the purpose and with the view of securing the lots so purchased from judgments and executions at law.

The bill states that the infant daughter of Taylor died in the spring or winter of 1847 without issue, and that her father had left the city of Key West some three years before the filing of the bill, and had been since residing in England; that he left no property in Key West other than the aforesaid lots, to which complainant could have recourse for satisfaction by execution, of his claims or demands against Taylor.

The bill prays that the lots purchased from Sawyer may be decreed to be the property of Taylor, and subject to the payment of his debts, and that for this purpose, they be sold, and that complainant be paid out of the proceeds the amount of his demand, &c.

The bill was filed 11th of January, 1848. Both Taylor and Sawyer were non residents, but notice was properly given to them for publication. Filor answered the bill, and denied the fraudulent intent charged therein in reference to the execution of the deed of trust to himself, for the benefit of the infant daughter of Taylor. The answer states 205 that, at the time of the execution of said deed, Taylor's means were ample, and his debts, if any, small, and within his ability to pay; that Taylor abandoned his wife and left Key West in 1844, and has not since been heard from; that defendant executed and discharged his office of trustee faithfully up to the time of the death of Betty Taylor, who is stated to be the only child of the said Thomas Taylor, and for whom the aforesaid provision was made; that after her death, defendant purchased all the right, title and interest of her mother. It was also insisted in the answer, that one of the notes which complainant claimed to hold against Taylor, was barred by the statute of limitation; that another was dated subsequent to the date of the conveyance by Sawyer to defendant, as trustee; that the third bore no date, and that the whole together did not constitute a ground for the proceeding of complainant, or authorize a sale of the lots to pay his alleged claims.

A decree pro confesso was taken against Taylor and Sawyer, and the cause coming on to be heard as to Filor upon the bill, answer and proofs taken, and it appearing to the court that there was no equity in complainant's bill, it was ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the bill be dismissed. From this decree, an appeal was taken by the administrator of Megin, who died soon after the decree was pronounced; and citation was served according to law upon Filor, but not upon the other defendants by either of the modes prescribed in such cases.

The solicitors on both sides argued the case upon its merits; but the only question considered by the court was, whether the cause was in such a condition as to entitle it to be heard at this time.

Woodward for Appellant, and Papy for Filor, Appellee

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case is not in a condition to be heard by this Court.

206 The complainant, Megin, filed a bill of complaint in the Circuit Court for Monroe County, against Taylor, Sawyer and Filor, in which he sought to have certain property which Taylor had bought from Sawyer subjected to the payment of a debt, which the complainant alleged was due to him by Taylor. The obstacle which he prayed to have removed was a deed for the property in question, which Sawyer, at the instance of Taylor, had executed to Filor in trust for Taylor's infant daughter, the consideration money having been paid by Taylor. Filor answered the bill, but Taylor and Sawyer, being non residents of the State, did not appear, though publication of notice was duly made acording to law, as to them.

On the 11th of May, 1849, a decree pro confesso was rendered against Taylor and Sawyer, but at no subsequent time was this decree made absolute.

On the 18th day of May, and during the same term of the court at which the decree pro confesso was taken, the complainant and Filor were heard by their counsel upon the bill, answer and testimony, and it appearing to the court that the complainant had no equity in his bill, "it was "ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said bill be dis-"missed upon its merits."

In the following December an appeal was taken to this court by the complainant, and citation issued and was duly served upon the defendant, Filor, but not upon the other defendants, Taylor and Sawyer, either personally or by publication.

It is true that this court would refuse to entertain a writ of error or an appeal from a judgment or decree entered by default or pro confesso in the court below against a defendant, unless there had been some antecedent judgment or demurrer or otherwise, and even then, he would not be heard on the subsequent matter. He would be required to purge himself of the contempt there, before he could be heard here upon such judgment or decree. But the converse of the rule does not hold good, that when questions affecting 207 his interest are brought by the other party to this court for adjudication, he shall not be cited.

In the first case the appellate court refuse to hear him from respect to the court below, to whose order he has refused obedience; but in the other case they are called upon to reverse a decree of the inferior court in his favor, and it is no want of respect to that court for us to give the party the benefit of the general law requiring citation.

In the first case, also, we refuse to allow him to seek here to evade the judgment of the court to which he is in contempt; but in the other it might be that the judgment of this court would deprive him of rights which he now holds under the judgment of that court.

A decree pro confesso determines nothing except as to the facts alleged in the bill. These are to be taken as true, and if they entitle the complainant to relief upon his own statement, it will be granted in the subsequent proceedings which result in the final decree. But a chancellor cannot be expected to grant relief when the complainant's own uncontradicted showing demonstrates a want of equity in his prayer. It may or may not be error in such circumstances to dismiss the bill absolutely, without a decree for costs; but in the case before us it has been done, and as long as it stands unreversed, the defendants though not yet purged of their contempt, are entitled to its benefits and protection as a final decree of a court of competent jurisdiction upon the subject matter in controversy.

For this court to interfere with this right without requiring the party to be cited to defend it, is a very different thing from turning a deaf ear to his own complaints for relief.

The defendants, Taylor and Sawyer, are non residents, and the statute of February 17th, 1833, provides that in all cases wherein any final judgment, order or decree may be pronounced or rendered in any of the courts of this State, from which an appeal or writ of error lies to any other court of this State, if the party defendant in appeal 208 or error be a non resident, notice of such appeal or writ of error shall be served upon the agent or attorney of said party defendant, or notice of said appeal or writ of error may be given by publishing the same in such newspaper in this State as may have the most general circulation, for thirty days; and the court to which said appeal or writ of error is had, upon satisfactory proof that such notice has been given, shall proceed to hear and determine said cause, as if personal service had taken place.

Here the requisition for a constructive notice of the appeal is imperative, and it is not in conflict with any of the considerations which would prompt an appellate court to decline hearing an appellant while in contempt.

If in this instance Taylor and Sawyer are "parties defendant in appeal," there is no escaping the requirements of the statute that has been quoted; and that they are properly and truly parties defendant in appeal, results from the fact that the appellant is seeking the reversal of a decree in their favor.

The appellant himself recognizes them as appellees, by executing his appeal bond in their favor, as well as in favor of Filor.

The court being of opinion that the appeal cannot be heard as to Taylor and Sawyer, for want of notice to them, will not entertain it as to Filor, until the others are brought in; for the relation in which the parties defendant stand to each other, would make it impossible to render any effective decree against the appellee now in court, without invading the rights and interests of at least one of the parties who is not here.

The court will grant an order for the continuance of this case until its next regular session at Tallahassee, at which time it will be heard and considered, if it shall be made to appear to the court that due notice of the appeal has been given to Taylor and Sawyer, as provided by law, in the case of non resident defendants.

Where it is to be inferred from the pleadings and issues in a cause, that the jury passed upon the true merits of the case, and where it is clear that the setting aside of the verdict would be of no benefit ultimately to the party seeking it, the verdict will not be disturbed, on account of mistakes in pleadings, or where it is questionable whether a particular plea is sufficient to present a proper issue.

A release executed by J.W.S., cestui que trust, to F. A. B., of all claims or demands of every nature whatsoever which J. B., trustee, who is in possession of the legal estate, has against F. A. B., on account of a mortgage executed by the latter to the trustee, is not a conveyance of the estate of J. B. Such a conveyance, therefore, is not a compliance with an agreement to convey the interest of J. B., the trustee. This can only be done, if it is a freehold, by deed sealed, or in the case of a chattel interest, signed by J. B. himself, or some one having authority to convey for him, to seal for him, or to sign for him.

John W. Simonton brought assumpsit in the Circuit Court of the County of Monroe, against Pedro A. Gandolfo, for the sum of six hundred dollars, which he claimed a right to recover under the following state of facts set forth in the declaration, viz:—Fielding A. Browne, on the fifteenth day of January, 1847, and for some years previous thereto, was possessed of certain lots and parcels of land in the city of Key West, which he had purchased of one John Barcroft, who was trustee of the plaintiff under and by virtue of a deed of trust executed by plaintiff and wife and bearing date the tenth day of December, 1829 Browne had mortgaged the said lots and parcels of land to Barcroft, trustee as aforesaid, to secure the payment of the purchase money. Before the fifteenth day of January, 1847, the defendant (Gandolfo) purchased from Browne a part of one of the lots included in the mortgage executed by Browne to Barcroft, and which he held under title derived from Browne.

On or about the said fifteenth day of January, 1847, the 210 said plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement, as was alleged in the declaration, to the following effect, to wit:—The plaintiff agreed with and promised the defendant that he would make a release to Browne and his assigns of all claims and demands which Barcroft, Trustee as aforesaid, had against said Browne for and on account of the mortgage executed by the latter; and the defendant, for and in consideration of said release to be executed by plaintiff, undertook and promised to pay the plaintiff the sum of six hundred dollars, upon the execution of said release. The plaintiff averred that he did, on the seventeenth day of April, 1847, execute a release to Browne for the purpose mentioned in the agreement, but that defendant had not paid and refused to pay the sum of six hundred dollars, according to his promise and undertaking.

The defendant filed the following pleas:

And the said defendant, by attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, &c., and says that the said plaintiff his said action ought not to have and maintain, because he says the plaintiff has not released to said mortgagor all claims which said Barcroft had against said mortgagor in his declaration mentioned, as he hath alleged; and of this he puts himself on the country.

2. And for further plea in this behalf he says the plaintiff his action ought not to have, because he says the plaintiff hath not made and delivered to the said defendant or to any person authorized by him to receive the same, any legal release or relinquishment of all claims said Barcroft had against the said mortgagor in his declaration mentioned; and of this he puts himself on the country.

3. And for further plea in this behalf the said defendant says plaintiff his action ought not to have, &c., because he says the said supposed agreement in said declaration mentioned, was made without consideration, valuable in law; and of this he puts himself on the country.

4. And for a further plea in this behalf the said defendant says that the said plaintiff this action ought not to have 211 because he says that the said plaintiff could not make or execute a legal release of the claims said Barcroft had against said mortgagor in his said declaration mentioned; and of this he puts himself on the country.

5. And for further plea in this behalf the said defendant says that he never undertook or promised to pay six hundred dollars or any other sum of money for a release of all the claims said Barcroft in said declaration mentioned had against said mortgagor, to be made by said plaintiff, or to the said F. A. Browne; and of this he puts himself on the country.

6. And for further plea in this behalf the said defendant saith that he did not write or sign any memorandum in writing of said supposed agreement; and of this he puts himself on the country.

The first, second, fourth and sixth pleas were demurred to. The demurrer to the first and sixth pleas was sustained, and that to the second and fourth overruled. Issue was joined on the third and fifth pleas.

At the trial the plaintiff, to sustain his case, offered in evidence the release, which is fully set out in the opinion delivered by the court. The defendant asked and obtained from the court the following charge to the jury in relation to said release: "That the release given in evidence as the "release of Simonton of all the interest of Barcroft, does "not perfect Gandolfo's title, and does not release all the "claims or demands which Barcroft, mortgagor, had against "Browne, as mortgagee."

The cause was tried at the Spring term, 1850, of the Circuit Court sitting in and for the County of Monroe, the Hon. JOSEPH B. LANCASTER, Judge of the Southern Circuit, presiding. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff, having excepted to the rulings and instructions given by the Judge on the trial of the cause, appealed from the judgment of the court below.

Judge HAWKINS sat in the place of THOMPSON, Justice, who 212 had been of counsel in the case.

Papy and Archer for appellant.

Hogue for appellee.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff here in his declaration alleges, among other things, that "the said plaintiff agreed and promised the "said defendant that he (plaintiff) would make a release "to said Brown, &c. of all claims or demands which said "Barcroft, trustee as aforesaid, had against said Brown, "mortgagor as aforesaid, for and on account of said mort-"gage; and the said defendant, for and in consideration of "said release, to be executed by plaintiff to said Brown, "undertook and promised the said plaintiff to pay him the "sum of six hundred dollars, upon the execution of said "release."

On the trial, the plaintiff excepted to the fifth instruction, as asked by defendant and given by the court, and embodies the exception in his bill. The instruction asked for and thus excepted to, is in the following words: That the release given in evidence as the release of Simonton, of all the interest of Barcroft, and bearing date 16th April, 1847, does not perfect Gandolfo's title, and does not release all the claims or demands which Barcroft, mortgagee, had against Brown, as mortgagor, which is as follows:

"Know all men by these presents—Whereas, on the 22d day of August, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, Fielding A. Browne, of Key West, did purchase of John Barcroft, trustee of John W. Simonton and Ann Simonton, certain lots, tracts and parcels of land on the island of Key West; and, whereas, to secure payment for the same unto said John Barcroft, trustee, the said Fielding A. Browne did, on the same day, execute his several promissory notes, together with a mortgage upon all the said lots, tracts and parcels of land, which said conveyance from 213

John Barcroft to Fielding A. Browne, and said notes and mortgage from Fielding A. Browne to said John Barcroft, and recorded in the office of the county records of Monroe county, Florida, and are herein referred to; and, whereas, the payments stipulated for in the said mortgage have not been made, and there still remains due and payable from said Fielding A. Browne to said John Barcroft upon the same, eleven thousand two hundred and thirty-four dollars and eleven cents; and, whereas, the said Fielding A. Browne has, by an instrument of writing, bearing even date herewith, forever remised, released, conveyed, aliened, confirmed and quit-claimed unto the said John Barcroft, all his right, title, interest, claim, property and demand of every nature whatsoever, either in law or equity, in and to the said lands, which are particularly described and set forth in the said instrument of writing, bearing even date herewith; Now, therefore, this is to declare that I, John W. Simonton, of Key West, Florida, cestui que trust of said John Barcroft, in consideration of the execution and delivery of the said instrument of writing and quit-claim, do covenant, stipulate and agree to and with the said Fielding A. Browne, his heirs, executors and administrators, that I, my heirs, executors and administrators, shall and will, within four years from the date hereof, I or they will sell, convey and finally dispose of all the said lots, tracts and parcels of land which are specified in said instrument of writing, and quit-claim, to the best advantage and in such manner, that the proceeds arising or to arise, accruing or to accrue from the same, shall be realized by me within the said four years, and that out of the said proceeds is first to be paid the aforesaid eleven thousand two hundred and thirty-four dollars and eleven cents, which is due and payable from said Fielding A. Browne upon the aforesaid mortgage, whatever that sum justly be, to be computed; and that the balance or surplus which may remain after I shall have paid the said sum due, shall be, within the said four years, paid over to said 214

Fielding A. Browne, his heirs, executors, or administrators; and I do further hereby and forever release the said Fielding A. Browne, his heirs and assigns, from all claims or demands of every nature whatsoever, which the said Barcroft, trustee as aforesaid, had or may have had against or upon him, for and on account of his said mortgage.

"In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and stal at Key West, Florida, on this sixteenth day of April A. D., one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven.

"(Signed.) J. W. SIMONTON, [Seal.]

"Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of—

"JAMES JOHNSON,

"W. R. HACKLEY."

Supposing that the jury upon the issue presented by the plea of the general issue, found that the contract as alleged in the declaration was made, the deed of release, as set forth in this exception, is the evidence by which the plaintiff offered to show that he had complied with his part of the contract, and thereby entitles himself to recover of the defendant.

The second plea of the defendant was doubtless designed to present an issue as to this fact; that is whether the plaintiff had performed his part of the contract; and if it were a good plea, the court would have no difficulty in arriving at their judgment. The plea, though pronounced by the court below upon demurrer to be good, is very equivocal in its terms, and we have hesitated long before consenting to consider it as sufficient to present a proper issue. We stretch the authority of this court to its utmost limit, when we determine to do so, under a conviction that the jury really passed upon the true merits of the controversy, and that the setting aside this verdict for mistakes in pleading would be of no advantage to the plaintiff, while it might involve both him and the defendant in unavailing expense and trouble.

Simonton vs. Gandolfo.—Opinion of Court.

It is very evident that the jury in finding for the defend- 215 ant, found either that there was no contract between the parties, or that the plaintiff had not complied with his part of the contract. If they found the first, we have no right to interfere with their verdict, for it was a pure question of fact properly presented to them by the plea of the general issue—if they found the other alternative, then the legal sufficiency of the evidence upon which they passed is presented to our notice and decision by the fifth instruction asked for by defendant and given by the court, and which we have recited. In other words, we are to inquire and to say, whether the deed of release executed by the plaintiff to Browne, was a compliance with the plaintiff's contract, as set forth by himself in his declaration, to wit, "that said plaintiff agreed and promised the said defendant that he, said plaintiff, would make a release to said Browne, mortgagor as aforesaid, and his assigns, of all claims or demands which said Barcroft, trustee as aforesaid, had against said Browne, mortgagor as aforesaid, for and on account of said mortgage."

It appears from the recital in the deed that Barcroft was trustee of John W. Simonton and Ann Simonton. The deed purports to be executed by John W. Simonton, not as attorney for Barcroft, but in his own person; and describing himself as cestui que trust, no reference being made to Ann Simonton; and the consideration mentioned is a certain instrument of writing executed by Browne.

The deed concludes as follows: "I do further hereby and forever release the said F. A. Browne, his heirs and assigns, from all claims or demands of every nature whatsoever, which the said John Barcroft, trustee as aforesaid, had or may have had, against or upon him, for and on account of his said mortgage," and is signed thus: John W. Simonton, [L. S.]

Was Simonton competent to convey the title of Barcroft? Let us see. Barcroft had the legal estate probably in fee-simple; if so, it could only be conveyed by deed under seal, 216
(2 Blackstone's Commentaries, 297,) and "a deed is a writing containing a contract, and signed, sealed and delivered by the party." 4 Comyn's Digest, 270. If it were only an estate for years, the statute 29th Charles II. requires the assignment to be at least in writing to be signed by the party. No estate, then, that Barcroft might have had could be conveyed, unless in the case of a freehold the conveyance was sealed, and, in the case of a chattel, interest was signed by Barcroft. In the case before us he does neither, and it does not appear that Simonton had any authority to convey for him, to seal for him or to sign for him. Whatever Simonton conveyed he surely did not convey the interest of Barcroft, and failing or omitting to do so, he did not perform his part of the contract with defendant.

It is alleged by plaintiff's counsel that a cestui que trust may sell his interest, and that Simonton, therefore, though not technically conveying Barcroft's interest, conveyed an estate of more value. We do not deny that Simonton might have released his interest, but the proper questions are—did he do it? and, if he did, was it the release Gandolfo bargained for? His own deed and his own declaration furnish replies to both enqueries. In his deed he says, "I release all claims or demands which John Barcroft had or may have had"—there is no release of his own interest.—In his declaration he says that he "agreed that he would make a release of all claims and demands which Barcroft had," but makes no agreement to release his own.

These considerations afford also a response to the positions assumed by counsel, to the effect that a part performance of his contract will entitle him to recover. The deed seems to us a mere nullity—it conveys nothing; and what is supposed by counsel to be conveyed, to wit—the equitable interest of Simonton, forms no part of the agreement.

We think, therefore, the court was right substantially in instructing the jury as asked in the fifth instruction of defendant. We say substantially, because the part that relates to perfecting Gandolfo's title is, at best, unnecessary. But we overlook this and other defects, because we are satisfied that none of these errors misled the jury, and that they arrived at the proper adjustments of the respective rights of the parties. 217

Let the judgment be affirmed.

JAMES GIBSON, APPELLANT, v. DANIEL LOVE, APPELLEE.

By the ancient common law the question of fraud was purely a question of fact.

The statute 13th of Elizabeth, protecting creditors and others from fraudulent conveyances, is to be construed liberally in favor of the class of persons designed to be protected from fraud.

A surety is the creditor of a co-obligor and, as such, entitled to all the protection which the statute 13th Elizabeth extends to creditors and others.

The statute 27th Elizabeth, though in its terms it applies only to land, yet being declaratory only of the common law, may be interpreted as defining the nature and effect of fraudulent conveyances generally.

What is termed fraud in law is distinct from fraud in fact, and it is the duty of a judge to instruct the jury that their conclusions from facts must be regulated by the character and imports given to those facts by necessary legal implication. Some acts are proofs of fraudulent intent, and it is the duty of the court so to instruct the jury.

Where a legal effect of a conveyance is to delay, hinder and defraud creditors, no matter what the actual intention may have been, it is a fraud in law, and the courts are bound so to declare it.

Where the seller of a slave retains possession after the sale, fraud is to be inferred, unless there is evidence not of a general character negativing a fraudulent intent, but of a character to explain possession. The presumption of fraud in a case where the vendor remains in possession, is so strong as to outweigh positive testimony of an entire absence of all fraudulent intent, or even to establish a fraud, where the jury are satisfied that there was none actually intended.

218 This case was brought up by appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the county of Gadsden, given at the Spring Term, 1850. The opinion of the court contains a full statement of the case.

Dupont, for Appellant.

The record shows the following state of case in the court below: James Gibson had obtained a decree of foreclosure upon a mortgage of indemnity, executed by John C. Love, embracing amongst other things a certain slave named Henry. The decree directed the slave to be sold under direction of the master in chancery, and under this order the master took the slave into possession. Daniel Love thereupon interposed a "claim" to the slave, and the issue was to try the title to the slave.

At the trial below, the claimant Daniel Love, proved that he was in possession of the slave at the date of the levy—he also exhibited a "bill of sale" absolute on its face, from John C. Love, for the slave Henry, dated December 9th, 1841, and recorded January 1st, 1842. He also proved that, at the time of the alleged sale, the vendor, John C. Love, was to retain the possession of the slave, paying an annual hire for him equivalent to the interest of the amount stipulated in the bill of sale as the purchase money.

James Gibson, the plaintiff in execution, to support his title, exhibited a "deed of mortgage," dated on the 13th day of December, A. D., 1841, and recorded December 17th, 1841. He also proved that John C. Love, the mortgagor, was in actual possession of the slave at the date of the mortgage, and so continued for more than two years.

Upon this state of case, the plaintiff in execution prayed the court to give the jury certain instructions, all of which were refused, and the court proceeded to give certain other instructions, all of which will more fully appear by reference to the "bill of exceptions" contained in the record.

To sustain the title to the plaintiff in execution, we contend as follows:

The court erred in refusing to grant the two first instruc- 219
tions prayed for by the appellant. We contend that these instructions were pertinent to the facts of the case, and were asked in view of the objects and policy of the "registration laws." It is true that "recording" is not essential to the validity of a conveyance of personal property, and neither is it so in regard to real property. In reference to the latter class, however, our statute in terms makes recording absolutely necessary, to protect it against the claims of creditors and subsequent purchasers "without notice." Vide Thompson's Digest, 180, section 1. They also permit and provide for, and make it obligatory on, the recording officers to record "all transfers of personal property, which may be offered for record" Thompson's Digest, 183, sections 4th and 3d. It may be proper to note the distinctions observed in the statute, in regard to the two species of property, and the reason for that distinction, in order to lead us to a correct application of the object of those statutes

Now, it will be observed that the only effect of recording conveyances of real property, is to protect it against the claim of "creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice." If the creditor or subsequent purchaser had actual notice of the conveyance, then he could claim no benefit under the statute. Why was the statute thus framed? Evidently to give notoriety to the transaction, in view of the fact that in the transfer of title to "real estate," actual possession, or "possessio pedis," is not essential at law to pass the estate. In the transfer of "personal property," however, (as a general rule,) the converse of this doctrine prevails—it being well established that, to make the conveyance good against creditors and subsequent purchasers, "possession must accompany and follow the deed." It would seem, however, that our Legislature, being well aware of the many exceptions and modifications to which this doctrine (as a general rule) had been subjected by the conflicting decisions of the courts, determined to place the two species of property upon the same footing, in regard to the 220
"constructive notice," afforded by registration of the conveyance, and hence the provision in the statute for recording of conveyances of personal property. Vide Thompson's Digest, 183, sections 4th and 3d. Upon no other principle, and with no other object, can we rationally account for this provision of the statute. It certainly never could have been intended merely to subserve the convenience of individuals, as a means of perpetuating the evidence of their "title" to property, the mere possession of which, by operation of law, affords sufficient evidence of title, without the aid of any written transfer.

But why, it may be asked, does the statute in the one case declare in terms the conveyance void, as against "creditors and subsequent purchasers," and omits to do so in the other? The reason is obvious:—In the case of the transfer of real property, the well established law is, that a want of actual possession raises no presumption of fraud; while in the transfer of personal property, the law is equally well established, that, unless actual possession (or such as the property is capable of) accompany the deed, the presumption of fraud is always raised. The object of the Legislature, therefore, was to provide a ready mode of rebutting this presumption by the notoriety of recording, operating in the nature of a "constructive notice."

If this view of the statute law be deemed correct, then it only remains to refer to the evidence in this case, to determine the pertinency of the two instructions under consideration.

The deed of mortgage under which the appellant claims is dated December 13th, A. D., 1841, and was recorded on the seventeenth day of the same month. The bill of sale under which the appellee claims title is dated December 9th, A. D., 1841, but was not offered for record until January 1st, 1842; thus showing that, although by its date it purported to have been executed four days before the date 221 of the mortgage, yet it was not offered for record until the lapse of eighteen days after making, and thirteen days after the recording, of the latter.

The evidence of Samuel B. Love (a witness) further shows that the property never in fact went into the possession of the vendee, Love, until some two years or more after the date of the bill of sale, and that, at the time of the execution of the mortgage to Gibson, the property was in the actual possession of the mortgagor, and so continued for two years or more. It also appears by reference to the testimony of Harris, (a witness,) that he, as a party interested in the estate of Colson, had given notice to these parties, who were co-sureties for J. C. Love, the executor, that there would probably be a deficiency on the settlement of the executor's account, and advised them to secure themselves; that upon a subsequent interview with the sureties, (both being present) a proposition was made by him (witness) to take the individual notes of the sureties for their respective portions of the liability incurred by the default of the executor, which had been then ascertained; that Love declined, and in this interview, Gibson charged him to his face with having deceived him, (Gibson,) by taking the bill of sale from his brother, (the executor,) and that he (Gibson) knew nothing of its existence until some time after the execution of the mortgage.

From this reference to the testimony, it is apparent—

1st. That no possession of the property accompanied the bill of sale to the vendee.

2d. That Gibson had no notice of the bill of sale at the date of the execution of the mortgage, and that the vendor was then in actual possession of the property.

3d. That the bill of sale was not affirmed for record until after the date of the recording of the mortgage.

4th. That Gibson was deceived by the "dealing" in regard to this property which took place between vendor and vendee.

222 In this state of case, we hold that the first two instructions prayed by appellant ought to have been given to the jury, and that it was error to refuse them. The simple doctrine involved in these instructions is as follows, viz: "that if Gibson was deceived and thereby injured, by the want of notice (either actual or constructive) of the existence of the "bill of sale;" and if this want of notice grew out of the neglect of vendee, or his unwarrantable dealing with the vendor in regard to this property—then the bill of sale ought not to prevail against the lien of the mortgage."

But should we be in error in the view we have taken as to the "object and policy of the registration laws," and the doctrines flowing therefrom, then does this very error present with ten-fold force the propriety of the instruction as embraced in the third prayer. The doctrine embraced in that prayer is the well established doctrine of the highest judicial tribunal of this country—the Supreme Court of the United States, Hamilton v. Russell, 1st Cranch, 309. Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, refers to the doctrine as laid down in Edwards v. Harbin, 2d Term Reports, 587, and says, "We are of the same opinion—we think that the intent of the statute is best promoted by that construction, and that fraudulent conveyances, which are made to secure to a debtor a beneficial interest, while his property is protected from creditors, will be most effectually prevented by declaring that an absolute bill of sale is itself a fraud, unless "possession accompany and follow the deed." Such a deed must be considered as made with intent to delay, hinder and defraud creditors."

1st. This doctrine of the Supreme Court is based upon the adjudications of the English courts. 3 Coke, 80—Twine's case. 2 Term Reports, 587—Edwards v. Harben.

I am aware that the doctrine of Edwards v. Harben is said to have been shaken by later decisions of the English courts, but by a careful examination of these decisions it will be found, first, that in none of these cases was the doctrine directly involved; and second, that no later case has 223 undertaken to overrule the doctrine.

The "possession" necessary to support an absolute bill of sale must be bona fide, substantial and exclusive. Wordell v. Smith, 1 Campbell, 333.

A sale and immediate "hiring" to the vendor does not constitute such a "change of possession" as will relieve the transaction from the imputation of "fraud in law." Vide 1 Smith's Leading Cases, notes to Twine's case.

An agreement that the vendor should retain possession of real estate and pay rent constitutes the transaction fraudulent per se. Vide 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 48. Cobern v. Pickering, 3 New Hampshire, 415.

2d. The doctrine, as established by the Supreme Court of the United States, has been recognized and adopted by the adjudications of the following States, viz: Virginia, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana. Vide 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 42 to 50, where the cases may be found collected.

3d. The doctrine is recognized in the courts of South Carolina, with a distinction as to whether the "consideration" of the sale was founded on a pre-existing indebtedness of the vendor to the vendee—making, in such cases, the sale absolutely void by mere operation of law. Vide 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 49 to 50.

The evidence in the case at bar shows that such was the consideration of the alleged sale of the slave Henry.

4th. The doctrine as limited by the Supreme Court to bills of sale absolute on their face, is recognized and extended to mortgages and conditional sales in the following States, viz: New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Vermont. Vide 1 Smith's Cases, 50 to 56.

III. Having thus demonstrated the propriety of the three instructions prayed by appellant, we next proceed to enquire, first, whether the substance of these instructions is supplied by those which were given by the court, upon the trial of the case below; and, secondly, whether the instructions given by the court were proper in themselves, as a 224 correct exposition of the law applicable to the case.

1st. It is only necessary to advert to the terms of the four instructions given by the court to perceive that they are in direct conflict with those prayed by appellant and refused, and consequently adverse to the position assumed under the first and second heads of this argument.

2d. The instructions given by the court were improper in themselves, because the whole question of "fraud or no fraud" was submitted to the determination of the jury; whereas, being a "conclusion of law," it ought to have been decided by the court. Vide Edwards v. Harben, 2 Term Reports, 487. Hamilton v. Russell, 1 Cranch, 309.

Archer, for appellee.

Gibson, at the time of the sale to D. Love, and at the time of the delivery of possession to D. Love, was not a creditor, by judgment, execution or attachment—indeed, was no creditor at all within the statute of Elizabeth or of 21st James I., who could complain of want of possession in vendee or act of bankruptcy in vendor. The fact that he was surety in the executor's bond did not make him a creditor of his principal; otherwise he would be a specialty creditor. The bond was not a cause of action then or subsequently, but only the occasion, which might give rise to a future liability. Nor did the mortgage make him a creditor; for non constat he might never be damnified and never have a right of action.

2. Gibson gave no new credit and extended no old one while the property remained in possession of vendor. He suffered no injury whatever by the vendor remaining in possession. His liability was not increased or his security diminished by that fact. On the contrary, if J. C. Love had delivered the property to Daniel Love on the 9th December, 1841, Mr. Gibson would have been in no better condition that he is at present. This shows that in fact he sustained

Gibson vs. Love.—Opinion of Court.

225 no injury, and where this is the case and there is no fraud in fact in the transaction, the party complaining is without remedy. As already shown, the verdict negatives all idea of fraud in fact.

If Gibson claims under the mortgage, he must claim as a purchaser. But purchasers are not included within the letter or spirit of either 13th Elizabeth or 21st James. As to them caveat emptor applies. The bill of sale from Love to Love is good inter partes. By the verdict it is not tinctured with fraud in fact. The older title must prevail. A junior purchaser cannot stand above his senior, except he can cut off the remedy of his adversary by lapse of time, or bar his right by estoppel in deed or in pais. There is no lapse of time to apply in this case—no estoppel by deed and none in pais, unless the possession by vendor estops the prior vendee. But the bare fact of possession (to say nothing of the accompanying explanation in this case,) is not enough to prevent the application to Gibson of the rule caveat emptor. Indeed the very object of the rule caveat emptor is to let buyers be advised that they are not to be governed by appearances when they purchase personal property.

I am aware that in some cases the courts have confounded the position of a purchaser of personal property with that of a purchaser of real estate, and have held that a bona fide purchaser of personalty without notice of an older title may hold against the true owner. But this I maintain cannot be correct, in the absence of actual fraud on the part of the true owner. The statute 27th Elizabeth and our registration laws here provide for the security of innocent purchasers of real estate, and upon very correct principles. As to loans of personalty, we have a statute which certainly would seem to negative the positions of the appellant. In reference to personalty which passes by delivery and without writing, and which (particularly in case of slaves in this country) is often-times out of the possession of the owner, upon loan, hire, or otherwise, it would be 226 monstrous to assert that a bona fide purchaser from the actual possessor should hold the property against the true owner, because the appearances misled the last purchaser. The rule might not be so injurious in its application to ordinary chattels; but to apply it in this country, where we have personal property of such dignity and value as slaves, would make titles to property of this description so insecure as to discourage all efforts towards its acquisiton.

But Gibson is not even entitled to the benefit of the position of an ordinary purchaser for value; for although technically a purchaser by virtue of the mortgage, he could not be injured by the possession remaining in vendor. He gave no credit—paid no new consideration for the mortgage. J C. Love was not liable to him as debtor, and was under no legal obligation to give the mortgage. The act was purely voluntary, and for the benefit of Gibson, notwithstanding the mortgage as to "Henry" was inoperative. Gibson complains that, as a creditor prospectively, he did not get a good title to all the debtor's property, to the exclusion of Daniel Love and others, and forgetting the extent of his demands for security, attacks the conduct of Daniel Love, as a fraud upon creditors. Under the English policy, the decisions under which he invokes, Gibson's mortgage would be held to be a fraud against all creditors, not explainable—while Daniel Love's bill of sale, even against a judgment creditor at the time, would be capable of explanation to a jury.

Hitherto I have endeavored to show that this judgment can be affirmed, without contravening the appellant's legal propositions. I now maintain that these propositions are not maintainable upon principle or authority in England or America.

Chancellor Kent made great efforts to retain the stringent rule of reserving the question of fraud for the court, and to exclude explanations to the jury; but without surrendering his prejudices, he admits his failure; and while he compliments the Vermont Judiciary for not as yet yielding 227 to the admitted progress of the milder rule, he adds, with proper misgivings as to the ability of that Court to hold out much longer, and with full knowledge of the unyielding demands of public policy in America, "How long the Court will be able to stand on that ground is another question." See note to 2d Kent, 526.

The establishment of the stringent rule involves the ascertainment of innumerable exceptions. The exceptions are so numerous as to disprove the rule—for controversies in this Court which would arise under the exception would far exceed all the litigation which could arise under the milder principle, that each case depended upon its special circumstances of explanation.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court, as follows:

This is a case of a claim to personal property interposed according to the provisions of our statute of February 17th, 1833.

The facts material to the point presented to this Court are briefly these: James Gibson and Daniel Love, the parties to this suit, on the thirteenth of April, 1839, became sureties on a bond given by one John C. Love, as executor of John Colson, deceased. On the thirteenth of December, 1841, John C. Love having become indebted to the estate of his testator and some fear being entertained that he might become a defaulter, a deed of mortgage was executed by the said Love to Gibson, conveying to him several negroes and, amongst them, one by the name of Henry, the subject of the present controversy. The object of the mortgage was to save harmless the said Gibson, on account of any loss which he might sustain, as surety on the bond before mentioned. Most of the property thus mortgaged was subject to a prior lien of the Union Bank. This mortgage was duly proven by a subscribing witness, and recorded on the seventeenth day of December, 1841 four days subsequent 228 to its date.

On the first day of January, 1842, John C. Love acknowledged before the clerk of the Circuit Court the execution of a paper writing in these words:

"Territory of Florida—Gadsden County:

Received of Daniel Love one thousand dollars in payment for a negro-man, Henry, twenty-four years of age, a slave for life, which negro, Henry, I do warrant to the said Daniel Love, his heirs and assigns, forever, to be good property forever.

Witness my hand and seal this ninth December, 1841.

[Signed,] JOHN C. LOVE, [Seal.]"

On the day of its acknowledgment, (that is, January 1st, 1842,) this paper writing was recorded by the clerk. On the subsequent trial of the right of property Samuel B. Love, a witness, stated "that about the time of making the bill of sale, John C. Love was somewhat embarrassed in his pecuniary affairs, and that he (John C. Love) was indebted to the claimant, Daniel Love, but to what amount he could not say. That about the time of making the bill of sale, he (witness) heard Daniel Love tell John C. Love, that he (John C. Love) might keep possession of the negro-man, Henry, for two or three years if he (John C. Love). would pay him the interest on the price of the negro, Henry. That John C. Love not paying the interest, Daniel Love took possession of the negro, Henry, about January, 1843.

Another witness, Alexander Love, stated that the amount of the indebtedness of John C. Love to Daniel Love was about one thousand dollars. Another witness, Isaac R. Harris, stated that, at some subsequent time, though the date is not mentioned, "when it was ascertained that John C. Love was indebted to the estate of Colson he (witness) and the other legatees of the estate of Colson had a meeting with Daniel Love and James Gibson, as securities of John C. Love, to see whether or not a settlement could not be 229 had between the legatees and the securities; the legatees proposing to take Daniel Love's note for one-half and James Gibson's note for the other half of the amount due from John C. Love to the estate of Colson. That Daniel Love refused to settle, unless James Gibson would let him (Daniel Love) share in the benefit of the mortgage; which Gibson refused, saying that he (Gibson) had frequently applied to him (Daniel Love) to assist him (James Gibson) in obtaining the mortgage security from John C. Love, and that he (Daniel Love) had refused to do so."

Subsequently John C. Love became in arrears to the estate of Colson, and on the 29th of November, 1845, judgment for $2,792 82-100 was recovered against Gibson on account of his suretyship, and that amount was paid by him in full.

On the 13th of November, 1847, a bill previously filed by Gibson, praying a foreclosure of the mortgage, was taken as confessed as to John C. Love, and on the 31st of December, 1849, the decree was made absolute, and it was ordered that the Master in Chancery should take possession of the slave Henry and sell him to satisfy the claim of the complainant, Gibson. Under this decree the master proceeded forthwith to take possession of the slave Henry, who, when levied on by him was in the possession of the claimant, Daniel Love, who thereupon, on the 4th of January, 1850, commenced proceedings for interposing his claim, by filing the affidavit required by law and executing his bond.

The case came on to be tried on the 24th of May, 1850, and after the evidence was heard the plaintiff in execution prayed the following instructions, to wit:

1st. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the property in controversy was in the possession of John C. Love at the date of the execution of the mortgage, and that the mortgage was recorded prior to the time that the property passed into the possession of Daniel Love, the claimant under the bill of sale, then the law is for the plaintiff in execution, and they will find the property subject.

230 2d. That if they believe that the contract between John C. Love and Daniel Love was calculated to deceive the plaintiff in execution, then the jury shall find the property subject to the execution.

3d. That when the bill of sale is absolute on the face, and the possession does not accompany the bill of sale, the contract is fraudulent per se.

Which instructions the court refused to give, but gave to the jury the following, as prayed by the claimant, viz:

1st. If the jury believe that the plaintiff purchased the slave Henry, in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and arranged with the vendor that he might retain possession of the slave upon hire and, from the circumstances, that there was no fraud in fact in the transaction, the claimant is entitled to recover.

2d. That, although possession of personal property, if it continues in the possession of the vendor after a sale, is prima facie evidence of the transaction being colorable and fictitious, yet that such possession continuing in the vendor may be explained by the circumstances; and if the jury believe that, under the circumstances in this case, there was no fraud in fact, then the bill of sale of the 9th December conveys a title to Daniel Love.

3d. That if the jury believe that the hiring of this slave was real and bona fide, and not fictitious and colorable, the possession of John C. Love was consistent with the bill of sale, being in law the possession of Daniel Love.

4th. That if the sale to Daniel Love was not fictitious or fraudulent, the possession continuing in John C. Love under an arrangement for hire cannot be complained of by a creditor, unless a new credit be given or an old one extended, under a mistaken belief that the property remained unsold.

Under these instructions the jury found the property to be in the claimant, Daniel Love, whereupon the plaintiff in execution, having by his counsel filed his bill of exceptions setting out the foregoing facts, refusal and charge, prayed an appeal to this court.

Gibson vs. Love.—Opinion of Court.

The assignment of errors is in the following words: 231

1st. The court erred in refusing to instruct the jury as prayed for by the appellant.

2d. The court erred in instructing the jury as prayed for by the appellee.

The two sets of instructions prayed for by the respective parties are somewhat inartificially drawn up, owing, doubtless, to the haste incident to a jury trial at nisi prius. No one of the instructions, taken singly, presents very distinctly the difficult questions which grow out of this class of cases; but, taken as a whole, they may be regarded as asserting on the one side that the question of fraud is a question of law, to be decided necessarily and by legal inference from certain facts; and, on the other, that it is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury according as they may or may not believe, from the evidence, that there was an actual design to cheat. As so intended and understood, we shall proceed to consider them.

It may tend to the better understanding of this distinction, if we remark in the outset, that, by the ancient common law, the question of fraud was purely a question of fact, involving an actual fraudulent intention, and the proper inquiry, therefore, will be, whether there is such a thing as statutory fraud, as contra-distinguished from actual fraud.

The first point to be ascertained is, the relation in which Gibson stands to John C. Love—whether he is a creditor or purchaser, or both?

It is maintained by the counsel for the appellee, that "the fact that he was surety on the executor's bond, did not make him a creditor of his principal." Perhaps in the strict technical meaning of the term he cannot be called a creditor. But it will be recollected that the statute of 13th Elizabeth protects creditors and others from fraudulent conveyances, and a liberal construction of this statute in favor of the class of persons designed to be protected from fraud, has always been admitted by the courts. "As to rights from 232
"contracts, any one liable upon a contract, express or im"plied, though only contingently, is a debtor from the time
"the liability is entered into; accordingly, a surety is a "creditor of the co-obligor from the time the obligation is en"tered into; (Howe v. Ward, 4th Greenleaf, 195;) and those "interested in an official bond are creditors of the surety
"from the time that the bond is executed by him. 1st American Leading Cases, 55. So "a guarantee is to be deemed a creditor to the guarantor, on a covenant of guaranty, even before it is broken." 8th Cowen, 407. And Gibson having made himself a debtor, on account of his liability for Love, is by the same rule, a creditor of Love.

So, also, in Twyne's case, 3d Coke, 80, it is said, "because fraud and deceit abound in these days more than in former times, it was resolved in this case by the whole court, that all statutes made against fraud should be liberally and beneficially expounded to suppress the fraud;" and an instance is given in the case of Pauncefoot v. Blunt, where it was held that the statute embraced the case of a forfeiture incurred to the Queen, and "it was resolved by all the barons that the statute of 13th Elizabeth, chapter 5, extends to it; for thereby it is enacted and declared that all feofments, gifts, grants, &c., to delay, hinder and defraud creditors and others of their just and lawful actions, suits, debts, accounts, damages, forfeitures, heriots, mortuaries and reliefs, shall be void,' &c. So that this act doth not extend only to creditors, but to all others who have cause of action or suit, or any penalty or forfeiture," &c.

We must regard, then, Gibson as entitled to all the protection which this statute of 13th Elizabeth designs to extend to creditors and others, against fraudulent conveyances contrived to delay, hinder or defraud them of their just and lawful actions, &c. Upon this point, also, the counsel for the appellee says: "I know of no case, where a creditor of a vendor obtaining judgment and execution after the ven-

Gibson vs. Love.—Opinion of Court.

233 dee got into possession, has complained of the previous want of possession in the vendee, or previous actual possession of the vendor."

The case of Edwards vs. Harben, 2d Term Reports, 587, to which all the courts both in this country and in England refer, as a leading case, was that of a simple contract creditor, who had obtained neither execution nor judgment before the possession of the vendee commenced; and yet the court held in his behalf, that the sale of chattels made by the indebted vendor, under an agreement to retain possession for fourteen days, was fraudulent and, therefore, void. The counsel for appellee seems to admit that Gibson was a purchaser, but adds "that purchasers are not included within the letter or spirit of either 13th Elizabeth or 21st James.

A sufficient reply has been given to this objection by the authorities already quoted; but we think further, that the statute of 27th Elizabeth, though its terms apply only to land, yet being but declaratory of the common law, may be interpreted as defining the nature and effect of fraudulent conveyances generally—in its letter, re-enacting the common law as to fraud relating to land, but in its spirit, sanctioning and sustaining the condemnation passed by the common law upon all frauds. In Hudnall vs. Wilder, 4th McCord, 295, it was held, "that, upon common law principles, a fraudulent conveyance of chattels might be avoided by a subsequent bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice."

Gibson stands unquestionably in the relation of a purchaser, by virtue of the mortgage of 13th December, 1841. "A mortgagee is a purchaser to the extent of his interest in the premises, within the meaning of the term purchaser, as used in the statute of frauds." Ledyard vs. Butler, 9th Paige, 137, and authorities quoted in the margin.

We must, however, regard him as a subsequent purchaser; for though there is no proof on the record that the bill 234 of sale from John C. Love to Daniel Love was executed before the 1st of January, 1842, which was subsequent to the recording of the mortgage, yet we are concluded by the verdict of the jury to take it to have been in fact made before the date of the mortgage.

For the reasons given, we shall regard Gibson as both creditor and subsequent purchaser, entitled to the protection of the statute of 13th Elizabeth in both these relations, by virtue of the phrase "creditors and others;" and also entitled as purchaser to the benefits of the common law provisions against fraudulent conveyances, as explained and defined in 27th Elizabeth, which was enacted in more direct reference to fraudulent conveyances of land.

In the case before us, the court instructed the jury substantially that, unless satisfied from the facts developed by the evidence, that in the sale of the slave Henry by John C. Love to Daniel Love, there was an actual, positive design to commit a fraud, they must find for the claimant.—This instruction we consider erroneous in this—that it was not qualified, by further instructing the jury that the policy of the law, sanctioned by authority, regarded certain facts as such unerring indicia of fraud, that the inferential evidence afforded by them was of as high a character as direct proof. So conclusive, indeed, is the nature of this evidence in some cases, that it not only supplies the omission of direct proof of fraud, but it is so stringent in its character as not to be rebutted by direct proof of the absence of any fraudulent design. For instance, if a man largely indebted makes a voluntary conveyance of all his property, no one doubts that the conveyance is fraudulent in law, and void as to creditors, and yet it is possible that the grantor had no actual design to cheat, and the jury might so believe. It might be the grantor was in the receipt of an income from his trade, or his profession, or his business, which he deemed sufficient to enable him to pay his debts, and that, in the sanguine anticipation of the continuance of this income, he calculated surely and honorably to satisfy all his 235 creditors; but in spite of this honest intent, however fully believed by the jury, there is no court but would instruct the jury that it was their duty to find the conveyance fraudulent. It would be fraudulent in law necessarily and independently of the actual intent of the grantor.

Though the case supposed is an extreme one, it is sufficient to show that what is termed fraud in law is distinct from fraud in fact, and that it is the duty of the judge to instruct the jury that their conclusions from facts must be regulated by the character and import given to those facts by necessary legal implication.

But we do not design to be understood as saying that generally, or even very often, does the law give to certain facts the effect of overruling and contradicting conclusions arising from other facts, as in the case supposed. It more generally gives to those certain facts a legal implication, to aid the jury in detecting the existence of an actual fraud, when its more direct and obvious manifestations may be successfully concealed. Fraud is, in its nature, secret, and the law, in its wise abhorrence of all false dealing, lends its aid to the jury through the court, to enable them to detect and expose the deception. Hence it is that it regards some acts as proofs of fraudulent intent, and it is the duty of the courts so to instruct the jury. It is not a sufficient answer to this to say, that in the case before us the judge instructed the jury, according to the second instruction asked, that the possession of personal property, if it continues in the possession of the vendor after sale, is prima facie evidence of the transaction being colorable and fictitious; but that the possession may be explained by circumstances. He should have gone on to characterize those circumstances as sufficient to explain the possession—as for instance, that the sickness of the slave Henry made his delivery impossible, or that there was something else to repel the presumption of fraud arising from the detention of the slave after the sale. Instead of doing this, and maintaining the force and 236 integrity of these legal presumptions, the jury are directed in the further instructions of the Judge to abandon all legal presumptions, and go into an inquiry as to fraud, as proved or not proved directly by facts.

So necessary is it to maintain the distinction between fraud in law and fraud in fact, that even in the State of New York, where the vexed questions growing out of this distinction were attempted to be settled by the enactment of a statute, declaring that "in all cases arising under the statute against fraudulent conveyances as respects creditors, the question of fraudulent intent shall be a question of fact and not of law," the courts have found it necessary still to maintain the distinction.

In the case of Cunningham v. Freeborn, 3d Paige's Reports, 557, the Chancellor said: "As this cause was heard on bill and answer only, the denial of all fraud in the execution of the assignment is conclusive evidence of the fact, in favor of the defendants, unless that allegation is inconsistent with or contradicted by some other statement or admission in the answer. But the Vice Chancellor was correct in supposing that the general denial of fraud was not sufficient, if it appeared upon the face of the assignment that its legal effect would be to delay, hinder and defraud the complainant and other creditors of the assignor. The Revised Statutes have not made the fraud itself a question of fact in all cases, neither indeed was it possible for the Legislature to do so; for when a party has intentionally executed an assignment or conveyance of his property, which must hinder and defraud his creditors of their just demands, the question whether the conveyance is fraudulent or not, necessarily becomes a question of law and not of fact." See,, also, 11th Wendell, 241, and 6th Hill, 433.

"So with respect to libels, where the fact of publication is incontestable, if the paper, which is the subject of indictment or information, has upon the face of it a natural and obvious tendency to promote sedition, it is no subject of inquiry by evidence whether the party had actually such intention in his mind or not. What passes in the mind of man is not scrutable by a human tribunal—it is only to be found out by his acts. Every man of sufficient understanding is to be responsible for his actions—he is supposed to be cognizant of the law as the rule by which every man is to be governed, and, therefore, it is his business to know it. If, therefore, a man publishes what the law says is treasonable, seditious or libellous, the intent with which he does it is mere matter of legal inference from the fact of publication, and is not the subject of proof either one way or the other." Mr. Justice Ashurst's judgment, Rex v. Dean of St. Asaph, 3d Term Reports, 428.

In the case now before us the court should have instructed the jury that, in the absence of positive proof of a fraudulent intent on the part of Love, they should infer it from his having retained possession of the slave after selling him absolutely, unless there was some evidence not of a general character negativing a fraudulent intent, but of a character to explain this possession which the law regards as a badge of fraud—as that the slave was too sick to be removed, or that, for the convenience of the grantee, John C. Love had kept him for a short time. The possession of the slave by the grantor for two years after the absolute sale, and for his own convenience, gives to the mere possession the force of more than mere prima facie evidence. So potent is the effect of presumptions of this character that, by the operation of the statute of frauds they must prevail, as we have already intimated, to establish a fraud, even where the jury are satisfied that there was no acutal fraudulent intent—much more when there is a mere absence of proof of actual fraud. In the case of Salmon and Bennett, 1 Connecticut Reports, 505, the Chief Justice says "though there "be no fraudulent intent, yet if the grantor was considera- "bly indebted and embarrassed at the time and on the eve 238 "of bankruptcy, then such conveyance will be void as to "creditors." The fraud thus established is sometimes and appropriately called statutory fraud, and this term implies that there may be a species of fraud, sufficient to avoid a conveyance, distinct and different from the moral, actual fraud into which the jury in this case were directed to inquire. It is the absence of all recognition of this species of fraud, in the instructions given in this case, that makes them erroneous.

The cases in the books which illustrate and enforce these views are very numerous and of very high authority, but they are so familiar to the profession that we shall refer only to a few of them. Twyne's case, reported in 3 Coke, 80, is the most celebrated of these, and in the commentaries on that case, in Smith's Leading Cases, by both the English and American editors, we find all the most important authorities arranged and digested, and the principles involved very clearly and learnedly discussed. The weight of the authorities is very decidedly in favor of the general principle that, in the sale of chattels, unless possession follows and accompanies the deed, it is fraudulent and void as to creditors.

In Edwards v. Harben, 2 Term Reports, 587, one Mercer executed a bill of sale to Harben, to whom he was indebted, of all his household furniture and effects, by way of security for his debt, with a parol agreement that if the debt were not paid within fourteen days, Harben might enter upon the effects and sell them at the end of that time.—Mercer, retaining possession, died eleven days thereafter, and on the next day Harben took possession of the effects and sold them. Edwards, another creditor of Mercer, brought suit against Harben, as executor de son tort of Mercer, and the question for the court was, whether the defendant be entitled to retain the proceeds of the effects or whether the bill of sale was void as against the creditors of Mercer. It was held that Harben was liable to be sued as executor de son tort, for the debts of the deceased; for, says Justice 239
Buller, "Unless possession accompanies and follows the "deed it is fraudulent and void. This case has been ar- "gued by the defendant's counsel as being a case in which "the want of possession is only evidence of fraud, and that "it was not such a circumstance, per se, as makes the trans- "action fraudulent in law. That this point which we have "considered, and we are all of opinion that if there is noth- "ing but the absolute conveyance without the possession, "that in point of law is fraudulent."

After the English rule on this subject had been thus discussed, declared and settled, it was repeatedly held that an absolute bill of sale of chattels, unaccompanied with possession, was fraudulent at law and void as against creditors. 2 Kent, 518.

In the Supreme Court of the United States the rule laid down in Edwards v. Harben has been approved and adopted, and it is declared that an absolute bill of sale is itself a fraud in law, unless possession accompanies and follows the deed. See Hamilton v. Russell, 1 Cranch, 305. "Modern "decisions," says Chief Justice Marshall in that case, "have "taken this question up upon principle, and have deter- "mined that an unconditional sale, where the possession "does not accompany and follow the deed is, with respect to "creditors, on the sound construction of the statute of Eliz- "abeth, a fraud, and should be so determined by the court." "We think that the intent of the statute is best promoted "by that construction, and that fraudulent conveyances "which are made to secure to a debtor a beneficial interest "while his property is protected from creditors, will be most "effectually prevented by declaring that an absolute bill of "sale is itself a fraud, unless possession accompanies and "follows the deed."

All the Federal Courts have followed the construction here laid down by the Chief Justice. In Virginia the same principle has been directly and repeatedly adjudged to be well settled. Alexander v. Deneale, 2 Munford, 341. Rob- 240 ertson v. Ewell, 3 Munford, 1. Land v. Jeffries, 5 Randolph, 211. In this latter case the real purpose and extent of the explanations allowed to be made to the jury to rebut the presumptive evidence arising from possession after an absolute sale, and the proper understanding of which will reconcile many apparently contradictory authorities on this point, are well defined. It was held "that when the grantor "of personal property remains in possession after an abso- "lute conveyance, the conveyance is prima facie fraudulent; "but such possession is not conclusive evidence of fraud, "barring every explanation. It will lay with the purchaser "to explain and rebut the presumption of fraud—as if the "the slave be purchased and not taken away for seven "months it may be shown that he was too sick to be re- "moved." The explanation must relate to the possession. If that is unexplained, it is conclusive evidence of a fraudulent intent.

The States of New York, (before the revised statutes,) Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Vermont recognize the rule as laid down in Hamilton v. Russell, as to absolute bills of sale, though differing among themselves on the subject of mortgages.

In New-Hampshire the distinction to which we have referred as made in the case of Land v. Jeffries is fully adopted. "When conveyances by one in debt are impeached, "the question is, was there a secret trust? and in absolute "sales possession is prima facie evidence of it, and if unex- "plained, conclusive." Parker v. Pattee, 4 New-Hampshire Reports, 176.

The South Carolina cases make a distinction where the purchaser is a creditor of the grantor, as is the relation of the parties in the case before us. Adopting the rule just referred to as prevailing in New-Hampshire, in the case of an absolute sale for a price paid, it was held that "where 241 "a pre-existing debt is the consideration, or a part of it, re"tention of possession and use is conclusive and intraversa-

"ble evidence of fraud." 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 49, and authorities referred to.

In Connecticut the true rule, as understood by this court, is well laid down in the case of Osborne v. Fuller, 14 Connecticut Reports, 530. There all the cases were reveiwed, the old principle is maintained, and the result of these decisions appears to be, "that the rule is one of policy, but not "of intention; that it is not enough that the jury find that "the sale was bona fide and for a good consideration, though "evidence of that is proper to be submitted to the jury to "repel actual fraud; there must be some reason for the re"tention, legally sufficient and satisfactory. The presump"tion of fraud is a presumption of law, and the law judges "of the cases in which it does not arise, and the jury are to "be instructed by the court as to the sufficiency and reasons "alleged to justify the retention."

In Maryland an early statute has relieved the courts of all difficulty upon this vexed question; but in Massachusetts and Maine and Ohio and Tennessee, North Carolina and Alabama, the courts have, to a greater or less extent, broken down the rule established in England and in the Federal courts, to which we have referred. But this court can see nothing in the reasonings by which the relaxation of the rule is attempted to be justified in the reports of those States, to shake their conviction that the other rule is more consonant with the objects of the statute and with the reason and policy of the law.

We conclude, then, by saying that we think the court below, on the trial of this case, erred in instructing the jury that the question of fraud upon which they were to pass was a question of mere intention. The retention of personal chattels, after a sale, is prima facie evidence of fraud, and the appropriate evidence to rebut the presumption is not the proof of the general good faith of the grantor, but 242 an explanation of the retention, to show either that it is consistent with the deed or is unavoidable, as in the case of a ship at sea, or is temporary, for the reasonable convenience of the grantee.

In reviewing the decisions of the other States we have not adverted to the diversity of opinion which exists in reference to delivery of possession of chattels which are mortgaged. We have a statute which requires all such mortgages to be recorded, and the notice thus given to the world is a negation of the fraudulent intent which the law infers from retention of possession after an absolute sale.

This case must be sent back for a new trial, and the Judge of the Circuit Court will instruct the jury according to the rule set forth in this opinion.

EDWARD C. BELLAMY, ET. AL., APPELLANTS, v. SAMUEL C. BELLAMY, APPELLEES.

The 28th section of the act of November 7th, 1828, in relation to proceedings in Chancery, was passed solely to provide for the enrollment of final decrees, and to invest them with the lien in that section mentioned, as well as to entitle a party to process thereon—appeals and petitions for rehearing being only incidentally mentioned, as prohibiting the enrollment, the lien and final process, where either of those steps are taken.

The 32d section of the same act, which provides for rules of practice in Chancery, does not give to parties the same right of appeal, and in the same cases, in which appeals were allowed from the High Court of Chancery in England to the House of Lords.

The act entitled "An act regulating the mode of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals in the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida," approved February 10th, 1832, is still in force, and by that act, as well as by the act of November 12th, 1828, an appeal is allowed only from a final judgment, sentence, or decree. An appeal does not lie, under any law in force in this state, from an interlocutory decree.

Where money is directed to be paid into court, or property to be delivered to 243 a receiver, as to a new trustee, or where anything is to be done which may be the subject of exception or appeal, the decree is not final, but interlocutory only.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of Jackson County, at the Fall Term, 1850, made by the Hon. GEORGE S. HAWKINS, Judge of the Western Circuit.

The decree appealed from was made in a cause wherein Samuel C. Bellamy was complainant, and Edward C. Bellamy and others defendants, and was as follows, viz:

This cause came on to be heard at the Spring Term, 1850, of this court, before the Honorable GEORGE S. HAWKINS, Judge of the Western Circuit, upon bill, answer of defendant, Edward C. Bellamy, replication, exhibits and proofs taken in this cause, and the same having been fully argued by counsel for both parties, and the matters in dispute duly considered, and the judgment and decree to be given in the premises fully advised of, his Honor doth think fit, and so orders, adjudges and decrees:—

First.—That the deed of conveyance of the said complainant to the said defendant, Edward C. Bellamy, bearing date the thirteenth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, (1845,) mentioned in and exhibited with said complainant's bill of complaint, for the reasons at large set forth in the opinion delivered in this cause, was and is wholly inoperative and void; and that the said Edward C. Bellamy should and ought to account for the trust property and funds conveyed by and possessed under the trust deed from the said complainant to the said Edward C. Bellamy, bearing date the nineteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, also mentioned in and exhibited with complainant's said bill of complaint.

Second.—It is further adjudged and decreed that the said defendant, Edward C. Bellamy, holds that portion of the trust property, and profits and issues thereof, purchased by him at the sales under execution by the sheriff of Jackson 244
County, on the first Mondays of January and February, 1846, subject to the uses and trusts limited and appointed in the aforesaid deed of the nineteenth of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, and is liable to account therefor.

Third.—It is further ordered and decreed that the defendant, Edward C. Bellamy, account before George F. Baltzell, Esq., one of the Masters in Chancery of this court, upon and at such time as shall be appointed by said master, of and concerning the aforesaid trust and the execution thereof, rendering a full, true and perfect account in detail of all and singular the trust property and funds committed to his charge, and the rents, issues, profits, crops and proceeds issuing out of the same, or accruing therefrom which he, or any other person for him, or by his consent or procurement, received therefrom, or which he might, could and ought, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, to have received. Said accounting to be upon due notice to the complainant or his solicitor, and according to the usual mode of proceedings in the office of the master; and that said master make report of said accounting, and the evidence taken before him thereon, with all convenient speed.

Fourth.—It is further ordered and decreed that the said Edward C. Bellamy be removed from his said trust, and ousted of his said trust estate; and that he deliver over to the receiver hereinafter appointed all of the said trust property and funds, and the rents, issues and profits, and crops arising from or issuing out of the said trust property, now in his hands, power, possession or control, and thereafter stand and remain restrained and enjoined from any interference with, control over, or management of, the said trust property, until the further order of this court in the premises.

Fifth.—It is further ordered and decreed that Frederick R. Pittman, of the county of Jackson be appointed Recei-

in the penalty of ten thousand dollars, (10,000,) with good and sufficient security, to be approved of by the master aforesaid and conditioned for the due and faithful performance of his duties; and that, said Receiver shall, after qualification, with all convenient speed, demand and receive from the said Edward C. Bellamy the trust property hereinbefore mentioned, and shall rent out the plantation, and hire out the slaves at public auction by the year, until the further order of the court in the premises, and shall render and file in the office of the clerk of this court annual accounts and returns of his actings and doings in the premises, and of the amounts of funds and securities in hand.

Sixth.—It is further ordered and decreed that the said George F. Baltzell, master as aforesaid, do also proceed to ascertain and report to this court, the names of the creditors of the said Samuel C. Bellamy, who are entitled to the benefits of the trust estate heretofore conveyed by the said Samuel C. Bellamy to the said Edward C. Bellamy as aforesaid, with the amounts due to each respectively, and the respective order of priorities; and for this purpose, the said master shall make advertisement for the presentation of such claims, within such times as he shall deem reasonable and proper in the premises; and that all further directions are reserved until the coming in of said reports.

Archer, for Appellee, moved—

To dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the decree was not final but interlocutory only, and that, by the law of this State, an appeal does not lie from an interlocutory decree. The argument of the solicitor for appellee, and the authorities referred to and relied on in support of the motion, are stated in the opinion delivered by the court.

Long (with whom was Finley,) for Appellant, resisted—

The motion to dismiss upon the two grounds stated in the opinion of the court.

Upon the first ground, he cited the Chancery act of 1828, 246 as quoted in the opinion, and showed by authorities not questioned, that, by the practice of the High Court of Chancery in England, interlocutory decrees might be appealed from.

Upon the second point, he relied upon the principle of the case cited on the other side, from 6th Howard's Reports, the substance of which is stated in the opinion of this court. He also cited and relied upon a case in one of the Alabama Reports, as in all respects similar to this, in which the appeal was allowed. He also cited 2d Daniel's Chancery Practice, 1199, and notes and authorities there cited, to prove that a decree is final to the extent that it is ordered to be executed, and contended that, upon principle and sound reason, as well as upon authority, a decree is final as to such part of the case as does not remain open for further proof or argument in the court rendering it, or where the court does not design again to adjudicate the point. Such a decree, though there may remain other questions in the cause to be adjudicated for other purposes, is final, if execution is to follow. An appeal alone supersedes the execution of a decree, and to dismiss such an appeal, is equivalent to a denial of the right of appeal. In this cause, it is plain that the decree takes from E. Bellamy the property, without any indemnity to him, by bond or otherwise, to pay such damages as he may thereby incur, and contemplates no future action upon that question. The property is only given to a Receiver, in order to determine how much of the same complainant's creditors shall have, and how much will remain for him. Defendant is turned out of possession by the terms of the decree, and that to be followed by instant execution, if the supersedeas produced by this appeal is dissolved by dismissing the appeal. The execution of this decree may ruin defendant, and he is wholly without remedy or redress, even although years hence this court may decide that he was wrongfully dispossessed.

Mr. Long also contended that if this decree was thus 247 made final prematurely, and ordered to be executed too soon, because before an appeal would lie on the whole cause, still this court ought to allow this appeal, to enable it to reform the decree in this respect, and thus prevent the deprivation of a constitutional right, and the ruin of a citizen.

LANCASTER, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court as follows:

This case comes by appeal from Jackson Circuit Court, and a motion made to dismiss the appeal because the decree rendered in the case below is not final.

The appellants, by counsel, contend that this court has jurisdiction to entertain appeals in chancery cases from interlocutory decrees, and if not, that the decree rendered in this case is final and the appeal is well taken.

Let us first consider the right of a party to appeal to this court from an interlocutory decree. It is contended by counsel for appellant that the right to appeal may be inferred from the provisions of the 28th section of the chancery act of November 7th, 1828, (Duval's Compilation, 135, Thompson's Digest, 451) and that the 6th (properly 32d) section in the same act, (Duval's Compilation, 137 and Thompson's Digest, 459,) which provides for rules of practice in chancery, gives to parties the same right of appeal, and in the same cases, in which appeals were allowed from the High Court of Chancery, in England, to the House of Lords.

It may be here remarked that the 28th section of the chancery act referred to, was passed solely to provide for enrolments of final decrees in chancery and to invest them with the powers of lien in that section mentioned and to entitle a party to process or other proceedings thereon; and appeals and petitions for rehearing were but incidentally mentioned in the section—not to provide or invest parties with rights which these proceedings might respectively se- 248 cure, but simply where a party had taken either of these steps according to law, to prohibit the enrollment and its consequent lien, and the final process which the other party might issue thereon.

The view taken of the section 32, in relation to the rules of practice is not more satisfactory; for, conceding that the House of Lords entertained appeals from the High Court of Chancery, in England, upon interlocutory decrees, that was done on petition to the Lords, setting forth all the proceedings desired to be appealed from, which petition and its statements the Lord Chancellor was required by the Lords to admit or deny. Being admitted, the Lords had the case before them, and might, in the plentitude of unlimited power, proceed as they thought fit. No such power is known to have been at any time vested in the late Court of Appeals or in this court. That section, in terms, provides "that the "rules of practice in the courts of equity of the United "States as prescribed by the Supreme Court thereof under "the act of Congress of the 8th May, 1792, where pro- "vision is not made by this act shall be rules for the prac- "tice of the courts of this Territory when exercising equity "jurisdiction. And when the rules of practice so directed "by the Supreme Court and the provisions of this act do "not apply, the practice of the courts shall be regulated by "the practice of the High Court of Chancery, in England."

Now, if it be said that the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States is not a right established by a rue of that court, but a right given by act of Congress, and therefore not one of the rules adopted into practice here by the passage of the above recited section, so also, with equal force and truth, it may be said the right of appeal from the High Court of Chancery, in England, is not a rule of practice of said court, but a rule of right imposed on the Court by the arrogated omnipotent power of Parliament.

Rules of practice are prescribed by the Courts, for the more safe and convenient transaction of business; but rules of right are prescribed by the Legislature, the better to ascertain what rights are reserved or secured to the person. We must, therefore, look elsewhere for the right of appeal.

The fifth section of the act of Congress, entitled "an act to amend the several acts for the establishment of the Territorial government of Florida," approved May 15th, 1826, after providing for writs of error and appeal to the Court of Appeals, of the Territory on all final decisions of the Superior Courts arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, where the matter is of the value of one hundred dollars exclusive of costs, goes on further to provide, "and in all other cases writs of error and appeal may be "taken and prosecuted from said Superior Courts to the "Court of Appeals in such manner as the Legislative Coun-"cil have directed or shall direct." By an act of the Legislative Council, entitled "an act regulating the mode of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals in the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida," approved November 12th, 1828, just five days after the chancery act before noticed was approved, the manner of taking appeals was provided for. As much of the first section of that act as is here deemed necessary is in these words, viz: "That "if a party in either of the Superior Courts of this Terri-"tory shall feel aggrieved by a final judgment, sentence or "decree, made or pronounced by any or either of said courts, "it shall and may be lawful for such party, at the time "when such judgment, sentence or decree is rendered or "pronounced, to obtain in Court, &c., his appeal." See pamphlet Laws of the year 1828, page 44-5. This section of this act, as far as after diligent examination we have been enabled to discover, was only repealed by an act of the same title, approved February 10th, 1832, and which is now in force. By both laws an appeal is allowed only from a final judgment, sentence or decree.

But it is contended the phrases were used loosely by the Legislature, and only meant to provide for appeals at com-250 mon law and not in chancery. The jurisdiction of the courts from whose decision these laws meant to provide an appeal, extended as well to equity as law, and when the phrase is used, "shall feel aggrieved by a final judgment, sentence or decree, made or pronounced by any or either of said courts," it is difficult to imagine the Legislature meant to restrict the right of appeal to less than the extent of the jurisdiction appealed from. But the second section of the act of February 10th, 1832, uses the terms judgment given, decree rendered or sentence pronounced, showing familiarity with these terms and using them in their legal acceptation. Moreover, there is no other act on the statute book providing for appeals in chancery cases, except the act of 11th February, 1832, Thompson's Digest, 462. Can it be presumed that a Legislature that so carefully provided for appeals on judgments at common law should have totally failed to provide a similar remedy from decrees in chancery?

The act of 11th February, 1832, provides that appeals may be taken from final decrees in two years; but it also provides that, if not taken in the time fixed by law in other cases, they shall not operate as a supersedeas, except on an order of a Judge of the Supreme Court. Now, will any one contend that an appeal taken from a final decree of the Circuit Court, conformably to the act of 10th February, 1832, will not operate as a supersedaes, and that a party below may still proceed as if no such appeal had been taken, or that such appeal ought to be dismissed as not authorized by law? We are clearly of opinion that the right to bring appeals into this court is declared and provided in the act of 10th February, 1832, as well in chancery cases as in those at law, and, in relation to final decrees in chancery is somewhat extended and modified by the act of the 11th of the same month; and that the right under the former act is by its terms limited to final judgments, sentences or decrees, while by the latter it is limited to final decrees. We are equally clear that no appeal lies to this court from an interlocutory decree.

case appealed from is, in its character, interlocutory or final.

The acts of Congress providing for appeals from the Circuit to the Supreme Courts of the United States, give the right only on final judgments or decrees. The question, therefore, as to what are interlocutory and what final decrees, has received considerable attention from that court. In the case of Perkins v. Fourniquet et al., 6 Howard, 206-8, that appellees, children of the deceased wife of appellant, alleged that during her life there existed, in the State of Louisiana, between her and the appellant, her husband, a community of acquets and gains. The appellant, by his answer, denied any such community. Upon the hearing, the court decreed that the community did exist and that the appellees, a part of the heirs, had a right to recover their proportion of all their deceased mother's rights of community which accrued during her coverture with appellant, and referred the matter to a master in chancery to take and report an account of the acquets and gains, prescribing fully the manner in which the lands acquired were to be divided and the accounts taken. All other matters in controversy between the parties were reserved until the coming in of the report of the master. The court thereon said: "This clearly is "not a final decree in any respect. It is the common interloc-"utory order or decree passed by courts of chancery in cases "of this kind, and it is absolutely necessary to prepare the "case for a final hearing and final decree, wherever the "complainant is entitled to partition of property or on ac-"count."

In the case of Pulliam et al. v. Christian, 6 Howard, 212, where the bill was filed to annul and vacate a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors and a decree was passed to set aside said deed, the court said: "This decree is final only "as to the trust deed. All the matters arising under the "trust are referred to a commissioner for a statement of the "account, to enable the court to enter a final decree. There "is no sale or change of the property ordered, which can 252 "operate injuriously to the parties;" and the decree, not being final as to the whole matter in controversy, the appeal was dismissed.

In the case of Young et al. v. Smith et al., 15 Peters, 287, the bill was filed by residuary legatees against the executors of an estate. The matter was referred to a master to take an account. He made his report—it was referred back—he again reported, and exceptions filed were disallowed. The Circuit Court decreed that the report should be accepted and that the complainants should have execution for the sum reported in the hands of the executors, and, as to the residue of the debts due to the estate, as soon as they or part of them should be collected, the amount should be paid into court, for distribution to be made under the direction of the court. The Supreme Court held, (Mr. Justice Story delivering the opinion,) that this decree is an interlocutory and not a final decree, in the sense of the act of Congress. It does not dispose of the whole matter in controversy between the parties.

In the case of Brown v. Swann, 9 Peters, 1, the complainant filed her bill for injunction against a judgment at law of defendant, alleging usury and part payment, and the injunction was granted, which was afterwards in part dissolved; and afterwards, upon a hearing of the bill, answer, demurrer of the defendant, exhibits and depositions, the court decreed that the demurrer be overruled—that the complainant has sustained her allegations of usury—that payments of a part of the judgment at law had been made—that there remains a specified sum yet due—and that a claim for a further credit of fifty dollars on that sum, of which the court is not sufficiently advised, is demanded by complainant. Thereupon, the court adjudged and decreed that the injunction awarded the complainant be made perpetual for all except the specified sum—that the defendant be at liberty to proceed under her judgment at law for the 253 specified sum, except the fifty dollars claimed as a credit by the complainant; and this cause was continued for further consideration as to the said sum of fifty dollars. In this state of the case an appeal was had, and Mr. Chief Justice Marshall delivered the opinion of the court, dismissing the appeal with costs, because the appeal was granted before there was a final decree in the case.

Bellamy and others vs. Bellamy.—Opinion of Court.

In the case of Bernard et al. v. Gibson, 7 Peters, 650 to 658, Mr. Justice McLean delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court. The decree appealed from awarded against the defendants a perpetual injunction, restraining them from constructing or using in any manner, or from selling or disposing of certain planing machines which the complainant alleged he had the exclusive right to, under letters patent; and it was referred to a master to report what damages the complainant had sustained by the infringement of his patent by the defendants—the report to be made in term-time to the court, or in vacation to one of the Judges; and the question of costs, and all other questions in the cause, were reserved until the coming in of the master's report. The court say the decree in this case is not final within the decisions of this court. The injunction prayed for was made perpetual, but there was a reference to a master to ascertain the damages by reason of the infringement; the bill was not dismissed, nor was there a decree for costs.

The case of Forgay et al. v. Conrad, 6 Howard, 201, seems to recognize other principles than those laid down in the foregoing cases. In that case all the questions between the parties are finally adjudicated and disposed of—execution awarded against one of the defendants, and certain lands and negroes decreed to be delivered by them to complainant, as assignee in bankruptcy—the bill being retained to have an account of the rent of the lands and hire of the slaves, stated by a master. The decree concludes as follows: "So much of said bill as contains or relates to matters "hereby referred to the master for report, is hereby retained 254 "for further decree in the premises; and so much of said "bill as is not now, nor has been heretofore adjudged and "decreed upon, and which is not above retained for the "purposes aforesaid, be dismissed without prejudice, and "that the said defendants do pay the costs." This decree, (Mr. Chief Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the court,) is held to be final, so as to authorize an appeal. He says, according to the last paragraph in the decree, the bill is merely retained for the purpose of adjusting the accounts referred to the master; in all other respects the whole of the matters brought into controversy are finally disposed of, as to all of the defendants, and the bill as to them is no longer pending. "If these appellants, therefore, must wait until "the accounts are reported by the master and confirmed by the court, they will be subjected to an irreparable injury; for the lands and slaves which they claim will be taken out of their possession and sold, and the proceeds distributed among the creditors of the bankrupt, before they can have an opportunity of being heard in this court in defence of their rights." The Chief Justice says, "When the decree "decides the right to the property in contest and directs it "to be delivered up by the defendant to the complainant, "or directs it to be sold, or directs the defendant to pay a "certain sum of money to the complainant, and the com- "plainant is entitled to have such decree carried immedi- "ately into execution, the decree must be regarded as a final "one to that extent, and authorizes an appeal to this court, "although the bill is retained for the purpose of adjusting, "by a further decree, the accounts between the parties."— "This rule, of course," he says, "does not extend to cases "where money is directed to be paid into court, or property "to be delivered to a receiver, or property held in trust to "be delivered to a new trustee appointed by the court, or "to cases of a like description. Orders of that kind are "frequently and necessarily made in the progress of a cause, "but they are interlocutory only, and intended to preserve "the subject matter in dispute from dilapidation or waste 255 "and to keep it within the control of the court, until the "rights of the parties can be adjudicated by a final decree."

The laws of Florida providing for appeals, is similar in its terms to that of the United States, and allows appeals from such final decisions as they are allowable from in the Supreme Court of the United States. We now have seen the construction given to the act of Congress by the Supreme Court; and considering the great learning, ability and virtue which have ever characterized the members of that bench, we do not feel at liberty to give a different construction from that they have given upon the same identical legal terms—more especially when that construction, corresponds with our own best judgment of the proper import of the terms used in the law. And we think, moreover, if it had been the object of the Legislature to guard against a multiplicity of appeals in the same case, no form of words could have been well devised better calculated to promote that end. We do not, therefore, concur with the court in Alabama, in distinguishing between the final judgment and the last judgment, so as to make that a final judgment or decree, which must needs be followed by another judgment or decree, which last may itself be the subject of appeal.

We will now look into the decree appealed from in this case. That decree adjudges the deed of conveyance of the complainant to the defendant, bearing date the 13th day of December, 1845, exhibited with the bill, to be wholly inoperative and void; that the defendant, Edward C. Bellamy, should and ought to account for the trust property and funds, conveyed by and possessed under the trust deed, bearing date the 19th day of November, 1844; that the defendant, E. C. Ballamy, holds that portion of the trust property, and profits and issues thereof, purchased by him at sales under execution, by the sheriff of Jackson county, on the first Mondays of January and February, 1846, subject to the uses and trusts limited and appointed in the deed of the 256 19th day of November, 1844. It is further decreed that the defendant, E. C. Bellamy, account before George F. Baltzell, a Master in Chancery, of and concerning the said trust, rendering a full, true and perfect account in detail of all and singular the trust property and funds committed to his charge, and the rents, issues, profits, crops and proceeds, issuing out of the same, or accruing therefrom; that he be removed from his said trust, and ousted of his said trust estate, and that he deliver over to the Receiver hereinafter appointed, all of the said trust property and funds, and the rents, issues and profits, and crops, arising from, or issuing out of, the said trust property, and that he stand and remain restrained and enjoined from any interference with, control over, or management of, the said trust property, until the further order of the court in the premises. It is further ordered that Frederick C. Pittman be appointed Receiver of the court in this cause, upon his entering into bond in the penalty of ten thousand dollars, with good and sufficient security to be approved by the master, conditioned for the due and faithful performance of his duties. It is then ordered that the Receiver shall take possession of said trust property, and rent out the plantation, and hire out the slaves at public auction by the year, until the further order of the court, and shall render and file in the clerk's office of the court, annual accounts of his actings and doings in the premises, and of the amount of funds and securities in hand. It was further decreed that the master proceed to ascertain and report to the court, the names of the creditors entitled to the benefits of the said trust estate, with the amount due to each respectively, and their respective order of priorities, and to advertise, in a reasonable and proper manner, for the presentation of such claims; and all further directions are reserved until the coming in of said reports.

It is very plain that this decree is not more, or so nearly 257 a final decree, as any of those we have before mentioned as having been decided by the Supreme Court to be not final, nor is there any precise similitude between it and the case of Forgay, et al., v. Conrad, which will authorize us to entertain this appeal on the authority of that case. There the property was decreed to be delivered to the complainant—here to a Receiver of the court. There the property, if received by the complainant, who was assignee of a bankrupt, would have gone into distribution among the creditors of that bankrupt—here it is retained in the custody, and under the control of the court. There if the appellants waited to appeal, until the accounts were reported by the master, and confirmed by the court, they were subject to an irreparable injury—here no such injury can ensue. It was, moreover, laid down in that case, that where money is directed to be paid into court, or property to be delivered to a receiver, or property held in trust to be delivered to a new trustee appointed by the court, or in cases of a like description, such orders or decrees are interlocutory only, and are frequently and necessarily made in the progress of a cause. We think, also, the Supreme Court went as far in assuming jurisdiction of the appeal, in the case of Forgay v. Conrad, as they would willingly go, and were rather surprised into an assumption of jurisdiction, by the perception of irreparable injury to the appellants, if they refused to entertain the appeal, than by any strong opinion that the decree was final; because they say, "undoubtedly it is not final in the strict technical sense of that term," and because they admonish chancellors in the Circuit Courts not to shape their interlocutory decrees so as to give them a final effect. The opinion delivered in the case of Forgay v. Conrad is an able and lucid one, and deserves well the serious consideration of every chancellor, when engaged in making an interlocutory decree.

There are many things required by the decree given in this cause to be done, which, when done, may be the sub-258 ject of exception, and, consequently, of appeal. If an appeal should be taken at every step, where a party may feel dissatisfied or aggrieved, there is no foreseeing when a cause would end, and the delays of chancery would become as justly a blot and reproach on the jurisprudence of this country, as they now are, and long have been, to that of England.

We consider the decree appealed from in this case as an interlocutory, and not a final judgment, sentence or decree. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, and Samuel C. Bellamy, the appellee, must recover his costs.

DANIEL FRY, APPELLANT, v. NELSON HAWLEY, APPELLEE.

H. and A. having obtained a contract to carry the United States mail from the port of Apalachicola to Chattahoochee, on the Apalachicola river, for four years, at a yearly stipend of about $2,600; and H. having informed one F. that he was desirous of purchasing a steamboat for the service, and that it would require about $6,000 to purchase one suitable in all respects, and that he, H., was to furnish one-half of said sum, and A. the other half, and that each was to own a moiety in the said contract and boat; and F. agreeing with H. to furnish, and actually paying into the hands of H. one-half of the sum which he, H., had agreed to furnish or $1,500—H. binding himself to give to F. an interest with himself to the extent of the amount placed in his hands, and that he, F., should share in the profits accruing from said contract, in proportion to that amount, "all losses to be borne equally;" and the said boat having been built under the superintendence of A., and at an expense of $14,900, $6,000 of which sum was paid, and the balance secured by a mortgage upon the boat, which A. was authorized by H. to execute:—Held, that F. acquired only an interest in said boat in proportion to the amount furnished by him—that is, about one tenth, instead of one-fourth, which was the amount of interest claimed by F.—Held, also that, although the balance of the purchase money was paid by the profits of the steamboat, the extent of the interest of F. therein was only one-tenth, he not being liable upon the contract of purchase, the boat having been built under the direction and superintendence of A., and purchased by A., acting for himself and H. 259

The Hon. THOMAS DOUGLAS, Judge of the Eastern Circuit, and the Hon. J. WAYLES BAKER, Judge of the Middle Circuit, sat at the hearing of this case, in the place of Justices THOMPSON and SEMMES, who had been of counsel in this cause.

The following statement of the case was made by DOUGLAS, Justice, who delivered the opinion of the court:—

This suit was instituted by Daniel Fry, the complainant, against Nelson Hawley, Benjamin Allen and Benjamin S. Hawley, defendants, to obtain the specific execution of a contract. The facts are as follows: viz: one Henry Allen and the defendant, Nelson Hawley, had entered into a contract with the United States, to carry a mail between Apalachicola and Chattahoochee, in Florida, for four years, at a yearly stipend or sum of about $2,600; and for the purpose of performing the said contract, as well as the business of carrying merchandize and conveying passengers, entered into an agreement on the 8th day of May, 1847, which agreement, under the hands and seals of the parties, is as follows, viz:

STATE OF FLORIDA—FRANKLIN COUNTY.

This agreement made and entered into between Henry Allen, of the State and county aforesaid, and Nelson Hawley, of the aforesaid State, and county of Gadsden, witnesseth—That the said Henry Allen and Nelson Hawley, being jointly interested in a contract with the United States, for carrying the mail for four years, commencing on the first day of July next, on the Apalachicola river, between the city of Apalachicola and Chattahoochee, on said river, known as route No. 2523, all in the State aforesaid, and in order to carry out said contract, to agree that the said Henry Allen, on his part, is to furnish in cash the sum of three thousand dollars, and the said Nelson Hawley, on his part, is to furnish the like sum of three thousand dollars. And it is further understood and agreed that the said money, say 260 six thousand dollars, is to be paid in the hands of the said Henry Allen, and he is to proceed at once to New Orleans, and if necessary up the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, for the purpose of purchasing a suitable steamboat to carry out the conditions of the said mail contract—using his judgment and means to the best advantage in making a selection and purchase of said boat; and if found upon examination to be for the advantage of the parties interested to pay more than $6,000 for said boat, he, the said Allen, shall be authorized to give a joint note for the balance required, or secure the parties by lien upon the boat, as may be deemed most expedient, all necessary expenses accruing in purchasing said boat to be shared equally by both the above named parties. And it is understood and agreed that said Allen is to have command as master of said boat, or boats, at a reasonable salary, say one hundred dollars per month, and to give his undivided attention to the interest of the contractors. And it is further agreed that Daniel Fry is to be employed in the capacity of engineer, to furnish his second, at a salary of one hundred and thirty-five dollars per month, so long as he faithfully discharges his duties in the above capacity, to the satisfaction of the master of said boat. And on the same day, (8th day of May, 1847,) after said agreement had been executed, an arrangement was made by the said Nelson Hawley and the complainant, as evidenced by a receipt given by the said Hawley, which is in the following words, viz: "Received of Daniel Fry fifteen hundred dollars, to be invested in a steamboat by Captain Allen, for the purpose of carrying the mail between Apalachicola and Chattahoochee, for the term of four years, commencing July 1, 1847; Nelson Hawley being jointly interested with Captain Henry Allen in the above mentioned contract, binds himself to give to the said Fry an interest with himself, to the extent of the amount placed in his hands, and in proportion to that amount, he is to share in the profits accruing 261 from said contract. Said Nelson Hawley further binds himself to consult and advise with said Fry in all matters of importance in regard to the said joint interest—all losses to be equally borne. (Signed) Nelson Hawley."

This receipt contains the agreement, the specific execution of which is sought to be enforced by this suit; the complainant claiming that he is entitled to a conveyance of one equal moiety, or one-half of the interest of Nelson Hawley in the said steamboat, and to one-fourth of the nett profits of the whole contract, in virtue of said contract or receipt. Nelson Hawley, on the other hand, contends that the complainant is only entitled to one-tenth interest in the said steamboat, and one-tenth of the nett profits of the said contract. Nelson Hawley placed the sum of $3,000 in the hands of the said Henry Allen, and he proceeded to Cincinnati, for the purpose of purchasing the desired steamboat, but not being able to purchase one which, in his judgment, would suit the business, he contracted for the building of one, to be called the Quincy, for the sum of $14,900, three or four thousand dollars of which (the exact sum is not stated) was paid in cash, and $6,000 in drafts or bills representing cash, and the balance of the cost was secured by a mortgage executed by said Allen on the boat, he having contracted for and taken a title to her in his own name alone. The boat was completed and brought to Apalachicola river about the month of October, 1847, the said Henry Allen acting as master, and the complainant as engineer; and it appears by the proof in this cause that he has continued in that service ever since, with his brother as his assistant, at a salary of $135 per month. The said steamboat commenced running and carrying the mail as contemplated after her arrival in the Apalachicola river, under the command of the said Henry Allen, who, some short time after her said arrival, conveyed one-half interest in her to the said Nelson Hawley. It appears by a balance sheet of the said steamer, annexed to the answer of the said Hawley, that, on the 22d day of July, 1848, the boat had made a sufficient amount of profits to pay off the balance then due 262 of her purchase money, amounting to $8,900, and leave a sum to her credit of $988.91; and the report of a special master, to whom the matter had been referred by a decretal order of the Circuit Court on the 27th of December, 1849, shows that, on the first day of January of that year, (when a receiver had been appointed,) "the profits of the steamer Quincy from her arrival upon the said river had been $12,-930.51." The special master also reported (under the said decretal order) that the costs of the said steamer, on her arrival at Apalachicola, was $15,000; that the sum advanced by the complainant, Daniel Fry, was $1,500; that this amount bears a proportion to the whole cost of the boat of one-tenth, and that the complainant having contributed one-tenth of the original cost, is entitled to one-tenth of the profits, say $1,293.65. The report of the master was confirmed, and the court "decreed that Nelson Hawley, defendant in this suit, by good and sufficient deed, to be prepared by the master in chancery, do convey to complainant, Daniel Fry, one-tenth interest in and to the steamboat Quincy, her tackle, apparel and furniture; and further, that the receiver theretofore appointed in this case, pay over to the said Daniel Fry one-tenth portion of the nett proceeds of said steamboat up to the present time—deducting whatever sums may have been paid or received by the said Fry out of said proceeds, and that the balance of said funds in the hands of said receiver be paid over to said defendant, Nelson Hawley. And it was further ordered that the injunction in this case be dissolved, and that defendant do pay the costs of this suit, except the cost of said receiver, which is taxed at fifty dollars, and twenty dollars to be paid to Samuel W. Spencer, special master, and which it was ordered that complainant do pay. From this decree, the complainant appealed to this court.

Maxwell, for the complainant and appellant.

For the complainant it is contended that, by virtue of this agreement between Hawley and himself, he is entitled to 263 an equal share in the boat with Hawley and to an equal participation in the profits or earnings, and that the agreement is susceptible of no other fair interpretation.

The agreement between complainant and Hawley is founded upon the agreement or contract between Allen and Hawley, to which it refers. The latter constituted a joint undertaking between the two parties to carry the United States mail, passengers and merchandise, of which the capital or joint stock is $6,000 in money, in equal moities of $3,000 each. Although it may have been intended that they were to be tenants in common of the boat when purchased or built, yet it is so blended with the employment that the contract may be termed a quasi partnership.

The usual relation of part owners of a vessel is that of tenants in common, but they may become partners. When a person is to be considered as part owner or as partner in a ship depends upon circumstances. 3 Kent's Commentaries, 154, 155. Holderness vs. Sheckels, 8 Barnewall & Creswell, 612. Lamb vs. Durant, 12 Massachusetts, 54. Harding v. Foxcroft, 6 Greenleaf, 77. Seabrook v. Rose, 2 Hill's Chancery, 555.

But whether the parties are to be considered as partners or part owners is not material to this controversy—the distinction between the two characters will not affect the claim of complainant. So far as his rights are involved herein, there is no difference between the two positions. Hawley receives from Fry $1,500 in cash, and, in consideration of the sum so paid, binds himself to give Fry an interest with himself in the contract he had entered into with Allen to the extent of the amount so placed in his hands, and in proportion to that amount he (Fry) is to share in the profits accruing from said contract, and stipulates that all losses shall be equally borne; and this contract the complainant seeks to enforce.

It is admitted that every contract, deriving its force from the mutual assent of the parties, is to be interpreted accord- 264 ing to the intention of the parties, so far as it is legal and mutually understood, (Story on Contracts, second edition, §634;) and that the exposition is to be upon the whole contract, and not upon disjointed parts taken separately. Ibid, §657, and authorities cited.

Yet it is equally true that, where the language of the instrument is neither uncertain nor ambiguous, it is to be expounded according to its apparent import, and is not to be warped from the ordinary meaning of its terms, in order to harmonize it with uncertain suppositions, in regard either to the probable intention of the parties contracting, or to the probable changes which they would have made in their contract, had they foreseen certain contingencies. Whenever the words are clear and definite, they must be understood according to their grammatical construction, and in their ordinary meaning. Story on Contracts, second edition § 639 2 Evan's Pothier on Obligations, 37.

The rule that "parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument," is said to admit of an exception when, in equity, a party seeks a specific performance of an agreement, the defendant may show fraud, accident or mistake—that such a decree would be against equity and justice, by parol evidence of the circumstances, even though they contradict the writing. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 296, a.

In this case there is no fraud, accident or mistake in reducing the contract to writing alleged in the answer of defendant; and I am willing that the language employed may be "read by the light of surrounding circumstances, in order more perfectly to understand the intent and meaning of the parties;" and shall confidently contend that the decree which the complainant seeks for is neither inequitable nor unjust.

Hawley's agreement with Fry is made with special reference to the agreement or contract he had made with

Allen; and to understand the meaning of the terms, "an interest with himself" in it, "to the extent of the amount placed in his hands," it is only necessary to ascertain what was the interest of Hawley in the joint concern of Allen and Hawley, and what proportion the contribution of Fry bears to it; and in this examination I invoke the whole of the two instruments, and not disjointed and separate parts of either.

The evidence discloses, and it is also conceded, that Hawley was entitled to a moiety of the boat, by reason of the contribution of one-half the stipulated capital, say $3,000, as between himself and Allen. Now, Fry's contribution being $1,500, or one-half thereof, does it not make the extent of his interest with Hawley just one-half—in other words equal with Hawley ? And is not this confirmed by the subsequent stipulation that all losses are to be equally borne? Hawley's interpretation that it is the proportion which $1,500 bears to the whole cost of the boat is a strained one—if indeed, that can be called an interpretation which is not sustained by the language of the agreement, per se, nor with "the aid of the light of the surrounding circumstances."

It was conceded in argument below, and so considered by the court, that if the boat had cost but $6,000, the amount of the capital, the complainant would have been entitled to one-fourth of the whole, and an equal share with defendant, Hawley. The fact that the boat cost $15,000, does not at all vary the result of our interpretation; for it is not pretended that Hawley, or Allen, or any one else contributed any additional money to the capital to be invested in the enterprize, but the residue of the cost of the boat, over the amount of the capital, was provided for by a hypothecation of the whole boat, which included as well Fry's interest, or contribution, as that of Allen and Hawley; and from the nett profits, this debt was paid off on the 28th July, 1848.

The learned Judge below seemed to consider that the cost 266 of the boat exceeding the capital produced an ambiguity, which could only be cleared away by parol evidence, and that it must be considered as latent. With all due respect, I think this is erroneous. This circumstance produced no change in the contract—could not render it obscure, or affect the mutual rights of the parties. At the time of the contract, it was not definitely ascertained what would be the cost of the boat, although it seemed to be within the idea of the parties that the capital contributed might be sufficient. The agreement between Allen and Hawley, executed the same day, and we may presume immediately prior to the agreement in controversy, and referred to in the latter, provides that the capital is to be paid into the hands of Allen in cash, and he is to proceed to New Orleans, up the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, for the purpose of purchasing a suitable steamboat; and if found upon examination to be for the advantage of the parties interested to pay more than $6,000 for said boat, he, the said Allen, shall be authorized to give a joint note for the balance required, or secure the parties by lien on the boat, as may be deemed most expedient." It thus appears that the agreement is a continuing one—it was for the purchase of a suitable boat, and would, of necessity, embrace any boat that might be purchased, regardless of the cost. The price was unknown, and the investment was confined to the skill and discretion of Allen. If the capital had been increased by additional contributions from Hawley and Allen, then Hawley might have some foundation for his pretensions, if Fry, upon application, had declined to increase his contribution in similar proportion; but this is not the case—there was no change in the original contract.

Hawley never ventured any more money in the enterprize; but if he had advanced more money, otherwise than as a contribution to the capital, he would have been a creditor of the company only, to the amount so advanced and interest. Conwell v. Sandige, 5 Dana, 212.

Fry vs. Hawley.—Argument of Counsel.

A Court of Equity will not give a strained construction 267 to a contract to create a societas leonina. Upon what principle of equity, can Hawley's interest, under his agreement with Fry of May 8, 1847, be greater than that of Fry ? The learned judge below says, "the evidence shows that Fry only put into the original venture fifteen hundred dollars, and to that interest and rateable profits, he is entitled." Is it not also true, that the evidence shows Hawley only put into the original venture fifteen hundred dollars ? and it is respectfully asked, upon what principle of equity, justice, reason, or common sense it is, that Hawley's $1,500 is entitled to four-tenths of the boat and profits, and that Fry's $1,500 is only entitled to one-tenth of the boat and profits ? and this, too, in face of Hawley's stipulation in the agreement, that Fry is to have "an interest with himself, to the extent of the amount ($1,500) placed in his hands, and in proportion to that amount he is to share in the profits accruing from said contract," and "all losses to be equally borne ?" In the absence of all stipulation, equity would divide the profits, or nett gains, according to the contributions to the capital, or equally. It is only by express agreement and stipulation, that one partner can claim a larger share of profits than his co-partner. 3 Kent's Commentaries, 28,29.

Why fix Fry's interest at one-tenth of the boat, except upon the hypothesis that the capital invested was $15,000, which is contradicted by the testimony ? The capital of the company was settled at $6,000—to this extent only did the parties contribute. The additional $9,000 of the cost of the boat was a debt of the company, which Hawley might or might not have been liable for; and whether he was so liable or not, the learned judge below in his opinion considers immaterial. He says: "Fry certainly did advance as much money as Hawley, but that Hawley in his contract with Allen incurs a responsibility not shared by Fry, and gives Allen a carte blanche to use his name upon any notes which might be necessary to complete the purchase; and whether this were done or not, matters little, 268 further than it goes to show what was the real state of affairs at the time the contract was made, and what, at least, was Hawley's intention." And he asks, "if Fry was aware of this contract, why did he not, in his with Hawley, have a provision inserted covering the purchase of a boat which might cost more than $6,000?" Of course, Fry was aware of this contract—he could not have been ignorant of it—the contract of Allen and Hawley is referred to in his agreement with Hawley; but the answer is obvious. Fry, although the partner of Hawley, was not the partner of Allen in the purchase of the boat, and in purchasing of Hawley a moiety of his interest in said contract, he incurred also a moiety of Hawley's responsibilities. This was the condition. It is asked, if the boat had been lost coming to Apalachicola—or if Hawley had paid up the purchase money due upon the boat, and she had been then lost—could he have any claim upon complainant ? The answer is, yes; for it is stipulated between Hawley and complainant, that "all losses shall be equally borne."

It is said that Fry could have pointed to the agreement, and shown that his responsibility was limited to the $1,500 paid by him, and that he could lose no more. Not so. Fry had agreed with reference to the agreement between Allen and Hawley—he knew from this, that a suitable boat was to be procured, even if the cash capital was insufficient, and that a credit was to be obtained for the remainder of the purchase money, to be secured by the joint note of Allen and Hawley, or by lien on the boat. It is further in evidence, that he accompanied Allen in his search for a suitable boat, and that the steamer Quincy was built, and he served on board of her as engineer from Cincinnati, the place of building, to Apalachicola, and as he uttered no dissent, by his acts and conduct he would have been estopped to deny his acquiescence in the purchase of the boat, and his liability to Hawley for a moiety of the debt thus

Fry vs. Hawley.—Argument of Counsel.

269 incurred. Pickard v. Sears, 33 English Common Law Reports, 117. Gregg v. Wells, 37 English Common Law Reports, 58. Camp v. Parkhill, 2 Florida Reports, 197.

But the debt of $9,000 to the builders was secured by hypothecation of and lien upon the boat, and, therefore, the position that the credit should extend to the increase of Hawley's interest and profits alone, cannot be supported in equity, or justice. Fry had as much at stake as Hawley had—he had advanced to the enterprise as much money, and that which he had contributed was charged with, and liable for, the debt equally with Hawley's. If the boat had been lost, or had been unable to make sufficient gains or profits to pay the debt, and it had been seized or sold, Fry would have lost as much as Hawley would. According to the agreement and the evidence, Hawley was not under any greater degree of liability or responsibility than Fry was; for if Hawley had incurred any loss, or had been compelled to pay any money, Fry was bound to contribute.

In building the boat and fitting it out for service, Allen, it is to be inferred from the evidence, was the only person known to the builders—they made a bill of sale of the boat, when finished, to him alone, received from him the payment of $6,000, and the hypothecation of the boat for the balance due, $9,000; and Allen retained the title until the debt was paid in July, 1848, from the profits, when he conveyed one moiety to Hawley. Upon the principle which Hawley contends for, Allen could have claimed eight-tenths of the boat, and it seems with more show of propriety than Hawley's case exhibits as against Fry.

The learned Judge below says, "the moment the boat was purchased. Hawley became liable to Allen, if he, Allen, paid more than his portion, by way of contribution; and being regarded in the eye of the law as joint owner with Allen, was subject to all and any loss with him." And why is this rule not applicable to the relation which subsisted between the complainant, Fry, and the defendant, Hawley?

270 When Hawley became liable to Allen, as joint owner of the boat with him, for additional contributions and all losses, is it not equally true that complainant, Fry, became liable to Hawley, for his moiety of any additional contributions, he, (Hawley,) should make, or for his moiety of the losses, because he, (Fry,) was joint owner with Hawley of the one moiety of the boat? Are not these the terms upon which Hawley admitted Fry to a participation with him in his share of the enterprise? This is conclusively proved by a reference to the agreements and the evidence?

Suppose A and B enter into any joint undertaking for the transaction of business, but in which B is a silent or secret partner, unknown to the community, although he contributed one-half of the capital. A enters upon the business, invests the cash capital, and obtains credit for other property, goods, &c., used in the business, beyond the capital.—Will equity permit A, upon a dissolution or settlement, to say to his partner, you are entitled to the profits only upon the amount of cash actually contributed by you—the profits upon the credits obtained are mine exclusively, for you were not known as a partner with me? Clearly not; and wherein does the case at bar differ from it?

If the position assumed for Hawley be correct, then it must be admitted that Fry made a most silly bargain—his capital was at risk of loss, without compensation, or at most, a very remote and small benefit. 1. His share of the boat was implicated for Hawley's benefit, as the security of a portion of the debt of $9,000. 2. While thus implicated, it was making for Hawley four dollars for one dollar for Fry. 3. The fifth which it was thus making for Fry, was also implicated for the debt upon the boat, and only receivable when the debt was discharged; for he was not the partner of Allen, but of Hawley—his claim to the profits is through Hawley; and it is not to be presumed that Allen would permit a dollar of the profits to be withdrawn until the debt was paid; and if any accident had happened prior to that event, Fry's capital as well as profits would be involved in 271 the catastrophe; while Fry was liable for an equal portion of Hawley's losses, if any, beyond the $1,500 in cash invested. Truly, this is a perfect illustration of the societas leonina of the civilians. To escape from this injustice, the learned judge below interprets "equality" to mean "proportionably; but they are not synonymous or convertible terms, nor is there any necessity to a fair and perfect understanding of the contract, that the language should be changed to harmonize. Besides, it would only meet a part of the objections to such a construction.

The language is neither uncertain nor ambiguous, and is not to be warped from the ordinary meaning of its terms—the words being clear and definite, they must be understood according to their grammatical construction, and in their ordinary meaning. Story on Contracts, (2d edition,) § 639.

The principle asserted by the learned judge below, that a party seeking a specific performance must show that the agreement is certain and fair, and the remedy mutual, is admitted. Goldsmith's Equity, 79. Story's Equity Jurisprudence, § 723. 1 Johnson's Chancery Reports, 282, 370.

It is contended here that the agreement on its face, and by equitable interpretation, is both certain and fair; that nothing is asked for by complainant which is either inequitable, or unjust; that, so far as the principle of mutuality is involved, the agreement on the part of complainant was executed—he paid the amount of his contribution at the time of entering into the contract. It is not proper to resort to conjecture, or to possible cases which might occur, in order to show that a state of case might arise in which there would be a want of mutuality, although in this case such a line of argument might be successfully treated.

An agreement must depend on the circumstances at the time, and cannot be made better or worse by subsequent facts. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atkyns, 404.

In cases where, when the specific performance would be attended with great loss and hardship to the defendants, the 272 court has not decreed a specific performance, but has directed an issue to try what damages the party has sustained by non-performance of the agreement. See City of London v. Nash, 3 Atkyns, 516.

Such, however, is not the case at bar—it will be attended with no real loss or hardship to the defendant, Hawley, to yield up to complainant the just and full share of the profits of his capital—to give him a share in the contract to the extent of the amount contributed, and a participation in the profits in proportion to that amount. A court of law could not, by way of damages, give to the complainant full and adequate relief.

The case of Brashier v. Gratz cited below is wholly inapplicable. There the complainant was in default—a considerable length of time had elapsed, and there had been a great change in the title and value of the land, and the court held very justly there was a want of reciprocity, and declined to interfere. 5th Peters' Condensed Supreme Court Reports, 161.

So, also, in Benedict v. Lynch, cited in opinion of the court below, the contract stipulated that if the vendee did not comply with the covenant to pay as stipulated, the contract should be void; the vendor made default, some two or three years elapsed, and the vendee sold the land to another—the court, under the circumstances, refused the prayer for a specific performance. 1st Johnson's Chancery Reports, 370

Now, the facts of these cases bear no analogy to the case at bar, and the principles held therein are entirely inapplicable. Here there was no default on the part of Fry—his portion of the contract was executed—he had contributed in money his share of the capital—as joint owner with Hawley, he was responsible for a moiety of his share of liability or loss, and by his acts and conduct, he was estopped to deny his acquiescence in the debt of $9,000 incurred in building and fitting out the boat.

273 He has not so conducted himself as to be obnoxious to the principle of equity quoted by the learned Judge below, from Story's Equity Jurisprudence, §750—he has not led to the defeat of any legitimate object of Hawley, nor has the character and condition of the property been so altered, that the terms of the original contract will not apply to it. A reference to the authority cited by Justice Story, will show that it can have no application to the case here. See Duke of Bedford v. British Museum, 8th Condensed English Chancery Reports, 128.

It is admitted that the question of specific performance is one addressed to the discretion of the court—not of arbitrary and capricious discretion, but of that sound and reasonable discretion, which governs itself, so far as it may, by general rules and principles; but, at the same time, which withholds or grants relief, according to the circumstances of each particular case, when these rules and principles will not furnish any exact measure of justice between the parties. Story's Equity Jurisprudence, § 693, 742, 769.

To this discretion, as expounded by the learned jurist, we appeal with confidence for a judgment of reversal, and for a decree granting the prayer of complainant's bill.

Davis, for respondent and appellee.

1. The right of Fry to any share in the boat must depend on the written agreement.

2. Subsequent acts cannot be given in evidence to explain any ambiguity in the written contract. Chitty on Contracts, 106. Comyn on Contracts.

3. To entitle Fry to a specific performance of the agreement which he insists on, it must appear that Hawley had a remedy against him to compel performance of his (Fry's) part of the contract. The remedy must have been mutual. Benedict v. Lynch, 1 Johnson's Chancery Reports, 370. Ibid, 282. 2d Story's Equity, section 723.

4. The words "joint interest" do not warrant the conclusion that an equal interest was intended. Collier on Part. 13.

274 5. To interpret the contract the whole must be taken together. The words "all losses to be equally borne," when taken in connection with the rest of the agreement, must be construed to mean that the losses are to be borne by each in proportion to his share.

6. The debt contracted by Allen in building the boat was in nowise a liability of Fry. Hawley and Allen alone were bound. Fry was not liable, even to Hawley.

7. The fact that the share of Fry was left undetermined is evidence that he did not contract for any specific part.

8. If Fry did not contract for a fourth, the fact that he did not demand his portion of his earnings or his wages gives him no claim to any greater share than that which he was entitled to under the contract. There is no proof that he demanded his profits or wages, or that he was requested to let them remain in the hands of Allen and Hawley.

9. The mortgage of the boat was a necessary consequence of the agreement between Allen and Hawley. Fry had no legal interest until Hawley made him a title. If Hawley failed to do so, Fry had his action to recover the sum deposited with Hawley.

10. The nature of the contract between Fry and Hawley was not a sale of an interest, because the thing was not in esse. It was in the nature of a trust. Hawley was bound by the contract to constitute Fry an owner in a steamboat, and an owner in a mail contract "to the extent" of the cash paid by Fry. Fry was to have $1,500 in value of the property.

11. The answer of Hawley and the admissions of Fry all disprove the allegations of the bill. If the case rests on the contract, Fry cannot claim more than the ratable interest, which $1,500 bears to the whole sum. If it is put on the answer and the testimony, he can only be entitled to the same one-tenth. Upon the whole, the decree was correct, and nothing has been adduced to change it.

DOUGLAS, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

This case has been fully argued by the counsel for the respective parties, and the questions presented for our con- 275 sideration are, what interest the complainant is entitled to in the said steamboat, and what share of the nett profits he ought to receive.

It is admitted that every contract, deriving its force from the mutual assent of the parties, is to be interpreted according to the intention of the parties, so far as it is legal, and mutually understood. Chitty on Contracts, pages 148, 149, 1st edition, sections 228, 231, and that exposition is to be upon the whole contract, and not upon disjointed parts taken separately. Page 157, section 252.

For the complainant, it is contended that, by virtue of this agreement between Hawley and himself, he is entitled to an equal share in the boat with Hawley, and to an equal participation in the profits or earnings, and that the agreement is susceptible of no other interpretation.

That Hawley's agrement with Fry was made with special reference to the agreement or contract he had made with Allen, and to understand the meaning of the terms, "an interest with himself," it is only necessary to ascertain what was the interest of Hawley in the joint concern of Allen and Hawley, and what proportion the contribution of Fry bears to it.

That the evidence discloses, and that it is also conceded, that Hawley was entitled to a moiety of the boat, by reason of the contribution of one-half the stipulated capital, say $3,000, as between himself and Allen; and Fry's contribution being $1,500, or one half thereof, makes the extent of his interest under Hawley just one-half—in other words, equal with Hawley's, and that this is confirmed by the subsequent stipulation, that "all loses are to be equally borne."

That Hawley's interpretation, that it is in the proportion which the $1,500 bears to the whole cost of the boat, is a strained one, and that a Court of Equity will not give a strained construction to create a societas leonina. The last proposition we deem a sound one. But we understood the position of the defendant's counsel to be, that Hawley was 276 entitled to a moiety of the boat, on account of his contribution of $3,000, and of his having given to said Henry Allen authority to use his name, to procure a credit to any amount beyond the sum of $6,000, that might be necessary to procure a steamboat suited to the accomplishment of the objects they had in view, viz: the carrying of the mail, and the transportation of merchandise, conveyance of passengers, &c.; he (Hawley) thus making himself equally liable with said Allen for any debt which the latter might contract in effecting that object. And this we consider a correct view of the matter, and we are unable to perceive why Hawley's interpretation of his contract with Fry is a strained one. To interpret the contract, the whole must be taken together. "Faithful interpretation implies that words, or assemblages of words, be taken in that sense which we honestly believe that their utterer attached to them." Lieber's Hermeneutics, 99. "Since our object is to discover the sense of the words before us, we must endeavor to arrive at it as much as possible from the words themselves." Ibid, 113. The whole of the agreement is to be considered—the construction is upon the entire deed or agreement, not merely upon disjointed and particular parts of it. The whole context shall be considered in endeavors to collect the intention of the parties, although the immediate object of inquiry be the meaning of an isolated clause.—Chitty on Contracts, 6th American edition, 83. Now, what are the words we are called upon to interpret?—"All losses to be equally borne. What is the instrument we are called upon to construe?—The receipt of Hawley to Fry, viz:

"Received of Daniel Fry fifteen hundred dollars, to be invested in a steamboat, for the purpose of carrying the mail between Apalachicola and Chattahoochee, for the term of four years, commencing July 1, 1847; Nelson Hawley being jointly interested with Captain Henry Allen in the above named contract, binds himself to give to said Fry an interest with himself to the extent of the amount placed in his hands, and in proportion to that amount, he is to share in the profits accruing from said contract. He further binds himself to consult and advise with said Fry in all matters of importance in regard to said joint interest." What joint interest?—the joint interest of Hawley and Allen. Now, the contract here spoken of, is the contract for carrying the mail, and the joint interest mentioned, is the interest of Hawley and Allen in that contract. No reference is here made to the agreement between Allen and Hawley about the purchase of the steamboat. The object in view, viz: the carrying out of that contract to convey the mail, appears from the fact that the $1,500 advanced by the complainant, was to be invested in a steamboat by Captain Henry Allen for that purpose; and Nelson Hawley being jointly interested with Captain Henry Allen in that contract, binds himself to give the said Fry an interest with himself to the extent of the amount placed in his hands, and in proportion to that amount, he is to share in the profits accruing from said contract. Why all this circumlocution, if it were intended that Fry should have an equal interest both in the steamboat and in the profits accruing from said contract? Why did not Hawley say, being jointly interested with Captain Henry Allen in the above mentioned contract, I bind myself to give the said Fry an equal interest with myself in said contract and an equal share of the profits accruing therefrom? It would have taken fewer words and been clear of all doubt—no room would have been left for construction, and in the agreement which he had on that very day executed with Captain Allen, he had a precedent for so drawing it. If the instrument had stopped here, no question, we think, would have been raised about its construction—the whole difficulty then rests upon the words, "all losses to be equally borne." But the construction must be reasonable—it must also be as near the minds and apparent intents of the parties as the rules of law will admit. 2d Blackstone's Commentaries, 379; and it is essential to consider the subject matter of the agreement, in affixing a meaning to the terms used therein. Chitty on Contracts, 6th edition, 74. The subject matter here was a portion of this steamboat and of the contract mentioned, and the question is, the extent of those interests intended to be conveyed. If these words must be understood to mean that Fry must bear the same amount of any loss as Hawley, and that, consequently, he (Fry) shall have the same interest in the steamboat and in the profits of the contract as Hawley, then it results that Fry, for the sum of $1,500, is to have as large a share of both as Hawley, who has paid $6,000. We do not lose sight of the fact, that some five or six thousand dollars balance due on the boat, was paid out of the profits accruing on the contract, or that the boat was mortgaged to secure that debt; but it was the debt of Allen and Hawley; and if they had suffered it to be sold to pay their debt, Hawley would have been liable to Fry for his $1,500, unless, indeed, they had procured another boat, and Hawley had given him an interest in it according to his contract, which he would have had a right to do; for the agreement between Hawley and Fry did not specify that the $1,500 should be invested in any particular boat—such a result would certainly be a very onerous and unequal one, and comes pretty well up to the idea of a societas leonina. But we see no good reason for so interpreting this contract. From the phraseology of the whole instrument, and the reason and justice of the case, it seems to us quite clear, that the intent of the parties was that the words, "all losses to be equally borne," was that each should bear any loss that might occur, in proportion to his interest. Equality is said to be equity, which judges according to what is good and equal, and we do not perceive that construing the words, "all losses shall be equally borne," to mean that they shall be borne in proportion equal to their respective interests, does any violence to the English language. By reference to the word equal in Webster's Dictionary, folio edition, pages 471 and 475, we find it, amongst many other definitions, stated "Equal," "being in just proportion," "to make equivalent to," "to recompense fully," "to answer in full proportion." We are satisfied, therefore, that the words ought to be interpreted and construed to mean that Fry shall answer to Hawley in full proportion to his interest. From a just and proper reading of the receipt itself, therefore, without any "resort to the aid of the light of surrounding circumstances." it seems to us that the construction placed upon this instrument by the court below is the correct one.

But let us take a view of those circumstances and see whether they are calculated to sustain or change this view of the subject. One fact deemed of some moment is, that the complainant is an engineer, and it was a matter of considerable importance to him to obtain constant employment as such, at good wages. This seems to have been one object which it appears he accomplished by it; for, although no reference is made in the receipt given by Hawley to Fry, for this $1,500, to the agreement between Hawley and Allen respecting the purchase of the steamboat, yet it clearly appears by reference to the bill of complaint in this case that the complainant was fully aware of it, for he commences with the charge that "Nelson Hawley informed him that, in connection with Henry Allen, he had obtained a contract to carry the United States mail from the port of Apalachicola to a point on the Apalachicola river, known as Chattahoochee; that said contract was to continue four years, at a yearly stipend of $2,600; that said Hawley also informed him (Fry) that he was desirous of purchasing a boat to carry said mail and perform said contract, and that it would require about $6,000 to purchase a suitable boat for the purpose aforesaid; that he was to furnish $3,000 and said Allen to furnish the remaining $3,000, and each was to own one moiety in the said contract and the said boat." And on looking into this contract we find one of its stipulations to be that "Daniel Fry is to be employed in the capacity of engineer, (to furnish his second,) at a salary of $135 per month, so long as he faithfully discharges his duties in that capacity, to the satisfaction of the master of the boat;" and the fact which the evidence discloses that he has been thus employed, with his brother as his second, ever since the boat has been running on the Apalachicola river, at the wages mentioned, leads to the irresistible conclusion that this stipulation was inserted by the parties, after an understanding with him on the subject. Now, it is very extraordinary that the complainant, with the intimate knowledge he possessed of the agreement between Allen and Hawley, in making his agreement with Hawley, did not also take care to have an express stipulation inserted by Hawley in the receipts given by him to complainant, that he should have one moiety or half of Hawley's half or moiety of said boat and the profits accruing from said contract, if such were the intention of the parties. Indeed, if the transaction was to have been, as is contended, of such a nature as to make it quasi partnership between the three, Allen, Hawley and Fry, so as to make Fry liable beyond the sum of $1,500 advanced by him, it is not easy to account for the fact that he did not at once enter into the agreement with Allen and Hawley, or why they did not require him to do so, and thus make him equally liable with Hawley for any outlay beyond the $6,000. There is no evidence that Fry ever set up a claim against Hawley for one-fourth of the boat and profits, &c., until the commencement of this suit, and such a claim is inconsistent with the acts of the complainant himself, who, as appears by the answer of the defendant, Hawley, responsive to the bill, and by the testimony in the case, offered to take one-sixth interest in the said boat—an offer quite inconsistent with the claim of a right to one-fourth. The court assents to the proposition of the counsel for Mr. Hawley that "to entitle the complainant

Fry vs. Hawley.—Opinion of Court.

281 Fry to a specific performance of the agreement which he insists on, it must appear that the defendant, Hawley, had a remedy against him to compel performance of his (Fry's) part of such contract." It seems to be very generally and very properly laid down in the books that a court of equity will never decree a specific performance where the remedy is not mutual, or one party only is bound by the agreement. Parkhurst v. Van Courtlandt, 1 Johnson's Chancery Reports, 282, and authorities there cited. 2 Story's Equity, section 723. Fry had advanced $1,500; the boat has cost $15,000; one-fourth of the cost is $3,750—where was Hawley's remedy to compel Fry to pay the difference, $2,250?

It is contended on behalf of the complainant that the agreement on the face of it and by equitable interpretation is both certain and fair; that nothing is asked for by him which is either inequitable or unjust; that so far as the principle of mutuality is involved, the agreement on the part of the complainant is executed; that he paid the amount of his contribution at the time of entering into the contract. If this be so, if the contract on the complainant's part was executed by the payment of the sum of $1,500 at the time he entered into the contract, and we think it was, then surely there is no mutuality.

An agreement must depend on the circumstances at the time, and cannot be made better or worse by subsequent facts. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atkyns, 404. Subsequent acts cannot be given in evidence to explain any ambiguity in a written contract. Chitty on Contracts, 106. 1 Atkyns, 404, 605. The debt contracted by Allen in building the boat was in nowise a liability of Fry. Hawley and Allen alone were bound for that debt. Fry was not liable for it. So far as we are able to discover, from anything which the record discloses, he was not liable over to Hawley. Fry, by the payment of his $1,500 into Hawley's hands, obtained a permanent situation as engineer, at $135 per month, and an interest in the steamboat and the profits, &c., in proportion to the amount he advanced. These were strong and, no 282 doubt, the controlling inducements to make this advance, [and in construing a contract the court will look to the motives that led to it, and the object intended to be effected by it, Davis et al. v. Barney, 2 Gill & Johnson, 382,] and we do not deem a contract very onerous, by which a man gets $1,273 in a little more than one year on an investment of $1,500, and a permanent situation besides, as engineer, at $135 per month.

Upon the whole, therefore, we see no reason to disturb the decree of the court below, and it is consequently in all things affirmed.

Per totam Curiam.

DECISIONS
OF THE
Supreme Court of Florida,
AT
January Term, 1852,
Held at Tallahassee

FARISH CARTER, APPELLANT, vs. ARCHIBALD T. BENNETT, APPELLEE.

The Superior Courts of the Territory of Florida, though not Constitutional Courts, were nevertheless Courts of the United States, since they derived their existence from the legislation of Congress, under the powers conferred by the Constitution.

The Circuit Courts of the State of Florida had no right, as such, to succeed to the records and jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, though the former were held in the same places, became possessed of the records, and had jurisdiction of the same matters as those which were cognizable by the former. The validity of the transfer of causes from the one Court to the other, depends upon the concurring legislation of the two powers by which the Courts were established.

The Act of July 22, 1845, transfers all causes, civil and criminal, pending in the Superior Courts, and all common law cases pending in the County Courts, to the Circuit Courts of the State, there to be proceeded in without delay. The eighth section of said act except such causes as are cognizable by the Federal Courts to be organized in this State, which it directs, shall be transferred to said Court.

All the Courts of the United States derive their authority from express grant, and can, therefore, exercise jurisdiction only in those cases where it is conferred upon them by Act of Congress. The Judiciary Act of 1789, provides for the removal of a cause of Federal cognizance from a State Court to the Circuit Court of the United States, by requiring the defendant, if he wishes to do so, to file his petition for such removal, at the time of entering his appearance in the State Court.

The Act of Congress of February 22, 1847, was designed to transfer to the United 284 States Courts organized in Florida, all such records of the Territorial Courts as belonged appropriately to that Court. From the precise enumeration of the classes of cases directed by the Act to be transferred, the inference is irresistible that Congress acquiesced in and sanctioned the retention by the State Courts of all the papers and records relating to other cases of which they had possession.

It is the duty of a court to decide upon the relevancy of a particular fact when offered in evidence. If the isolated fact offered to be proved is irrelevant, it is not error in the Court to reject it, although in connection with other facts which may be subsequently proved, it may become relevant.

Where testimony, oral or written, is offered and objected to, the grounds of the objection should be stated; and if the defect is not pointed out, it is not error in the Court to admit it.

The admission of immaterial testimony cannot be assigned for error by a party where no injury could by possibility result to him from its introduction.

It is not error if a Judge omits to charge the jury upon any points of law arising in a cause, unless the point upon which the charge is desired, is called to the attention of the court, and an opinion thereon is refused. The Act of 1848, which requires that the Judge shall charge in writing, seems to be chiefly designed to restrain Judges from intermeddling with the facts.

The admission of a party to a suit, either express or implied from his conduct, are strong evidence against him, but not conclusive. He is at liberty to explain them, or show that he was mistaken; and this though the admissions were under oath.

The assignment of a mortgage to a party, will not make the assignee a creditor of the mortgagor, unless it is accompanied with an assignment of the debt secured by the mortgage.

A creditor must establish his debt by judgment before he can raise the question of the validity of a conveyance made by his debtor.

Judgments may be fraudulent as well as deeds, and it is competent to the grantee in a fraudulent conveyance, to show fraud or irregularity in a judgment at law or a decree in equity, if he can.

In trover, possession, whether rightfully or wrongfully obtained, is a sufficient title against a mere stranger.

The question of the propriety of granting or refusing new trials, is one that must be left entirely to the discretion of the Judge who tries the cause and has heard the evidence. The practice of reviewing decisions of a Court upon motions for new trial, is wholly unknown to the judicial system of this country.

This case was brought up by appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the county of Franklin, at a term of Carter vs. Bennett.—Statement of Case.

285 the court in said county held by the Hon. THOMAS DOUGLAS, Judge, in the fall of 1848. The cause was argued and submitted at the adjourned term of the Supreme Court held in the city of Tallahassee in July last, Judge BAKER of the Middle Circuit, and Judge LANCASTER of the Southern Circuit, sitting with the Chief Justice in the places of Justices THOMPSON and SEMMES, who had been of counsel in the cause both in the court below and in this court.

The most material facts in the case were these—Bennett, the appellee, brought an action of trover against Carter in 1842, while Florida was a Territory, in the Superior Court of Franklin county. The cause was continued from term to term from the time of its commencement until after Florida was admitted into the Union, and until the Fall Term of the Circuit Court in the year 1848, when a trial was had, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for the sum of $19,999 66-100.

The suit was brought for the alleged conversion by the defendant to his own use of a number of slaves claimed to be the property of plaintiff.

On the trial, the plaintiff read in evidence the following bill of sale, viz:

For value received I do hereby assign, set over, transfer and convey unto A. T. Bennett the following negroes, to wit: Rica, Tom, Charles, Elias, Jeff, Isaac, Allen, Cato, John, Joe, Amy, Albert, Andrew, Pink, Charles and Henry, children of Pink, Dinah, Amarilla, Emeline, Fanny, Antoinette, Clarissa, Nancy, Ellen, Sam, Patsey, Henry, Sally, Irene, Jane and Henry, and their increase, to him, his heirs and assigns forever, without any recourse upon me or my heirs, either in law or equity.

RO. J. FLOYD, [SEAL.]

He then proved by R. J. Floyd, a competent witness, that he (the witness) and plaintiff purchased a number of 286 negro slaves in 1842 from one Reuben Thornton, of the State of Georgia—that after the purchase, the negroes were divided, in the schooner Magnet, at sea, between witness, plaintiff, and one Farrior, who had become interested in the bargain—that he, the witness, sold out his right in the property, executed a bill of sale, and gave possession to plaintiff—that the negroes mentioned in the bill of sale are a part of those purchased from Thornton—that the whole number purchased was seventy-six, of which Bennett had one-half, and witness and Farrior a fourth each—that the slaves mentioned in the bill of sale were in the possession of the plaintiff in 1842—that they were taken from him under and by virtue of an execution upon a judgment in favor of Carter, assignee of a mortgage to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, executed by one Warren Jordan, and were sold by the Marshal of the Apalachicola District, Richard H. Long, Esq., of Jackson county, becoming the principal purchaser.

The plaintiff then read in evidence the following agreement of counsel, dated December, 1846, made in reference to the cases of Bennett vs. Carter, Farrior vs. Carter, Roberts, Allen & Co. vs. Carter, and cases in which any of the parties are defendants, and Farish Carter, plaintiff, viz:

We, the counsel for plaintiff and defendant, agree to admit the depositions, if properly taken, in either of the above cases to be read as evidence in all the cases, so far as the same are applicable, and so far as the same may be decided by the court to be legal. Plaintiffs are to admit on the trial that the copy of the mortgage now on file in said court in the case of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, shall be considered in lieu of the original mortgage, that said mortgage was duly executed by Warren Jordan, attested by the witnesses regularly, and that the said mortgage was duly and legally assigned by the said company to said defendant. In other words, plaintiff is to 287 admit the legal execution of said mortgage, and assignment, provided that the court determines that the original mortgage and assignment presented would be legal and proper testimony in the said cases. All questions as to the legality of this testimony are reserved. Plaintiff is willing to admit further that the mortgage was recorded as stated in said copy of mortgage. It is further agreed that the following advertisement may be introduced in evidence by the plaintiff as proof of its contents:

Will be sold for cash, on the thirty-first day of December, 1842, in front of the Exchange in the city of Apalachicola, to satisfy a judgment and decree of foreclosure in favor of Farish Carter, assignee of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, for $16,783 and costs, and an order of sale and an execution in said case, the following negro slaves to wit: Rica, a black boy, 17 years old; Tom, a black boy, 18 years old; Charles, a man, 35 to 40 years old; Elias, a yellow boy, 20 years old; Pink or Gincy, a yellow woman, 22 years old; Pink's two children, Charles and Henry; Dinah, black woman, 35 years old; Amarilla, a yellow girl, 5 or 6 years old; Fanny, a yellow girl, 3 or 4 years old; Emeline, a yellow girl, 2 years old; Tom, a black man; Sarah, a black woman; Antoinette, a yellow girl, 7 or 8 years old; Clarissa, a black girl, 14 years old; Camilla, a black girl, 12 years old; Nancy and child, a woman, 35 years old; Ellen, a girl, 10 or 11 years old; Sam, a black man, 30 years old.

And also, at the same place, on the 9th January, 1843, the following slaves, to wit: Jeff, a black man, 35 to 40 years old; Isaac, a black man, 20 years old; Allen, a black man, 29 years old; Cato, a black man, 35 or 40 years old; John, a yellow man, 40 years old; Joe, a black man, 20 years old; Amos, a yellow man, 28 or 30 years old; Patsey and child, a dark woman, 28 years old; Sally, a 288 black woman, 40 years old; Andrew, black boy, 11 years old; Albert, yellow man, 20 years old; Irene, yellow girl, 13 years old; Jane and child, yellow woman, 18 years old:

In satisfaction of said order and execution.

N. HAWLEY,
Marshal District of Apalachicola.

December 17th, 1842.

It is admitted by counsel for Carter that the levy therein referred to was made and directed by Farish Carter, that the negroes were sold according to the advertisement, and that the said Carter received the proceeds of the sale. It is further admitted on the part of Carter's counsel, that such of the negroes named in the declaration of Bennett, as are described or named in said advertisement, were in the possession of Bennett when the levy was made. That such of the negroes named in the declaration of Farrior as are described or named in said advertisement, were in the possession of Farrior when the levy was made. That such of the negroes named in the declaration of Roberts, Allen & Co. as are described or named in said advertisement, were in the possession of Roberts, Allen & Co., when the levy was made. It is further admitted by counsel for Carter that said negroes were levied on by Hawley, the Marshal, by the direction and order of the said defendant, and that in pursuance of said orders and direction of said Carter said negro slaves were taken from the possession of plaintiff, and that said levy and seizure by said Marshal was previous to the commencement of said suits, and that said negro slaves were sold by said Marshal under the direction and at the instance of said Carter, and for his use and benefit. Defendant further agrees to admit, if required by plaintiff on the trial, that defendant, Carter, has recovered 289 a judgment in the State of Georgia against plaintiff, Bennett, for the following named negroes, to wit: Cato, Elias, Sam, John, Charles, Henry, Dinah, Antoinette, Fanny, Emeline, Amarilla, Nancy and Enoch, that said last mentioned sixteen negroes are a portion of those sued for by plaintiff, and contended by defendant as having been taken from Richard H. Long by plaintiff, Bennett, subsequent to these suits. It is understood that neither party admits identity of any negroes in declarations or mortgage. No understanding or agreement, not signed by the parties, is to be considered as binding. Depositions of Brown may be withdrawn, and his testimony and Milligan's to be taken if deemed fit, by plaintiff, provided Brown's depositions now taken are returned to the court, and which either party may use if they think fit, if legal testimony. Felton's testimony to be retaken by defendant, if he deems it necessary, provided the first depositions are returned to the court on trial. Plaintiff is willing to waive any objections as to any formalities on the envelope of Felton's depositions now on file.

December, 1846.

December 14th, 1848.

It is further agreed that the paper of 16th day of March, 1842, signed and sealed by A. T. Bennett and R. J. Floyd, and witnessed by J. C. Harris and J. M. Teague, decd., shall be read without proof of hand writings of witnesses or parties in all cases in Franklin county in which Farish Carter is a party.

The defendant, to sustain his case, relied upon the foregoing agreement of counsel, which had been adduced as a part of the plaintiff's evidence, and read to the jury the following original mortgage of Warren Jordan to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, viz:

Whereas, an arrangement was entered into on the 28th
290 day of December in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, by and between Warren Jordan of said county, and the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, whereby a loan of twenty-five thousand dollars was extended by said company to the said Warren, on his note for that amount, dated the date and year aforesaid, payable one hundred and eighty-four days after date, to the order of, and endorsed by Reuben Thornton, of said county, and secured by a mortgage of even date on the property hereinafter described, (with the exception of lot No. 285 in the second District of Baker county in this State, containing 250 acres of land,) which said note it was agreed should be renewable every six months after the first day of January, 1839, so as to be made to fall due on the first days of July and January in each year for five successive years, from and after the said first days of July and January, or on the first discount days of said Bank succeeding the said first days of July and January, 1839, subject to a reduction of 10 per cent. at each renewal, or 20 per cent. annually, as the said Bank might thereafter require the whole amount of the twenty-five thousand dollars to be paid by the expiration or within the limits of five years as aforesaid from the said first day of January, 1839, together with all interest and expenses that might be required by said Bank, at each renewal, in accordance with its rules and regulations, not to exceed the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. And whereas, in accord ance with the said arrangement, the said Warren renewed his said note so given as aforesaid for $25,000, by giving a new one, with the same endorser, to the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, on the first day of July, 1839, payable six months after date for $22,500, and paying the reduction and interest required by the Bank. And whereas, it being now discovered that there has been an omission to record the said mortgage, and that the time allowed by the statute of the State for that purpose has elap- 291
sed, the parties have agreed to remedy the omission by the execution of a new mortgage of the same property, with the addition aforesaid, and the due record thereof, for the security of the said note of $22,500 now remaining in said bank, and of all other notes that may be given in renewal thereof, or of each other, and of the interests and costs that may accrue on the same. To these ends, therefore:— This indenture made and entered into this 30th day of October in the year of our Lord, 1839, by and between the said Warren Jordan, of the first part, and the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, of the second part, witnesseth, that the said Warren Jordan, for and in consideration of the premises, and the sum of ten dollars to him in hand paid by the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, at the sealing and delivering of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, hath given, granted, bargained and sold, and by these presents doth give, grant, bargain and sell to the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, the following land, town lots and negroes, to wit:— fifteen hundred acres of land immediately adjoining the town of Gainesville in the said county of Hall and State aforesaid, comprising lots Nos. 149, 150, 152, 153, 167, 168, and parts of lots 154 and 136, forming one body, lying on both sides of Flat Creek, adjoining lands of Cooper, Daniel Mitchell and others; together with all the various buildings thereon, comprising six dwelling houses, and a great variety of other houses necessary for the different lots and settlements thereon; which said tract of land is the one whereon the said Warren now resides. Also on Chickasalratchie Creek, No. 180, 179, 219, 220, 224, all in the second District, and 181 in the Third District aforesaid; which said lots or tracts of land were conveyed by Jerry Cowles to the said Warren Jordan. 293 appertaining, to have and to hold all the above bargained property, to the only proper use, benefit and behoof of the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, their successors and assigns forever, in fee simple. And the said Warren for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, the above bargained property unto the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, will forever warrant and defend against the claims of all persons whomsoever: Provided nevertheless, that if the said Warren Jordan, his heirs, executors and administrators, shall well and truly attend to the renewal of the said note for $22,500, now remaining in the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, at their office or banking house in Athens, and of all notes that may be given in renewal thereof and of each other, and punctually pay all reductions and discounts which shall become due thereon according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, so as to complete the payment of the whole $25,000 originally borrowed by the said Warren from the said company within the five years as above specified, from the first day of January, 1839, together with all interests, costs and charges of any kind that may arise from any defalcation, and so to or cause the same to be done, then and from thenceforth, as well this indenture and the right of property thereby conveyed, as the said note now renewed as aforesaid, and all others given in renewal thereof or of each other, shall cease, determine and be void to all intents and purposes; but in default thereof, according to the plain tenor and meaning of these presents, the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company shall have the right, and is hereby vested with the power, of foreclosing this mortgage according to law, and to sell so much of the property hereby conveyed, as will satisfy all legal demands of the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company against the said Warren Jordan growing out 294 of his defalcation or failure to comply with the conditions and requirements of this mortgage, and after paying all the principal, interests, cost, and charges on the same, that he, the said Warren, may by law be held liable and responsible for—the balance, if any, shall be paid over to the said Warren or to his legal representatives, and the balance of the property not sold, shall likewise be immediately [turned over] to the said Warren or to his legal representatives, re-conveyed by the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company.

In witness whereof, the said Warren Jordan hath hereunto set his hand and seal, this 30th day of October, 1839.

WARREN JORDAN, [Seal.]

He next offered the following original notes, purporting to be drawn by W. Jordan, and endorsed by Reuben Thornton, both dated July 1st, 1841. The one for fifteen thousand dollars, payable six months after the date thereof, and the other for six hundred and twenty-seven dollars, payable also six months after the date thereof, which notes and endorsements thereon are in the following words and figures, to wit:

$15,000.

Six months after date, I promise to pay to the order of Reuben Thornton, at the Bank of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, in Athens, fifteen thousand dollars. Value received.

Six months after date, I promise to pay to the order of Reuben Thornton, at the Bank of the Georgia Railroad 295 and Banking Company, at Athens, six hundred and twenty-seven dolars. Value received.

WARREN JORDAN.

July 1, 1841.

Endorsed, REUBEN THORNTON.

Which said notes, upon motion of plaintiff's counsel, were ruled out by the court, upon the ground that they did not appear to be the debt of the mortgage, (before the necessity of proving hand writing,) and not allowed to be read in evidence—to which ruling, defendant by his counsel excepted.

The defendant then read the following assignment of said mortgage above recited, from said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company to Farish Carter:

Georgia:

Know all men by these presents that the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, for and in consideration of the sum of sixteen thousand one hundred and thirty-six dollars and thirty nine cents, to them paid by Farish Carter, Esquire, of Scotsboro, in said State, at or before the delivery of these presents; the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have bargained, sold, assigned, set over, and by these presents do bargain, sell, grant, assign, and set over unto the said Farish Carter, his heirs and assigns, a certain mortgage deed entered into on the thirtieth day of October, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, eight hundred and thirty nine, between Warren Jordan, of Hall county in said State, as mortgagor, and the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company as mortgagees, which said mortgage deed was recorded on the day and year aforesaid in the clerk's office of the Superior Court of said county, in book E, folios 261 to 253, and on the sixteenth day of December, in said year, in the county of Baker in said last mentioned county, in book 7, pages 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, and 186, as by reference thereto will appear, together with the lands and negroes, houses and buildings therein mentioned and described, with the rights, members and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and all the estate, right, title and interest of the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company therein, to have and to hold, all and singular, the premises hereby granted and assigned unto the said Farish Carter, his heirs and assigns forever, without recourse in any event to the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, subject nevertheless to the rights and equity of redemption of the within named Warren Jordan, his heirs and assigns in the same.

In witness whereof, John P. King, hath signed these presents as President, and James Camak hath countersigned the same as cashier of the said Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, and affixed the seal of the said corporation hereto, this thirty-first day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-two.

JOHN P. KING, [Seal.]
Pres't Ga. R. R. & B. Co.

On the part of the defendant the deposition of Reuben Thornton was next read to the Jury. This witness deposed to the following circumstances, under which he received a bill of sale of a large number of slaves from Warren Jordan, and also to the circumstances under which he alleged he sold said slaves to Floyd and Bennett, viz:

About the first of March, 1842, Warren Jordan employed Jeptha C. Harris, Esq., of Albany, Geo., to take charge of about eighty negroes, for the purpose of carrying them to Texas and settling a plantation for him, giving to Harris a power of attorney to control, protect and manage said property. Harris proceeded with the negroes to Apalach-

297 icola, on the steamboat Louisa, which was the property of A. T. Bennett, for which passage he paid to James Y. Smith, (who then commanded the boat,) a likely young fellow, that would now command from six to seven hundred dollars. After landing with the negroes at Apalachicola, Harris went into the custom-house, for the purpose of procuring a certificate of clearance, which appeared to be a pre-requisite to their being shipped, and while there the negroes were arrested by the deputy marshal, N. Baker, under a false attachment sued out by one John H. Watson, as agent for the Central Bank of Georgia vs. one J. L. Hodges, and were taken from the possession of Harris, by the Marshal, and placed in jail. Harris being unable to replevy the negroes, determined to return to Georgia and inform their owner of their situation, when Bennett tendered his services to accompany him, and did go with him to the plantation of Warren Jordan, in Baker county, where Jordan was then staying. About half an hour previous to their arrival at Jordan's plantation, witness had also arrived there, and Harris and Bennett both represented to witness and Jordan the facts above detailed; they also represented Bennett as being a respectable citizen of Apalachicola with thirty thousand dollars, for the truth of which Bennett frequently appealed to Harris' knowledge of him, &c., and stated that he was so kindly disposed to aid Col. Jordan in the liberation of his property that he had come all the way to tender him the use of his name or his services in any way that would effect that object; they further stated that Bennett and his friends had further offered to afford Harris security to replevy the negroes, which could not be done under the power of attorney he then had; they had, therefore, come to the conclusion that it would be best to obtain a bill of sale to the negroes from Warren Jordan to Harris, for the purpose of enabling Harris to

298 claim the negroes, which being done, there would be no further difficulty in replevying them, as Bennett and his friends could and would give any security that the marshal would require. As witness was there, Harris proposed to Col. Jordan to intercede with witness to go with them to Apalachicola, and to make to him a bill of sale to the negroes, for the purpose of replevying them. This arrangement Bennett strongly backed, and urged both to Col. Jordan and witness that the bill of sale should be executed to him. Witness objected, and replied to his proposition that he had a power of attorney from Warren Jordan, regularly executed and recorded, constituting him his agent in any State or Territory in the Union, which was amply sufficient to enable him to replevy the negroes—to which Bennett replied that his friends at Apalachicola were respectable and wealthy merchants, but they knew but little about legal matters, and they had been advised by counsel that the negroes could not be replevied unless the person had a bill of sale to them, and that unless he took one, it would be out of his power to afford him the aid he desired to do. It was finally settled and agreed that witness should take the bill of sale, upon a pledge of honor from Bennett, made both to Jordan and witness, and over and over repeated, that himself and his friends would afford ample security to enable him to replevy the negroes. Under these promises, and for the satisfaction and gratification of Bennett, witness received the bill of sale from Jordan to the negroes, to which Bennett and Harris were subscribing witnesses, and for the sole and only purpose of enabling him to replevy them for the benefit of Warren Jordan, who was the true and bona fide owner of them. In the event of witness having to claim the negroes personally, he thought it best to execute his note to Jordan for something like the value of the negroes, and some money was laid on the table at the time the bill of sale was signed, and which 299 was taken up again by witness in the presence of the witnesses to the bill of sale, and put in his pocket, they knowing that not one cent was actually paid, or even intended or expected to be paid, and that the note which was executed by witness to Jordan was not accepted, or intended by either of them ever to be paid, which facts were as well known and understood by Bennett as by themselves, the whole being done to place matters in a form to please Bennett, and thereby secure his promised aid in procuring the security necessary to replevy the property.

—That on the arrival of witness at Apalachicola, he found it impossible, in consequence of the character and amount of the bond required, to replevy the negroes—that Bennett could not render him the assistance which he had promised, and that he then determined to make it the interest of some person to aid him in his object and purposes, by making an offer of a portion of the negroes as an inducement. This he accordingly did, but was not successful—that he finally sold the negroes to Bennett and Floyd, as they were, in the jail of Franklin county, stating to the purchasers at the time that he had no valid title to them, and that he did not mean the sale to interfere with the rights of Warren Jordan or his creditors.

He moreover required from Bennett, as a condition of sale, a written acknowledgment under the hands and seals of himself and Floyd, that they bought the negroes without delivery, as they stood in the possession of the Marshal, "subject to all the liabilities that were against them in the way of debt, either by note, judgment or mortgage, in the State of Georgia, either as the property of" Jordan or himself, which paper, bearing the same date as the bill of sale made by witness, is in these words, viz:

TERRITORY OE FLORIDA—FRANKLIN COUNTY. 300

Whereas, Reuben Thornton, of the County of Hall and State of Georgia, has this day sold to R. J. Floyd and A. T. Bennett, the following negroes which are now in the hands and possession of the Marshal under an attachment sued out against one J. L. Hodges, to-wit: old Tom, Dick, Allen, Cato, Charles, Gilbert, Amos, Merida, Elias, Jack, Abram, Major, Ben, Sam, Jeffrey, Rica, Moses, Americus, Albert, Billy, Isaac, John, Coon, Joe, making twenty-four fellows; Grandison, Fayett, Andrew, Virgil, Washington, Tom, Marcus, Clem, William, Monroe, Wylie, Charles, Simeon, making thirteen boys; Sarah, Martha, Patsey, Jane, Susan, Narcissa, Jinsey, Dinah, Harriet, Fada. Mariah, Milley, Rachel, Penny, Sally and Nancy, making sixteen negro women; Charlotte, Caroline, Antoinette, Camilla, Frances, Lucinda, Ellen, Sarah, Amanda, Fanny, Avarilla, Mary, Crissa, Abby, Clarissa and Jenny, making seventeen girls; Jenny, William, Henry, Albert, Cornelius, Randle, Henry and Emeline, making eight infants, which said negroes are sold by the said Thornton to us, the said R. S. Floyd and A. T. Bennett, subject to all the liabilities that are against them in the way of debt, either by note, judgment or mortgage, in the State of Georgia, either as the property of Warren Jordan or the said Reuben Thornton, the said Reuben only warranting the same against himself and his heirs. This is therefore given by us to show that if any of said property should be lost by suit in consequence of any claims as aforesaid, that it is to be no offset or plea against the payment of the note of seven thousand dollars, bearing even date with these presents, given by said Bennett and Floyd in payment for said negroes, as witness our hands and seals, this 16th day of March, 1842.

R. J. FLOYD, [Seal.]
A. T. BENNETT, [Seal.]

Which acknowledgment, under the hands and seals of Floyd and Bennett, was signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of J. C. Harris and J. M. Teague. 301

The defendant then exhibited to the jury the record of the proceedings, and decree and judgment of foreclosure in the case of Farish Carter, Assignee of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company—the execution issued thereon, together with the necessary evidence of levy and sale by the Marshal.

There was a vast amount of other testimony introduced and read on the trial of the cause, not however deemed material to be herein set out or stated.

The following instructions were asked by defendant's counsel, viz:

1st. That a party cannot be admitted to gainsay or deny his own solemn oath of record made in this court, setting up the facts sworn to as a defence in the action, and when such oath is introduced to the jury, it is conclusive against the party making such oath, and the highest possible evidence—which first instruction was refused by the court, and instead thereof, the court gave the following:

Instruction first given. Instead of the first, I state to the jury, that a party cannot be admitted to gainsay or deny his own solemn oath of record made in a court, setting up the facts sworn to as a defence to the action; but he may be permitted to explain it, and to show that it was made in ignorance of his rights, or under a misapprehension in regard to them.

2d. Second instruction asked. That a party cannot claim title to property in any court in this State, when such claim comes through such facts as are sworn to in the plaintiff's affidavit introduced in this trial, dated 24th July, 1844, and filed in the suit of Charles T. Thornton, to foreclose a mortgage against Bennett and Floyd, a copy of 302 which is herewith filed, marked A. Such affidavit is conclusive against Bennett, as proof of the facts there sworn. The following is the affidavit referred to:

FRANKLIN SUPERIOR COURT, ON PETITION TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE.

A. T. Bennett, impleaded with R. J. Floyd, ads.
Charles T. Thornton.

The defendant, in pursuance of law, files herewith the following objections to the decree of foreclosure, herein protesting in the first place that the plaintiff is not entitled to the same, for objections apparent in the said proceedings, for which the same should be dismissed. The defendant sets forth that the note of $7,000 which said mortgage was given to secure, was made and executed in consideration and payment of certain negro slaves sold to defendant on the 16th day of March, in the year 1842, the same being specially set forth in a bill of sale executed by one Reuben Thornton to defendants; that said slaves, being the property of one Warren Jordan in the State of Georgia, were fraudulently, clandestinely, covinously, collusively, wickedly, illegally, and improperly, against the laws of said State run off, removed and carried away from said State by said Jordan and said Reuben Thornton, said removal being made, executed, contrived and devised of fraud, covin, collusion and guile, to convey them from said State out of and beyond the United States, to Texas, to the end, purpose, and intent to convert them to their own use and profit, and to delay, hinder and defraud the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company and others to whom said slaves had been mortgaged, and other creditors in said State of Georgia, contrary to the laws of said State; that the sale to said defendants by the said Thornton and the giving and taking of the said note of $7,000 and its assignment to plaintiff, was in pursuance and consummation of 303 the same wicked, fraudulent, corrupt, illegal, covinous and improper design, contrivance and purpose, and the assignment of said note to said plaintiff was under suspicious circumstances not in the usual course of trade, without consideration and fraudulent; that said negroes being over the age of twelve years were imported into this Territory by said Jordan on the — day of March, 1842, from said State of Georgia, without any design of making a settlement in this Territory, and without having obtained a certificate signed by a Judge of the County Court or two Justices of the Peace of the County from which they were brought, containing a particular description of the stature and complexion of said slaves together with their names, ages, and sex; and furthermore, that they have not been guilty of or committed murder, burglary, arson, or other felony within such State, as required by the laws of the Territory, and in defiance thereof, and further, that said slaves having been brought into this Territory as merchandize, were sold to defendants by said Thornton on the — day of March, 1842, at Apalachicola, in the Territory of Florida, where they were first sold in this Territory without coming to be registered with the clerk of the County Court of Franklin County, the certificate required by law as aforesaid, containing a particular description of said slaves as aforesaid, and that they were not guilty of and had not committed murder, and the other crimes aforesaid, in said State, and that said slaves were sold to defendants by said Thornton and said Jordan, without having obtained the certificate of description required by said statute, and without complying with the law of this territory entitled an act relating to crimes and misdemeanors committed by slaves, free negroes, and mulattoes. And defendant saith that on account of the defences and causes herein set forth, as well as in the action at law on the said note to which he 304 refers, and makes a part of his objections herein, he ought not to be compelled to pay said note and mortgage, the same being on account thereof, and the reasons and causes herein set forth, null and void.

THOMAS BALTZELL,
For Defendant, BENNETT.

TERRITORY OF FLORIDA, JACKSON COUNTY.

Before me personally appeared A. T. Bennett, defendant in the above suit, who being duly sworn, saith that the matters above stated, so far as they are inserted from his own knowledge and belief, are true, and so far as made from the knowledge of others, he believes to be true.

A. T. BENNETT.

Sworn and subscribed before me, 24th July, 1844.

R. BALLARD, J. P.

Which was written across by the court and refused in these words: "Refused because the law is so mixed with fact in the instruction asked, that one cannot be given without the other."

3d. Defendant next asked his third instruction in these words: that no man can claim title to property sworn by himself to have been acquired by a direct violation of the statute of frauds, as against the parties intended to be defrauded, (which the court altered by adding thereto the words, "unless he shews that he made such oath under a misapprehension as to the law or the facts of the evil,") which instruction, so altered, the court gave.

4th. The defendant then asked his fourth instruction, viz: That running off mortgaged negroes is felony by the law of Georgia, punishable by confinement in the penitentiary, and no man can claim property acquired through a felony, with notice of the facts, and his own affidavit of the facts is conclusive upon him. And defendant's counsel offered

305 to read to the court said Georgia statutes from a printed statute published and printed under and by authority of the State of Georgia. (This offer to read the laws of Georgia was not made, however, by defendant's counsel until the argument of counsel on both sides had closed, and after instructions had been prayed for and given up to instruction 4th.) Which the court refused to hear read, and refused to give the instruction, and wrote thereon these words: "What the law of Georgia is must be proven."

5th. The defendant's fifth instruction then asked—the court then gave, after including therein the words here written in brackets, that a voluntary bill of sale, in which no money is paid, [or other valuable consideration given,] carries no title against prior creditors, especially mortgage creditors; and even if another person should buy for money, with notice of the person holding under such bill of sale, such new party can claim no title against prior creditors or mortgagees.

Defendant's sixth instruction was then given by the court in these words, without alteration viz: that a mortgagee has an absolute title, subject to be defeated by payment at the day, and after the day passed, the mortgagor has no title whatever at law, and an action of trover cannot be maintained by him or his assignee.

7th. The court next gave, without alteration, defendant's seventh instruction, viz: After mortgage is past due, the title in personal property is fixed in the mortgagee, and he cannot be guilty of conversion, because the property is in the mortgagee, and trover cannot be maintained against him.

8th. The court then gave, without alteration, defendant's eighth instruction, viz: The equity of redemption is only a title in equity—can only be set up in equity, and even there the party must come with clean hands and the 306 utmost purity; the least fraud would put him out of court.

9th. Defendant's ninth instruction [is] in these words: That the title to the sixteen [thirteen] negroes mentioned in the action of trover in Georgia, was decided in that case to be in Farish Carter, and the jury cannot reverse or review that decision, and must throw that number of negroes from their consideration—which the court refused, writing thereon "refused," because involving facts upon which the court is prohibited from instructing the jury.

10th. The tenth was waived and erased.

11th. The eleventh was given, without alteration, by the court thus: That a claim bond without securities is no claim bond, and an attachment which contains no description of personal property, and an affidavit which gives no description of the property, amounts to no claim under the statute, and would be disregarded by the court.

12th. The defendant's twelfth instruction was then given by the court, without alteration, viz: When a party claims under another whose rights have been regularly adjudicated, such adjudication bars the party so claiming.

13th. Defendant's thirteenth instruction was in these words: The record in the case of Peninah W. Thomas vs. Farish Carter being in evidence before the jury, and commented on by plaintiff, is conclusive as to any subject matter decreed upon in said record; and if the record shows that a foreclosure has been had in Georgia on the personal property by said mortgage conveyed on the fifth July, 1842, the titles to the personal property became absolute in the mortgagee—an action of trover for said personal property, subsequently commenced by the mortgagor, or any person claiming by, through or under him, cannot be maintained—which the court refused, writing on the same "refused," because it is not conclusive against 307 any but those who are parties or privies to the record.

14th. Defendant's fourteenth instruction was then given, without alteration, except the addition in brackets at the end, viz: A party whose title is tainted with fraud, cannot rely upon such title to object to the regularity of a decree rendered in favor of the creditor against the debtor, who did so fraudulently part with his title; and this will apply in the case of a foreclosure of mortgage by a mortgagee, against mortgagor, where the decree is attacked by any one claiming title under a mortgagor who has fraudulently conveyed his equity of redemption to hinder and delay the mortgage, [such person being cognizant of the fraud at the time of his purchase.]

15th. Defendant's fifteenth instruction was then given by the court, without alteration, to-wit: If a common law judgment is rendered against a party who could not there defend his rights, a Court of Equity will interfere by injunction, upon proper showing, to stay the proceedings at law.

16th. The defendant then asked his sixteenth instruction, in the words following, which the court refused as written, but gave with the additional words in brackets below, viz: In case of foreclosure at common law under our statute, any person claiming by, through or under a mortgagor, can come in and state his objections, under oath, showing cause against foreclosure of the mortgage property—to which the court added, ["provided, he is served with legal notice, either personally or by advertisement."]

17th. The court gave defendant's seventeenth instruction, without alteration, viz: The doctrine of notice applies only to bona fide purchasers.

18th. Defendant then asked an instruction that plain- 308 tiff, to maintain trover, must prove as follows:

1st. That he had a right to the property claimed and was entitled to the immediate possession of the same at the time the action was commenced. Which was given.

2d. That plaintiff must prove a conversion by the defendant at or before the commencement of the action. Which was given.

2d. That no such property or possession can be maintained against a prior creditor of the vendor, Thornton or Jordan, unless such property or possession was obtained bona fide. Which was refused by the court, and written upon "Mixed with fact."

4th. That a possession obtained by fraud cannot be set up as a possession in which to sustain trover. Which was given by the court.

To all of which several rulings and opinions of said court against defendant upon the questions of evidence, and refusals to charge and instruct, and alterations of instructions, defendant, by his counsel, excepted and prayed that his bill of exceptions might be signed and sealed by the court, which was accordingly done; and this constituted the defendant's first bill of exceptions.

After the rendition of the verdict in this cause, the defendant's counsel moved for a new trial, on the following grounds, to-wit:

1st. The verdict is against the law, and against the instructions of the court.

2d. Against the evidence.

3d. Against the weight of evidence.

4th. Excessive damages.

5th. Verdict gives interest as well as hire and excessive valuations.

6th. Verdict exceeds the whole amount claimed and the 309 amount of all the slaves, as valued in the declaration mentioned, when plaintiff, at the trial, admitted, and the same was proved, the re-capture of sixteen of said negro slaves, and abandoned his suit for the same.

7th. The verdict is indefinite, in finding costs as part of the damages.

8th. The jury gave a verdict beyond the value of property proved by any evidence.

9th. Surprise in ruling out testimony by the court.

10th. Because plaintiff claims title through an act which it appears by his own oath, unexplained, was a felony in Georgia.

11th. Because no conversion was proved, and said verdict is in other respects unlawful and informal.

Which said motion was overruled by the court, and a new trial refused, to which refusal and opinion defendant, by his counsel, excepted; and this constituted defendant's second bill of exceptions.

And said motion for a new trial having been overruled as aforesaid, the said court adjourned until Tuesday, the 26th, at nine o'clock, the 24th being the Sabbath, and the 25th Christmas day, and on the opening of the court on Tuesday, the defendant, by counsel, moved the court in arrest of judgment, and that said cause be dismissed from this court, with the order to the clerk to transfer the papers to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, or hold said papers and proceedings subject to any order of transfer or demand from said District Court, and upon said motion defendant's counsel showed to the court that this cause was instituted by a writ of which the following was admitted by counsel of plaintiff to be a true copy, as well as of the endorsements thereon, the original having been lost or mislaid:

310 In the Name of the Territory of Florida.

H. Hawley, Marshal.

The declaration and plea were then exhibited to the court, and the various entries made on the record of the Superior Court of Franklin County, prior to the third of March, 1845, as well as those made subsequent to the admission of Florida into the Union.

Defendant then offered to prove that Farish Carter was, at the commencement of said action, and has been at all times since, a citizen and resident of the State of Georgia, which fact was admitted by counsel for plaintiff.

Plaintiff then showed, by the evidence of William Valeau, clerk of this court, that after his election as such clerk, at the first state election, holden in 1845, he received from George F. Baltzell, the late Clerk of the Su- 311 perior Court of Franklin county for the Apalachicola District, the records of said court, and all the papers in the said cause, which are now in court, and that said papers were by him filed, and so have since remained in this court.

And the following order hereto appealed from the District Court of the United States, was served upon him, but he did not give up or surrender the papers, records and proceedings in these cases, or any of them:

In District Court of the United States, for the Northern District of Florida.

At Judge's Chambers,
St. Augustine, 29th March, 1847.

Whereas, in and by an act of Congress, approved 22d February, 1847, entitled an "Act to regulate the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes," it is enacted that all and singular the records of the proceedings in the several cases which were pending in the Superior Court of the late Territory of Florida, under and by virtue of the act of Congress of the 23d May, 1828, entitled an act supplementary to the several acts providing for the settlement and confirmation of private land claims in Florida, approved 26th May, 1830, and in the several cases which are pending in the Court of Appeals of the same Territory on the third day of March, 1845, and all and singular the records of the proceedings in the several cases in which judgments or decrees have been rendered in said courts, on or before that day, and from which writs of error could have been sued out, or appeals could have been taken, or from which writs of error had been sued out, or appeals had been taken and prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the laws of the United States which were in force on the said third day 312 of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, shall, from and after the passage of the first above recited act of Congress, of the 22d February, 1847, be transferred to and deposited in the District Court of the United States for the District of Florida;

And whereas, it is further enacted in and by the second section of the said act of Congress, approved 22d February, 1847, that it shall be the duty of the Judge of the District Court of the United States for the District of Florida, immediately after the passage of said act to cause the same to be notified to the several Clerks of the Superior Courts, or to other officers or persons having in their possession or custody the records of the proceedings herein above referred to and described, and to demand the delivery of the same, to be deposited as above specified and required, and on the refusal of such clerk, or other officer or person, to comply with such demand, the said Judge is authorized and required to compel the delivery of said records, by attachment, or otherwise, according to law:

And whereas, in and by a subsequent act of Congress, approved 23d February, 1847, entitled an act to establish a court at Key West, in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, it is enacted that the title and name of the said District Court of the United States for the District of Florida shall hereafter be "the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida."

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the provisions of said act of Congress herein first above recited, approved 22d February, 1847, it is hereby ordered by the Judge of said District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, that the Marshal of said District, either by himself or by any one of his deputies, be and he is hereby authorized and required to make known the aforesaid act of Congress of the 22d February, 1847, to the late Clerk of the Superior Court of the Apalachicola District in the County of Franklin, and to the present Clerk of the Circuit Court of Franklin County, or to any other persons within the late Apalachicola District of the Territory of Florida, who may have the possession and custody of any of the aforesaid records of the proceedings in the cases above mentioned. And it is further ordered, that the said Marshal or his deputy shall cause a copy of this order, duly certified under the hand and seal of the clerk of this court, to be served personally on each and every of the officers or persons above mentioned, and at the same time shall demand from the person on whom the same shall be served, a delivery (in pursuance of the act of Congress last mentioned) of the aforesaid records herein before mentioned, or of such or so many of such records as may be in the possession and custody of such person, and the said Marshal or his deputy is hereby authorized and empowered to receive from each or any of the persons or officers aforesaid so notified by him any of the aforesaid records, which such persons or officer may deliver to him, and to deposit the same with the clerk of this court at Apalachicola, or such records may be delivered by the persons or officers having possession and custody of them directly to or deposited with the said clerk of this court at Apalachicola.

And it is further ordered, that the Marshal who shall serve this order and make demand of said records as aforesaid, shall respectfully request of each of said officers or persons on whom the same may be served, a written reply or answer to said demand, and also a written schedule of any records or papers, which may be delivered by such officer or person either to him or the clerk of this court in pursuance of the foregoing act of Congress or this order. And it is further ordered, that the said Marshal or his dep-

314 uty shall, without delay, make full and particular return in regard to the execution of this order, and of his doings herein, to the Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida. And it is further ordered, that this order be entered of record by the Clerk of said Court at Apalachicola, and copies furnished without delay to the Marshal or his deputy for service.

(Signed,) I. H. BRONSON,
Judge U. S. District Court for the Northern District of Florida.

I, Joseph S. May Clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, in the Apalachicola District, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original order now on file in my office of said court.

In testimony whereof, I hereunto set my hand and [SEAL.] affix the seal of said court, this the 28th day of December, 1848.

JOSEPH S. MAY,
Clerk U. S. District Court.

Defendant having made these facts apparent to the court, contended and stated, in support of his motion aforesaid, that it was manifest to the court that this cause was commenced and came to issue in the District Court of the United States for the District of Apalachicola, sitting as the Superior Court of Franklin County, in the then Territory of Florida, a court established by the Congress of the United States, and under its juruisdiction and control; and because it does not appear how the said cause, and the records and papers of the same, were ever legally transferred to this court, or that the same have ever been so transferred, or that the same are not yet legally remaining in the said Territorial Court's office, or that the same have not been removed, and said cause been tried or dismissed, or yet remains pending in the District Court of the United 315
States; and because the courts established by the Government of the United States have the exclusive right to hear and determine all causes legally commenced in the courts established by said Government, unless the same be prevented by act of Congress, or the consent of the parties; and because, by the act of Congress of 22d February, 1847, entitled an act to regulate the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes, all the judgments, papers and records of said Superior Courts of the Territory of Florida, were transferred to the District Court of the United States, and all cases pending in any of the Superior Courts of said Territory of Florida, on the third day of March, A. D. 1845, and not legally transferred to the said courts of Florida, and which are claimed to have been pending in said courts after said day, were, by said act, transferred to the District Court of the United States for the District of Florida, afterwards called the Northern District of Florida.

And defendant insisted that said act of Congress proprio vigore, transferred said cause to said court, the same having been pending in said court at said time, and never legally transferred to any State Court, and that this court had not then, and never had, jurisdiction to hear and determine said cause so commenced and pending as aforesaid.

And defendant further referred to the law of Florida of the twenty-second day of July, 1845, by which only such causes are attempted or pretended to be transferred from the Territorial Superior Courts to the Circuit Courts of the State, as are not cognizable by the Federal Courts, and contended that this cause was commenced in a "Federal Court by personal service upon him, and is and hath been at all times since cognizable in a Federal Court, and never 316 was transferred legally, or cognizable in this court."

And defendant further showed that, since said act of Congress of 1847 was passed there had been no Judge presiding in this court, who could (as he contended) take any action in this case under the laws of this State, until the present term. The only Judges who had, since the passage of said act of Congress of 1847, presided in this court, having been the Honorable Thomas Baltzell and the Honorable George S. Hawkins, as was proved by inspection of the record, and both of whom it appeared by the record have been attorneys and counsellors in this case, and the same was admitted, and defendant therefore only had power to continue said causes; and defendant contended that the continuances before recited as entered in this cause in this court, were null and void, and of no effect, this court never having had possession or jurisdiction of the same at any time.

But said court having heard argument of counsel on said motion, overruled the same, and gave judgment for the plaintiff—to which opinion and overruling defendant by his counsel excepted, and prayed that his bill of exceptions might be signed and sealed by the court, which was accordingly done; and this constituted defendant's third bill of exceptions.

The defendant then moved in arrest of judgment, on the following grounds, to wit:

1st. That this court has no jurisdiction to try the said cause, because the record and proceedings therein of right belong to the District court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, holden in the city of Apalachicola, the same being a part of the unfinished business —it being a case pending in the Superior court of the Territory of Florida at and after the third day of March,

Carter vs. Bennett.—Statement of Case.

317 1845, viz: the Superior Court of the Apalachicola District of Florida, being a Territorial Court, created and continued by act of Congress, up to the admission of Florida as a State, from which time the said court became defunct, and the proceedings therein abated, until the same were transferred by act of Congress, passed in 1837, to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida.

2d. Because Hon. GEORGE S. HAWKINS, Judge of the Western Circuit of Florida, was of counsel in this cause —which fact defendant offering to prove, was admitted by plaintiff's counsel—and because the Legislature of Florida, at its session holden in January, 1848, made special provision for the time and manner in which the said case should be tried, and also prescribed how the Judge should be selected who should try the same; that this case is included in the class of cases about which special legislation has been had, and the trial of said cause at this term, by the Hon. THOMAS DOUGLAS, as presiding Judge, who is commissioned only as Judge of the Eastern Circuit, and not of the Western Circuit, is in direct opposition to the Act of January, 1848, in this—that the right to appoint a judge to try causes in which the resident judge is interested, or was of counsel or attorney, is given to the Supreme Court of the State, and not to the resident judge so interested.

3d. That it does not appear that the requisitions of the law have been complied with by the resident Judge, GEO. S. HAWKINS, Judge of the Western Circuit, he not having made a report of the cases in which he was interested as counsel, of which this is one, to the Supreme Court to be holden after passage of said act.

4th. That the cases in which the resident judge is interested as counsel, of which this is one, are postponed for 318 trial until after the session of the Supreme Court, which does not occur until the first Monday in January next, and then they are to be tried at a subsequent term, to be designated by the Supreme Court.

5th. That such time has not arrived, such judge has not been appointed, and the said case, which is one of those provided for by the act of the Legislature approved by the Governor of the State of Florida January 4th, 1848, has not been reported by the resident judge to the Supreme Court of the State, as by said act required. Which motion the court overruled, and to which overruling defendant, by his counsel, excepted, and prayed that his bill of exceptions might be signed and sealed by the court, which was accordingly done; and this constituted the defendant's fourth bill of exceptions.

The errors assigned are twenty-eight in number, and are as follows, to wit:

I. The court erred in giving judgment for plaintiff below, because the action was brought in December, 1842, in the Superior Court of Franklin county, Territory of Florida, and in said court continued until the 17th of February, 1845, when it was ordered that this cause be continued, by consent of counsel, until the next term, whereby it appears that this cause is yet pending in the District Court of the United States for the District of Apalachicola, (a Court of Federal cognizance and jurisdiction,) unless removed by act of Congress to some other court, and the Circuit Court had no jurisdiction to give judgment in this cause.

II. Because it nowhere appears by what rule, law, authority or order said Circuit Court obtained jurisdiction to hear and determine said cause so commenced and continued in the said Superior Court of Franklin county, Territory of Florida, and the record showing that the cause was so commenced in another court and another jurisdiction, it must appear, to give validity to the decision of the Circuit 319
Court, that such cause came into said Circuit Court lawfully and regularly for decision, and not so appearing, said decision must be reversed.

III. Because the court erred in ruling out the notes offered in evidence by defendant.

IV. And in admitting the plaintiff's depositions of Ephriam W. Johnson and Minor W. Brown.

V. Because the court erred in admitting plaintiff's deposition of Benjamin F. Griffin.

VI. And the deposition of George W. Collier for plaintiff.

VII. And the bonds and affidavit introduced by plaintiff as his rebutting testimony, marked No. 10.

VIII. Because the court erred in excluding defendant's testimony of the clearance of the slaves at the custom-house for New Orleans, and the certificate of Nathan Baker appended thereto, referred to in the testimony of said Baker.

IX. The court erred in refusing to instruct the jury generally upon the points of law arising in the case when called upon by counsel, and in its construction of the statute of 1848 upon that subject.

X. The court erred in refusing the first special instruction asked by defendant's counsel.

XI. And in giving the modified instruction in lieu thereof, there being no facts of ignorance or misapprehension of rights whatever proved to justify this modification.

XII. And in refusing the second special instruction asked by defendant.

XIII. And in the addition or qualification made to defendant's third special instruction asked, there being no evidence to justify said addition.

XIV. And in adding the qualification ("or other consideration given,") to defendant's fifth instruction, there being no evidence to authorize it, and the bills of sale pur- 320 porting to be for money.

XV. The court erred in refusing defendant's ninth instruction.

XVI. And his thirteenth instruction.

XVII. And in adding the quualification in brackets to defendant's fourteenth instruction, to wit: "Such person being cognizant of the fraud at the time of his purchase," and in refusing to give such instruction as asked, without qualification.

XVIII. And in refusing the sixteenth instruction of defendant as asked, and adding the qualification, "provided he is served with legal notice, either personally or by advertisement,"—the same being unnecessary under the statute, and the qualification calculated to mislead.

XIX. The court erred in refusing to give the third clause of defendant's eighteenth instruction.

XX. And in refusing his motion for a new trial.

XXI. The court erred in refusing to arrest the judgment and dismiss the cause, and order the clerk to transfer the papers to the District Court of the United States.

XXII. And in not arresting the judgment for reasons assigned in defendant's fourth bill of exceptions.

XXIII. That Thomas Douglas, who rendered the judgment, committed error in so doing in this—that he was elected and commissioned as Judge of the Eastern Circuit, and George S. Hawkins was elected and commissioned as Judge of the Western Circuit, and Franklin county is in said Western Circuit, and said Hawkins had been of counsel in this cause, and in such case said Hawkins had no power to preside himself, or to select the judge who should preside in his place at the trial of this cause; but it was provided by the act of January 4th, 1848, that the selection of the judge who should try such causes should be 321 rested in the Supreme Court of the State, whose duty it is made in such case to assign one of the Judges thereof, not interested, or otherwise disqualified to try such cause, and said Thomas [Douglas] had not been selected or assigned, but only claimed to sit as by request of said Hawkins.

XXIV. That said Douglas erred in entering judgment upon said verdict—the same being illegal, having been rendered by twelve men not authorized by law, and without the presence of the Judge of said court, George S. Hawkins, during the trial of said cause.

XXV. That the court erred in rendering judgment, because the verdict is general for the plaintiff on the issue for more than the whole amount of damages claimed, when plaintiff in open court admitted the capture of certain of the slaves, to wit: sixteen in number, amounting to the aggregate value of $————, and abandoned his action as to them—and yet the verdict finds for plaintiff for all, and makes no distinction.

XXVI. The court erred in rendering judgment upon the verdict, which is for more than the aggregate of all the values in the declaration alleged, for all the slaves not recaptured and abandoned in this action—and there is no count or claim in the declaration for any further amount that such value—no claim for interest or hire, and as to that, no issue no litigation, no suit.

XXVII. The judgment should be reversed, because it appears by the record that the court had no jurisdiction of the cause—the Judge no commission to try the cause, if the court had had jurisdiction—and the judgment is for an amount and for property not in litigation between the parties.

XXVIII. The court erred in not dismissing the action, when it was shown by plaintiff's affidavit in a court of re-322 cord, and corroborated by other testimony, that the action was based upon and intended to sustain a fraud and felony.

Archer, McDonald and Colquitt, for Appellant.

Davis, for Appellee.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

This was an action of trover brought by the appellee against the appellant in the county of Franklin, to recover damages for the alleged conversion of a number of negro slaves.

On the trial in that court, at the Fall term of 1848, there was a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount of $19,999 66-100.

The case was brought by appeal to this court. The errors assigned, being twenty-eight in number, we propose to consider in the order presnted by the record, and to make such reference to the facts of the case as may be necessary to the proper understanding of the points upon which we are called to decide.

The first and second errors assigned—which we shall consider together as presenting substantially the same question—are in the following words:

"1st. The court erred in giving judgment for the plaintiff below, because the action was brought in December, 1842, in the Superior court of Franklin county, Territory of Florida, and in said court continued until the 17th of February, 1845, when it was ordered that this cause be continued, by consent of counsel until the next term, whereby it appears that this cause is yet pending in the District court of the United States for the District of Appalachicola, (a court of Federal cognizance and jurisdiction,) unless removed by act of Congress to some other court.

and the Circuit Court has no jurisdiction to give jugdment 323 in this case.

"2. Because it nowhere appears by what rule, law, authority or order said Circuit Court obtained jurisdiction to hear and determine said cause so commenced and continued in the said Superior Court of Franklin county, Territory of Florida, and the record showing that the cause was so commenced in another court and another jurisdiction, it must appear, to give validity to the decision of the Circuit Court, that said cause came into said Circuit Court lawfully and regularly for decision, and not so appearing, said decision must be reversed."

The facts upon which this denial of the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is founded, are briefly as follows:

The action was commenced in December, 1842, in the Superior Court of Franklin county, while Florida was a Territory of the United States.

It was continued from term to term till the 17th of February, 1845, on which day the following order was made, viz: "Ordered that this cause be continued, by consent of counsel, until the next term." On the 3d of March of the same year Florida was admitted into the Union as a State, and the new State Legislature having proceeded with as little delay as possible to organize a State Judiciary, the State Courts were held in the respective counties at the Fall Terms.

In December, 1845, the order of the State Court sitting in Franklin county, in relation to the case before us, was as follows, viz: "Ordered that this cause be continued."

At the Spring Term, 1846, we find a similar order. At the Fall Term, 1846, the parties appeared, by their attorneys, and argued a motion made by the plaintiff to rule out certain depositions, and the cause was again continued.

There was no Spring Term held in 1847, and at the Fall Term of that year, and the Spring Term of 1848, the same 324 orders of continuance were made. At the Fall Term, 1848, the parties came, by their attorneys, and a jury being called, they went to trial, which resulted in the verdict and judgment already mentioned.

Upon this statement the enquiry naturally arises as to the mode in which the State Court became possessed of the papers and proceedings appertaining to a cause which had originated in a court of another power, and of the right of the State Court after obtaining such possession to carry on and complete, without new process and pleadings, a judicial controversy left incomplete by the Territorial or United States Court when it passed out of existence.

The fact is incontestible that the Superior Court of the Territory, though not a constitutional but a legislative court, according to the distinction made by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the American Insurance Company vs. Canter, (1 Peters' R., 546,) was a Court of the United States, since it derived its existence from the legislation of the United States, acting under the powers conferred by the Constitution.

The Circuit Court being a State Court, had no right as such to succeed to the records and jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, although the State Courts were held in the same places, and were found to be in possession of the records and exercised in fact jurisdiction, though somewhat restricted, over the same matters.

One court was not the successor of the other in any sense not provided for by competent legislation, and the possession of the papers without the sanction of such legislation was wholly impotent to carry with it into a distinct tribunal jurisdiction over the varied controversies of which those papers were only the records.

Another consequence may be deduced from the fact that these two courts derived their existence and their powers from distinct sources, and that is, that the legislation which we have said is necessary to create any relation between the courts, must have the sanction, express or implied, of both the sovereignties to which they belong, before such legislation can be binding upon the courts, either as to their officers or as to the suitors.

As no legislation of the Congress of the United States could interfere with the records and limited jurisdiction of the State Courts, (except in certain cases where the States have antecedently ceded the right,) without the acquiescence of the State, so can no State legislation, without the acquiescence of Congress, make the records of a Territorial or United States court the records of the State courts, or authorize any proceedings on them.

These propositions as thus stated, seem to require no argument, and were clearly recognized by this court at its last session, in the case of Inerarity vs. Curtis & Griswold.

The case before us was commenced in the Territorial court in 1842, and was continued from term to term until the last session of that court, February, 1845; and in the Fall of that year, we find it, without new process, on the docket of the State court at its first session, and it was considered and continued by that court from term to term until final trial. As we have alleged in the general propositions already stated, that the validity of this transfer of the cause from one court to another depends upon the concurring legislation of the State and Congress, we are brought to an enquiry into the character and extent of such legislation.

The constitution of the State of Florida gives to the circuit courts the most extensive jurisdiction. The sixth Section of the fifth Article provides that "The circuit 326 "courts shall have original jurisdiction in all matters, "civil or criminal, within this State, not otherwise ex- "cepted in this constitution."

The subject matter of the suit between Bennett and Carter is no where excepted in the constitution, and was therefore legitimately before the circuit court for Franklin county, if properly brought there.

The act of July 22, 1845, in section 5th, enacts that "all "causes, civil and criminal, pending in the Superior Courts, "and all common law cases pending in the county courts, "shall be transferred to the circuit courts, to be held in "the several counties in which such cases may be so pend- "ing as aforesaid, together with all the papers connected "therewith or relating thereto, and the said causes shall be "proceeded in without delay in said circuit courts."

The same act, in its 8th section, makes substantially the same provision for the transfer of papers and the jurisdiction of causes pending in the Superior courts, with the following exception: "Except all cases cognizable by the "Federal courts which may be organized in this State "which cases shall be transferred to said court."

These provisions of the constitution and the Laws seem ample to give to the circuit court (so far as the State is competent to give it) jurisdiction over the cause before us, and a right to the possession of the papers connected therewith or relating thereto, unless it comes within the exception just recited.

If it was a case cognizable by the Federal courts which might be organized in the State, it would seem by the terms of the 8th section of the act referred to, to be excepted from the operation of this provision for transferring, even though the jurisdiction of the two courts might be concurrent.

It could scarcely have been within the contemplation of the Legislature to give to the exception this extensive im- 327 port; but as the purpose of the law was a transfer of cases from a distinct and independent tribunal, and there was no inherent virtue in the State Court considered in its relation to the Territorial Court to draw to it, from the latter, its jurisdiction independently of legislative enactment, we feel constrained to interpret the extent of this exception according to the plain and literal meaning of its terms, and if this case was cognizable by the Federal Courts, to sustain the error here assigned.

Was it then cognizable by the Federal Court? Could the Federal Court, which was organized in this State, have taken cognizance of it? Let us see.

All the courts of the United States derive their authority from express grant, and "can exercise jurisdiction in "those cases only where it is conferred upon them by act "of Congress." 1 Wash. C. C. R. 231.

The acts of Congress conferring authority upon the Federal Court organized in Florida, (so far as they relate to the subject of our present enquiry,) are the general judiciary act of 1789, and the act of February 22, 1847, which has more direct reference to the court in this State.

The former act, after providing for the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court in certain cases, in its 12th section provides, "That if a suit be commenced in any State Court against "an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is "brought against the citizen of another State, the matter "in dispute exceeding five hundred dollars, and the de- "fendant shall, at the time of entering his appearance in "such State Court, file his petition for the removal of the "cause for trial into the next Circuit Court, on giving bail, "&c., the cause shall then proceed as if brought by origi- "nal process."

This provision of the act is the only one under which it 328 is claimed that the case before us was cognizable by the Federal Court, and the claim rests upon the alleged fact that Carter was a citizen of the State of Georgia. This fact no where appears during the process of the trial, either in the pleadings or the evidence; but after verdict, upon a motion in arrest of judgment, the defendant offered to prove that, at the commencement of the action, and at all times since, he was a citizen and resident of the State of Georgia, and the fact was admitted by counsel for plaintiff.

The Federal Court deriving its authority solely from express grant, Carter must bring his right to be sued in that court, within the provisions of such grant; the court cannot take jurisdiction by mere analogy.

This suit was not commenced in a State Court, nor did the defendant at the appearance term, nor at any term, file his petition for the removal of the cause. Where, then, is the authority of the court to take cognizance? The judiciary act gives no authority for the removal of a cause commenced in a Territorial Court, and especially where no motion is made until after verdict; and the authority not being given, it must be denied under the decision already quoted from the Circuit Court Reports, that the courts of the United States "can exercise jurisdiction in "those cases only where it is conferred upon them by act "of Congress."

It is no sufficient answer to this position to say that, from the peculiar circumstances attending the changes which occurred in the year 1845 in the judicial system of Florida, the defendant was never in a situation to avail himself of the privileges secured by the judiciary act to a non-resident defendant, according to the literal provisions of the act, and that he ought not to suffer from this involuntary disability.

It may be a hardship, but the court cannot make law;

329 and we have seen that the United States Court cannot take jurisdiction, however meritorious the claim, without express grant. The very statement of the hardship negatives the right.

The laws of Florida, with unwonted and perhaps unguarded liberality, surrendered to the Federal Courts all the pending cases where there was concurrent jurisdiction, wherever the latter could or would take cognizance. but the judiciary act of 1789 does not bring this case within its cognizance.

Let us now enquire if the act of Congress of February 22, 1847, passed in more direct reference to the court of Florida, supplies the omission.

The object of this act was place under the control and jurisdiction of the District court organized in Florida, certain records and proceedings in the old Territorial courts.

The act is too long to be here recited, but a careful examination of it will show that it makes no provision for the transfer of the case in question. There are several classes of cases enumerated in the act, and transferred to the District court, and we will briefly describe them.

1st. Pending suits in relation to private land claims under certain acts of Congress.

2d. Causes pending in the court of Appeals on the 3d of March, 1845.

3d. Causes determined prior to that period, on which writs of error could have been sued out or appeals taken to the Supreme court under existing laws.

4th. Causes determined wherein writs of error had been sued out or appeals taken.

5th. All cases pending in any of the Superior courts of Florida or in the court of Appeals on the 3d March, 1845, and not legally transferred to the State courts of the State of Florida, and which said Territorial courts continued to 330 hold cognizance of, and proceeded to determine after that day, or which are claimed to have been since pending therein as courts of the United States.

6th. All cases of Federal character and jurisdiction commenced in said Territorial courts after said day, &c.

The case of Bennett vs. Carter was not founded upon any private land claim, and is not therefore embraced in the first class.

It was not pending in the court of Appeals, and is not therefore embraced in the second class.

It had not been determined prior to the 3d March, 1845. and is not therefore embraced in the third or fourth class.

The Territorial courts did not continue to hold cognizance of it, and proceed to determine it after that day; neither was it claimed at the date of the passage of the act to have been pending in the Territorial courts as courts of the United States, and it is not therefore embraced in the fifth class.

The case was not commenced after the 3d of March, 1845, and is not therefore embraced in the sixth class.

It thus appears that this case is no where made cognizable by the Federal court, and not being cognizable by that court, it does not fall within the exception of the Florida law, so that, so far as the Legislature of the State of Florida could accomplish its transfer to the State courts, the provision for its transfer is abundantly adequate.

We have yet to show the concurrent assent of Congress to this transfer, but before proceeding to do so, we will advert for a moment to the nature of Carter's claim to any relaxation in his favor of the strict construction we have felt ourselves constrained to give to the legislative delegation of jurisdiction to the court.

During the interval between the Spring and Fall Terms in 1845, the case is transferred from the Territorial to the objection on the part of defendant to the jurisdiction of the court. At the ensuing Spring term it is again continued, without any objection on his part. At the next term he appears and argues a motion made in reference to the testimony. And thus he continues to appear from term to term till three years from his first appearance in the State Court had elapsed. At the end of that time he goes to trial, and after a verdict has been rendered against him, we hear for the first time his objection to the court, or even that he was a citizen of another State.

If he had any privilege at all, it was purely personal. There is no pretence that the subject matter was not cognizable by the State Court; and a privilege purely personal may be waived, and if it ever existed was in this instance waived by repeated acquiescence in the jurisdiction assumed.

But to return to the argument:—We have shown that so far as State legislation was competent to give it, the Circuit Court had full authority to hear and determine this case. Had it the sanction of Congress, which we have admitted was necessary to the legal transfer of the records and proceedings therein?

The act of Congress of February 22d, 1847, was designed to transfer to the United States District Court organized in Florida all such records of the late Territorial Courts as belonged appropriately to that court. A careful specific enumeration was made of all the clases of cases so to be transferred as we have already mentioned. It was made the duty of the District Judge to take the necessary steps to get possession of these specified records from the Clerks of the old Courts, or other officers or persons having them in their possession, these expressions, other officers or persons, pointing obviously to the clerks of the State 332
Courts, who had in fact succeeded to the custody of the papers. This precise enumeration of cases to be transferred from the State Courts leads irresistibly to the inference that Congress acquiesced in the retention by the State Courts of all the other cases and the papers belonging to them. The act of the Legislature providing for the transfer of all these cases not thus enumerated had been passed more than a year and a half, and the State Courts, under the authority of that law, had possessed themselves of them, and had been adjudicating them for nearly the same period. It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that this act of the Legislature and the action of the courts under it received the sanction of Congress in the act of 1847, so far as they were not in conflict with that act.

Besides this, Florida has followed many an elder sister into the Union, and the same provisions had been repeatedly made for the transfer of Federal causes to the District Courts, accompanied by long acquiescence in the assumption by the courts of the new States of jurisdiction over causes not Federal.

The clearness and force of this inferential sanction of Congress is fully recognized both by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the Supreme Court of this State.

In the case of Benner vs. Porter, 9 Howard R., 235, the Supreme Court say:—"The acts of Congress that have "been passed in various instances on the admission of a "State, providing for the transfer of federal causes to the "District Courts, as in the case of the admission of Flori-"da, already referred to, and saying nothing at the time "in respect to those belonging to State authority, may "very well imply an assent to the transfer of them to the "appropriate tribunal.

333 "Even the omission on the part of Congress to interfere "at all in the matter may be subject to a like implication, "and a subsequent assent would doubtless operate upon "past acts of transfer by the State authority."

Our own Supreme Court, in the case of Inerarity vs. Curtis & Griswold, (4 Fla. R., 175,) say:—"Where, as in "the case of Florida, the act of 22d February, 1847, pro- "vides for the transfer of the records and proceedings of "certain classes of cases, saying nothing about other class- "es, of which the State courts should take jurisdiction, the "inference is irresistible that Congress intended that the "State authorities should assume jurisdiction over the lat- "ter, or if they had already assumed it, the omission may "well be considered as a tacit acquiescence in and a ratifi- "cation of the authority thus claimed and exercised." "So far as Congress, by the act of February 22, 1847, "claimed to exercise jurisdiction over certain classes of "records and pending causes, it is in our opinion the ex- "excise of a rightful power, and so far as Congress has not "claimed those records, it may be considered as the sanc- "tion of the General Government, to the exercise of the "jurisdiction by the State authorities over the subject."

We have thus shown that the transfer of the case of Bennett vs. Carter from the Territorial to the Circuit Court in which it was tried was made by the Florida Legislature, with the concurrence and sanction of Congress, and the co-operation of these two authorities was sufficient to give legality to the transfer, and jurisdiction to the Circuit Court.

We conclude, therefore, that the first and second errors are not well assigned.

III. The third error assigned is, that the court ruled out the notes offered in evidence by defendant.

The defendant was endeavoring to show a title to the negroes under a mortgage executed by one Warren Jordan

334 in favor of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, and after having given the mortgage in evidence, he tendered certain notes, which were ruled out by the court, upon the ground that they did not appear to be the debt of the mortgage.

It is the duty of the court to decide upon the relevancy of a particular fact when offered in evidence. The court in endeavoring to ascertain this, will not always confine its notice to other facts already proven, which, in connection with the fact proposed, will render the latter pertinent to the issue; but it has a right and ought to require the assertion at least of counsel that it will be shown, by evidence yet to be offered, to be material.

Such is the approved practice of the courts, (4 Starkie's Ev., 381,) and without such statement, it is not error to reject an isolated fact, apparently immaterial, though it may afterwards appear not to be so.

"If the evidence be irrelevant at the time it is offered, "it is not error to reject it because other evidence may af- "terwards be given in connection with which it would be- "come relevant."

"If it would be relevant in conjunction with other facts, "it should be proposed in connection with those facts, and "an offer to follow the evidence proposed with proofs of "those facts at a proper time."—2 Phil. Ev., 428, referring to 11 S. and R., 134.

"A deed to the lessor of the plaintiff may be rejected as irrelevant unless the title first be shown in the grantor, or at least an offer made to follow it up with proof of his title." 4 Litt., 272.

In action on a covenant to save from all judgments in favor of P. & B. against the owners of the steamboat H., recovered for the price of the boat, a record of a judgment on notes against the covenants in favor of P. & B., was held not relevant thus nakedly presented. It should have 335 been accompanied with proof aliunde that the notes were given for the price of the boat by the owners. Wilson's admr. vs. Bowen 5 Monroe, 33.

Though a matter may possibly be relevant, yet the party must show how, otherwise it cannot be received. 2 Philips on Evidence, 434.

It is evident from these authorities that if the evidence before the court at the time the notes were offered did not, in connection with the notes themselves and statement of counsel, show them to be relevant to the issue, they were rightly ruled out, whatever evidence might be subsequently offered.

How then did the case stand when the notes were offered, as developed on the record before us?

The defendant produced an indenture of mortgage from Warren Jordan of certain property in favor of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, to secure the payment of his note for $22,500, dated July 1st, 1839, payable six months after date, and endorsed by Reuben Thornton, and of all other notes that might be given in renewal thereof, or of each other, with interest and costs.

The original debt had been $25,000, and it was recited in the mortgage that the note given for that amount was to be renewed every six months from the first of January, 1839, with a reduction of ten per cent. at each renewal, or twenty per cent. annually, as the Bank might require.

The notes offered were one for $15,000, payable six months after July 1st, 1841, to the order of Reuben Thornton, at the Bank, and another of same date for $627.

There was no proof that these notes were the notes secured in the mortgage, and though it was alleged that they were the representatives of the debt, of which the mortgage was only an incident, it was not proper to supply the lack of proof by conjecture. Many things would have had 336 to be proved to connect them with the mortgage, and the lack of antecedent and accompanying proof of these things was not supplied by any statement of counsel that the identifying evidence would be forthcoming.

But even had it appeared that the notes were those intended to be secured by the mortgage, there was no proof offered to establish the fact that Carter was the owner of them. An assignment of the mortgage is not an assignment of the debt, (as we will have occasion to show hereafter,) and even if the assignment of the mortgage to Carter had been shown before the notes were offered, which it was not, such assignment would not have carried the notes with it. It is true that the notes tendered had the name of Thornton on them as endorser, but it was not proven that Thornton had endorsed them, and without such proof Carter's title was defective, and the notes were properly ruled out.

Though he was the holder of the notes, the proof of Thornton's endorsement was necessary to give him title. Two things were essential to make the notes relevant as testimony, to wit: That they were the notes secured by the mortgage, and also that they were the property of Carter. The failure of proof on either of these points would have justified the court in ruling them out, much more the absence of proof on both points.

For these reasons, we think the third error not well assigned.

IV, V and VI. The fourth, fifth and sixth points assigned for error was the admitting the depositions of Johnson, Brown, Griffin and Collier, witnesses for plaintiff. The object of the testimony was to prove the value of certain lands embraced in Jordan's mortgage to the Bank, and which had been sold to satisfy an execution in favor of

Carter. It is stated in the record that when this testimony was offered in three separate depositions they were objected to severally by the defendant, without stating any grounds of objection. 337

This practice is strongly reprobated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Camden vs. Doremus and others, 3 Howard, 515. In delivering their opinion in that case the court say: — "After each deposition "offered in evidence by the plaintiffs to the jury, it is sta- "ted that to the reading of such deposition the defendant, by "his counsel objected, and that his objection was over- "ruled.

"With regard to the manner and the import of this ob- "jection, we would remark that they were of a kind that "should not have been tolerated in the court below, pen- "ding the trial of the issue before the jury. Upon the of- "fer of testimony, oral and written, extended and compli- "cated as it may often prove, it could not be expected, "upon the mere suggestion of an exception, which did not "obviously cover the competency of the evidence, or point "to some definite and specific defect in its character, that "the court should explore the entire mass for the ascer- "tainment of defects which the objector himself either "would not or could not point to their view. It would be "more extraordinary still if under the mask of such an ob- "jection, or mere hint at objection, a party should be per- "mitted in an appellate court to spring upon his adversa- "ry, defects which it did not appear he ever relied on, "and which if they had been openly and specifically al- "leged might have been easily cured. 'Tis impossible "this court can determine or do more than conjecture, as "the objection is stated in this record, whether it applied "to form or substance, or how far, in the view of it pre- "sented to the court below, if any particular view was so 338 "presented, the court may have been warranted in over- "ruling it.

"We must consider objections of this character as vagueu "and nugatory, and, if entitled to weight anywhere, as "without weight before an appellate court."

"We must consider objections of this character as vague ment with the Supreme Court of the United States upon this point. "A party," says Mr. Justice Paige, "who "objects to evidence or the competency of witnesses, "should state specifically the grounds of his objections. "It is not sufficient to object generally that the evidence "is illegal, or the witness is incompetent; but the party "objecting must put his finger upon the very point, to "apprise the court and his adversary of the precise objec- "tion he intends to make." Elwood vs. Deifendorf, 5 Barbour's S. C. Reports, 406, citing 3. Howard, 515, 1 Cowen, 622, 12 Wendell, 504, 1 ib. 418, 1 Hill, 91.

The character of the objection and the mode of making it, in the case before us are precisely the same as those condemned by these two eminent courts. But there is still another circumstance appearing upon the record which shows still more that (to use the language of the Supreme Court,) "they should not have been tolerated in the court below." Two of the depositions were regularly crossed by defendant, and his cross interrogatories have direct reference to the main points sought to be proved, and in the third he objects only to certain of the interrogatories on grounds not relating to the relevancy of the evidence, and at the trial he makes his objection general, as in the other cases. By permitting the interrogatories to be put without objection as to the relevancy of the testimony, we consider him to have added much force to the condemnation pronounced by the two courts we have cited in regard to the vague and nugatory objection made at the trial.

Carter vs. Bennett.—Opinion of Court.

For these reasons chiefly, we think these errors not well assigned, though we may add, that the evidence, even if irrelevant, could not have possibly misled the jury. It is a well settled rule that the admission of immaterial testimony cannot be assigned for error by a party, where no injury could have possibly resulted to him from its introduction. As the position will apply to several of the remaining points which we have to examine, it may be proper here to sustain it by authority. In the case of Greenleafs, lessee, vs. Birth, 5 Peters, 135, Judge Story, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "And we wish it "to be understood as a general rule that where there are "various bills of exceptions filed, according to the local "practice, if in the progress of the cause the matter of any of "the exceptions become wholly immaterial to the merits, "as they are finally made out at the trial, they are no lon- "ger assignable as error, however they may have been "ruled in the court below. There must be some injury "to the party to make the matter generally assignable as "error." 339

In 1 Cond. Reports, 263, in the case of Turner vs. Fendall, Judge Marshal, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "Although the testimony rejected was proper and "legal evidence towards establishing the fact, yet the court "committed no error in rejecting the testimony, for which "this judgment ought to be reversed, because the fact does "not appear to have been relevant to the cause under consideration."

So in 7 Blackford, 578, in Van Vacter vs. McKillip, it is said: "The admission of immaterial evidence (the "merits of the case having been fully tried,) cannot be as- "signed for error."

The testimony referred to in the assignment under consideration was rebutting testimony, and as Carter by the ruling out of the notes had failed to show any title under the mortgage, its admission could not possibly have prejudiced him, and is not therefore assignable for error. 340

VII. The admission of certain bonds executed by Bennett on a claim to the negroes when levied on by Carter under his judgment on the mortgage, is assigned for error in the seventh place.

The assignment on the record connects certain affidavits of Bennett with the bonds, and the affidavits do in fact appear on the record, but it is clearly stated that the plaintiff only offered "two bonds," and as clearly that the "two papers" were objected to by defendant. And the record adds that before reading said bonds, plaintiff introduced Joseph Hand—the insertion of the affidavits is therefore a clerical error, caused probably by the affidavits and bonds being written on the same sheet of paper. The exhibition of the bonds could avail nothing to the injury of Carter, while they were calculated to rebut any presumption of acquiescence by Bennett in Carter's claim, "for admissions "may be implied from the acquiescence of the party." Greenleaf, 197.

The objection to this ruling of the court is not sustained

VII. The eighth matter assigned for error is that the court excluded defendant's testimony of the clearance of the slaves at the Custom House for New Orleans, and a certificate appended thereto.

It is impossible for us to perceive the relevancy of this testimony. If Bennett's right to the possession of the slaves was better than Carter's, he had a right to clear them—if it was not better his clearing them did not make it worse.

The error is not well assigned.

IX. It is ninthly assigned that the court erred in refu-

Carter vs. Bennett.—Opinion of Court.

341 sing to instruct the jury generally upon the points of law arising in the case, when called upon by counsel, and in its construction of the statute of 1848 upon that subject.

The common law principle, as asserted by the defendant's counsel, is undoubtedly true, that it is the duty of the judge to give the jury his opinion in matters of law arising upon the evidence.

Mr. Justice Blackstone says so in those very words. 3 Com., 375. But even if the act of 1848 made no change in the common law, it would not be in error for the judge to omit doing so, when he expressed his readiness to charge upon any point suggested by counsel.

In the case of Pennock et al. vs. Dialogue, the Supreme Court of the United States say: "It is no ground of reversal that the court below omitted to give directions to the jury upon any points of law which might arise in the cause, when it was not requested by either party at the trial. It is sufficient for us that the court has given no erroneous directions.

"If either party deems any point presented by the evidence to be omitted in the charges, it is competent for such party to require an opinion of the court upon that point. If he does not, it is a waiver of it. The court cannot be presumed to do more in ordinary cases, than to express its opinion upon the question which the parties themselves have raised at the trial." 2 Peters, 15 .

If the court omits to charge at all, the remedy of the party, who may deem himself prejudiced by such omission, is, in the first instance, to apply to the judge, and ask such instruction as he desires. If the judge refuse, he may then come to an Appellate Court for redress: he cannot come directly to this court without first seeking what he desires from the court below. If the omission to charge is a wrong at all, it is a wrong alike to both parties and to 342 the jury, and either party to make it a wrong against himself, of which he may complain, must point out to the judge what he wants, and be refused.

Such we understand to be the meaning of the Supreme Court in the opinion from which we have quoted. The requirement of the statute of 1848, that the charge shall be in writing, makes it, in many cases, physically impossible for the judge to charge upon every point of law, and according to the reasoning of defendant's counsel, the omission of one point would be error as well as the omission of all. The object of the statute seems to have been to restrain the judge from intermeddling with the facts.

The word "only," in the first section, qualifies the duty of charging—no new duty is imposed. At most, it is left as it was at common law, though the precise description of the mode of charging in the other sections seems, in some degree, to warrant the construction of his Honor, but upon that point we need give no opinion, as we think that, even at common law, there was no error in his ruling.

X, XI. It is assigned in the tenth and eleventh places that the court erred in refusing the first special instruction asked, and in giving a modified instruction in lieu thereof.

The instruction asked was as follows:

"That a party cannot be permitted to gainsay or deny his own solemn oath of record made in this court, setting up the facts sworn to as a defence in the action, and when such oath is introduced to the jury it is conclusive against such party making such oath, and the highest possible evidence;" which the court gave in substance, with this qualification: "But he may be permitted to explain it, and to show that it was made in ignorance of his rights, or under a misapprehension in regard to them."

In the case of Heane vs. Rogers, 9 B. & C., 577, (referred to and quoted in Greenleaf Ev., see 204, note,) Mr. 343
Justice Bailey, in delivering the judgment of the court, says:—"There is no doubt but that the express admission of a party to the suit, or admission implied from his conduct, are evidence and strong evidence against him, but we think he is at liberty to prove that such admissions were mistaken or untrue, and is not estopped or concluded by them, unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition. In such a case the party is estopped from disputing their truth with respect to that person, (and those claiming under him,) and that transaction, but as to third parties he is not bound. It is a well established rule of law that estoppels bind parties and privies, not strangers." See also numerous authorities referred to by Mr. Greenleaf. In the text of the same authority (Greenleaf, 210,) it is said:—"The mere fact that an admission was made under oath, does not seem alone to render it conclusive against the party, but it adds vastly to the weight of testimony, throwing upon him the burden of showing it was a case of clear and innocent mistake."

In Thomas vs. White, 1 Tyrw. and Grang. 110, cited in a note to the same section, "the party had sworn positively to matters of fact in his own knowledge, but it was held not conclusive in law against him, though deserving of much weight with the jury." The charge of the Judge appears to be in perfect accordance with these well established principles.

12th assignment. The facts upon which the twelfth assignment is based are as follows: The plaintiff in the court below had filed an affidavit in another cause, setting forth that the slaves sued for had been removed from the State of Georgia by Warren Jordan and Reuben Thornton, with intent to defraud the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, and others, contrary to the laws of that State; and further, that Jordan had brought the negroes into Flor- 344 ida in violation of the statute of the Territory.

Defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that a party cannot claim title to property in any court of this State, when such claim comes through such facts as were sworn to in the affidavit just mentioned. The court refused the instructions because "the law was so mixed with the facts in the instructions asked. that one could not be given without the other."

The proposition here asserted by the defendant cannot be maintained upon authority

A voluntary or fraudulent conveyance is perfectly good between the parties and their representatives, and against all persons except creditors. Am. L. Cases, 59, citing 5 Binney, 109, and numerous authorities.

The estate becomes at once subject to the debts of the grantee, (2 Halst. R., 173,) and a voluntary conveyance by the fraudulent grantee to the original grantor will be fraudulent against the creditor of the former, (10 Conn., 39.) Again, the creditor of the fraudulent grantor has no title to the property conveyed to the grantee;—he has a right only to have his debt paid out of the property by a sale under judgment or decree. If he seeks to set aside a conveyance upon the ground of its being fraudulent as to creditors, he must prove himself to be a judgment creditor. In Angel vs. Draper, 1 Vernon, 399, and Shirly vs. Watts, (3 Atk., 254,) cited by Chief Justice Kent in the case of Wiggins vs. Armstrong, 2 John C. R., 144, it was held that the creditor must have completed his title at law by judgment and execution before he can question the disposition of the debtor's property. The same doctrine is declared in Balch vs. Westall, 1 P. Williams, 445.

In the case in 2 J. the Chancellor says: 'The reason of the rule seems to be that until the creditor has established his title he has no right to interfere, and it would lead to an unnecessary and perhaps a fruitless and oppressive interruption of the exercise of the debtor's rights. Unless he has a certain claim upon the property of the debtor, he has no concern with his frauds." 345

Was Carter, then, a judgment creditor of Jordan, and as such entitled to interfere with the disposal of his property? This depends upon the validity of the proceedings in the suit for foreclosure. The record shows that Carter obtained a judgment at the Fall term against Jordan, but the validity of that judgment it was competent for Bennett to contest. Chief Justice Ruffin, in the case of Hafner vs. Irwin (4 Iredell, 529,) sustaining the view of Chancellor Kent, already quoted, as to the necessity of a judgment, yet adds a qualification in very significant language: "A creditor must establish his debt by judgment before he can raise the question of the validity of a conveyance made by his debtor. As a general creditor by contract, he has no right to the property nor lien for the immediate satisfaction of his debt. He must therefore proceed to judgment. The judgment is not conclusive against the party claiming under the deed, for judgments may be fraudulent as well as deeds. It is, therefore, open to the grantee in the deed to show that the recovery was by covin or collusion."

Bennett having the right to impeach this judgment, the inquiring into its validity was a question of fact for the jury. It was only in the event of the judgment being valid that the facts admitted by Bennett in the affidavit were material or conclusive against him, and therefore the judge might well say, "that the law was so mixed with the fact in the instruction asked, that one could not be given without the other." To us who have the record before us, the propriety of the refusal of the instruction is manifest, from a consideration of the facts into which his Honor below declined to look. The judgment of foreclosure was clearly erroneous. There was no notice to Jordan, personally or by publication of the amended petition of Carter, upon which judgment was rendered. 346

There was no proof of the execution of the mortgage, and none of the debt, except by the admission of Thornton as agent, by a power of attorney clearly insufficient to give him such authority.

Again, in the foreclosure suit, according to a former decision of this court in Wilson vs. Hayward, 2 Fla. R., 27, Jordan was not the proper party defendant, for he had parted with his equity of redemption, and for that reason in the words of the court in the case referred to, "the "proper course was to go against the purchaser, as the "proper party to the petition, according to the terms of the "statute itself. The prayer is that the mortgagor and all "persons claiming or to claim by, through or under him, "be foreclosed, and by the 4th section personal service of "notice, &c., shall be served upon the mortgagor, or other "person having the equity of redemption."

It is thus apparent that the validity of the judgment being impeachable by Bennett, and depending upon many facts, and yet so necessary to Carter to place him in the relation of a judgment creditor to Jordan in order to authorize him in interfering with Bennett's title, though fraudulently acquired, it is apparent, we think, from these considerations, that the judge was right in refusing the instruction.

But it may be said that Carter was a mortgage creditor, at least, even if the judgment was void, and that under the authority of Phillips vs. Hawkins, 1 Fla. R., 262, he became absolute owner of the mortgaged property upon the condition of the mortgage being forfeited.

Although the mere statement of the objection shows that the matter was strictly within the province of the jury, and that the judge was right in his ruling, yet a brief consideration of the facts proven demonstrates that Carter was not a mortgage creditor in that sense which would have authorized him to call in question the title of Bennett, even though derived in the manner stated in the affidavit. 347

He had given in evidence on the trial an indenture of a mortgage executed by Jordan to the Georgia Bank, which was regularly assigned by the bank to Carter. It is clear, upon authority, that this alone did not constitute him a creditor by mortgage. In 4 Com., 194, Chancellor Kent says: "The assignment of the interest of the mortgage in the land without an assignment of the debts is considered to be without meaning or use. This is the general language of courts of law as well as equity."

"The mortgage interest, as distinct from the debt, is not a fit subject for assignment. It has no determinate value. If it should be assigned, the control over the mortgage premises must essentially reside in him who holds the debt." 4 J. R., 43.

"A mortgage is a mere incident of the debt, and assignment of the interest in the land without the debt is a nullity." 2 Cowen, 195.

So in 2 Cowen, 231, it is said, referring to 19 J. R., 325, that the mortgage is a mere incident to the bond, as personal security for the debt, and that an assignment of the interest of the mortgage without an assignment of the debt is considered in law as a nullity.

See upon this point 7 Penn. R., 280, 17 Serg. & Rawles, 400, 5 Cowen, 202, 6 N. Hamp., 205, 11 N. Hamp., 274.

In the 2d Vol. of Leading Cases in Equity, 445, it is said: "It is a further consequence of the general subordination of the estate in the land to the purposes of the debt, that an assignment of the latter will draw the former with it, (citing the first three cases above referred to,) but that the estate in the land cannot be assigned apart from the debt," citing the other authorities above. 348

The proofs upon the record show that Carter was the holder and assignee of the mortgage by regular assignment, but this alone, according to some authorities, was a transfer of a naked trust, and according to others, a mere nullity. There is no evidence that he had an interest in the debt. It is true that at one stage of the trial, he offered certain notes which were ruled out, because they did not appear to be the debt secured by the mortgage. This ruling, for the reasons already adduced in our consideration of the third error, we deem to have been correct, and Carter stood before the court and jury as the assignee of the mortgage, without an interest in the debt. This was not sufficient to make him a mortgage creditor, or a creditor in any sense of Jordan, and therefore he had no right to complain of the facts set out in the affidavit, nor to defend himself even against the bare possession of Bennett. But the affidavit of Bennett states that the negroes were brought into the State of Florida in violation of the statute prohibiting the importation of slaves, under certain circumstances.

And this is relied on as a ground on which Carter justifies the taking and seizing the negroes out of Bennett's possession, without authority of law, and claiming them as his own.

The authorities cited by Carter's counsel go to prove what may be readily conceded, namely, that a contract made in violation of a statute imposing a penalty, but without declaring the contract void, is nevertheless void.

It is not easy to perceive how this principle of law can be invoked by Carter in this case. Bennett had possession of the negroes, and insisted that such possession gave him good title against all except the rightful owner. Carter could not by proving his (Bennett's) admissions, or by any other evidence, that the negroes had been imported contrary to the statute, justify the taking them from Bennett's possession, without authority of law. Bennett's violation of law did not confer any title upon Carter. Carter having failed to prove himself the rightful owner, Bennett's title, founded upon possession, must prevail.

The instruction, therefore, was properly refused, both because the naked legal proposition asserted is wrong, and also according to the ruling of the Judge certain facts would have to be proved before Carter could be placed in such relation to Jordan as to have any concern with his frauds.

XIII. It is assigned in the thirteenth place for error that the third instruction asked was qualified by the Judge below. The third instruction asked was in these words: "That no man can claim title to property sworn by himself "to have been acquired by a direct violation of the statute "of frauds, as against the parties intended to be defrauded;" which the court altered by adding thereto the words, "unless he shows that he made such oath under a "misapprehension as to the law, or the facts, or the evil;" which instruction, so altered, he gave

For reasons already given, and supported by ample authority, it is evident that the instruction asked could not have been properly given. A creditor must establish his debt by judgment before he can raise the question of the validity of a conveyance made by his debtor. This is the concurrent import of numerous authorities we have heretofore cited, and is too well settled to admit of question

Even if the instruction asked was not obnoxious to this objection, the qualification of the Judge was altogether 350 proper, for the reasons we have adduced under the tenth and eleventh branches of the assignment.

XIV. It is alleged in the fourteenth place that the court erred in adding the qualification ("or other consideration") to defendant's fifth instruction, there being no evidence to authorize it, and the bills of sale purporting to be for money. The instruction asked was as follows: "That a voluntary bill of sale in which no money is paid, carries no "title against prior creditors, especially mortgage creditors, and even if another person should buy for money, with "notice of the person holding under such bill of sale, such "new party can claim no title against such prior creditors "or mortgagees." This instruction was given after inserting the words, "or other valuable consideration given," after the words "no money is paid."

This qualification seems to us to be very harmless. We have shown that prior creditors simply, not being judgment creditors, cannot impeach a voluntary conveyance, and as to mortgage creditors, we cannot perceive how the qualification impairs the force of the instruction as asked for. And besides, we may remark here, what applies to many of these numerous exceptions, that the frequent allusions to Carter as a mortgage creditor are not warranted by the law of the facts proved. The ruling of the court on the twelfth error assigned, with the reasons and authority there presented, establish that the assignee of a mortgage is simply no mortgage creditor.

There was an entire absence of testimony before the jury to prove that Carter was the assignee of the mortgage debt, and not being such, he was in no sense a creditor of Jordan. The matter of this instruction, therefore, had no reference to him, and it might have been properly refused altogether.

XV. It is alleged in the fifteenth place for error that the court refused the defendant's ninth instruction, which is 351 in these words: "That the title to the sixteen negroes "mentioned in the action of trover in Georgia was de-"cided in that case to be in Farish Carter, and the jury "cannot reverse or review that decision, and must throw "that number of negroes from their consideration." The court refused this, "because involving facts upon which "the court is prohibited from instructing the jury."

The exemplification of a record of another State is evidence of a very high order, but still it is evidence for the jury, involving facts, and in the case before us the identity of the negroes mentioned in this record with the negroes sued for by Bennett, was a very material fact, and necessary to be proved in order to give any value to the record as testimony for the defendant. Well, therefore, might the Judge hesitate to tell the jury that they must throw sixteen negroes from their consideration. He left that properly and appropriately for them to decide upon the facts before them. But however erroneous this refusal might have been, why should the defendant complain, since, at an antecedent stage of the trial, and before the case was argued to the jury, the plaintiff's counsel, as it is stated in the record, "abandoned his suit to the negroes in the declara-"tion mentioned, proved to have been re-captured by "Bennett from Long's plantation—same being included in "the Columbus judgment, Carter vs. Bennett."

It seems to be at least a waste of the time both of the court below and of this court, to have asked for the instruction there, and to have assigned the refusal for error here, under the circumstances we have just mentioned.

XVI. It is said in the sixteenth place that the court erred in refusing the thirteenth instruction asked by defendant. The instruction asked for was as follows. "That "the record in the case of Peninah W. Thomas vs. Farish "Carter, being in evidence before the jury, and comment- 352
"ed on by plaintiff, is conclusive as to any subject matter "decreed upon in said record, and if the record shows that "a foreclosure has been had in Georgia on the personal "property by said mortgage conveyed, on the fifth of Ju-"ly, 1842, the title to the personal property became abso-"lute in the mortgagee—an action of trover for said per-"sonal property subsequently commenced by the mortga-"gor, or any person claiming by, through, or under him, "cannot be maintained." It was refused by the court because it was not conclusive against any but those who were parties or privies to the record.

This exception seems to have been abandoned by defendant's counsel. It is certainly untenable. Mr. Greenleaf tells us, "it is a most obvious principle of justice that no "man ought to be bound by proceedings to which he was "a stranger." Greenleaf on Ev., 522.

And persons who have no right to make defence, or to control the proceedings, and to appeal from the judgment —to adduce testimony and to cross-examine the witnesses adduced on the other side, are regarded as strangers to the cause. Ibid, 523.

XVII. It is assigned as the 17th error that the court refused the 14th instruction asked for without qualification. The instruction asked was that "a party whose title is "tainted with fraud, cannot rely upon such title to object "to the regularity of a decree rendered in favor of the "creditor against the debtor, who did so fraudulently part "with his title, and this will apply in the case of a fore-"closure of mortagage by mortgagee against mortgagor, "where the decree is attacked by any one claiming title "under a mortgagor who has fraudulently conveyed his "equity of redemption to hinder and delay the mortga-"gee;" which the court refused, but gave with this qualification: "Such person being cognizant of the fraud at the time of his purchase." 353

We have already said, upon the authority of Chief Justice Ruffin, that judgments may be fraudulent as well as deeds, and that they are open to the grantee in a fraudulent deed to show fraud or irregularity if he can. And "it is a general rule that a decree in Equity shall not, any "more than a verdict or judgment at law, either conclude "or in any way prejudice the rights of those who are not "parties to the suit." 20 Wendall, 262.

The judge, by his qualification, confines this privilege to persons not cognizant of the fraud at the time of their purchase, and if the positions cited from the North Carolina and New York Courts be true, the charge of his Honor was more favorable to the defendant than he was entitled to.

The cases referred to by defendant's counsel in the Florida Reports, do not contradict these conclusions. In 2 Florida Rep., 518, it is said: "Fraud will vitiate any, even the "most solemn transactions, and an asserted title to prop-"erty founded upon it is utterly null," and reference is made to 15 Peters and 2 Howard, and the Court adds: "No doubt a record may be affected and even vitiated by "fraud."

All this is in perfect harmony with the conclusions which we have elaborated elsewhere. Counsel do not seem to distinguish between fraud and fraudulent conveyances.

The first vitiates all transactions, and the latter are fraudulent and void only as against certain specified parties.

Carter has never brought himself (as we have clearly shown,) among those specified parties, and therefore Bennett's title, however fraudulent it may be to others, is not so as to him.

XVIII. The eighteenth error assigned is that the Court refused the sixteenth instruction as written, but gave it 354 with the additional words in brackets below, viz:

"In cases of foreclosure at common law, under our stat-"ute, any person claiming by, through or under a mortgagor, "can come in and state his objections, under oath, show-"ing cause against foreclosure of the mortgage proper;" to which the court added, [provided, he is served with legal notice, either personally or by advertisement.]

His Honor clearly meant, we suppose, by this ruling, that no party can be affected by a foreclosure under the statute, unless he is served with legal notice, which is too obviously true to require comment. But if we mistake the intention of the court, and his proposition is meant to be understood literally, still it was but a qualification, either with or without which the instruction asked was a mere abstract proposition, having no reference to the facts of the case. The most that is asserted is that Bennett might have come in without notice—it is not alleged that he was under obligation to do so.

The fact is that he had no notice, and was not therefore concluded by the judgment, however true or false the proposition may be as laid down by the defendant in his instruction.

We think, therefore, the error is not well assigned.

XIX. The nineteenth point assigned for error is that the court erred in refusing to give the third clause of defendant's eighteenth instruction.

This clause of the instruction asked is in these words: "That no such property or possession can be maintained "against a prior creditor of the vendor, Thornton or Jor-"dan, unless such property or possession was obtained "bona fide;" which was refused by the court because it was "mixed with fact."

His Honor might have refused the instruction for a still better reason. The principles we have established, show- 355 ing the necessity of a cerditor obtaining a judgment before he has a right to impeach a conveyance, apply with all their force in resistance to the position here assumed by defendant. Nay, more, a judgment creditor, as such simply, has no title to the debtor's property till it is consummated by the execution of the judgment. It is surely not necessary to quote authority to prove that "in trover posses-"sion, whether rightfully or wrongfully obtained, is a suf-"ficient title in the plaintiff as against a mere stranger." 10 Vt., 208, 11 Vt., 351.

We have, in the progress of this opinion, exhausted argument to show that Carter, so far as the record informs us, was a stranger, and that it was perfectly immaterial to him what was the nature of Bennett's title or possession, if any title or possession at all was proved.

XX. The twentieth error assigned is that the court erred in refusing defendant's motion for a new trial.

The motion in this case is based upon the allegation that there was error both in the ruling of the court upon the law and in the finding of the jury upon the facts of the case. So far as the questions of law are concerned, they have been presented to the consideration of this court in every variety of aspect. The skill and ingenuity of the eminent counsel having charge of the case, seem to have been tasked to the uttermost in exhibiting every possible question in every possible phase, and the court must take some credit to itself for the patience with which it has pursued the multiform enquiry which has been asked at its hands.

Has the appellant a right to demand of us to pass upon the facts? Have we a right to control the discretion of the court below in relation to its granting or refusing a new trial?

The question is not a new one before the appellate tribu- 356
nals in Florida; for it was presented to the late Court of Appeals, in the case of the United States vs. Jerrison & Foster, (not reported,) and decided adversely to the application. We see no reason to justify us in departing from that decision.

Although we have given to the subject as much thought and research as its importance seems to merit, we feel constrained, by the unusual length to which this opinion has been unavoidably protracted, to allude very briefly to the considerations which have influenced our judgments. The whole frame work of our judicial structure is derived from our English forefathers, and the practice of reviewing the decisions of a court, upon motions for a new trial, is wholly unknown to the judicial system of that country. Such also is the case with the Courts of the United States, while the courts of the several States seem to be about equally divided upon the question. The weight of authority, therefore, is clearly against the exercise of the right of controlling the discretion of the inferior courts on the subject of new trials.

When we consider the expediency of asserting such a right, we are at once met by the enquiry whether we are as competent to judge of the weight of evidence as the court and jury before whom it is given? One of the courts which accord the right to an Appellate Court of reviewing the decisions of inferior courts on this point, says: "Great deference is due to the judgment of the legitimate "triers of matters of fact." "That court has opportuni-"ties greatly superior to those enjoyed by this court, of "determining whether the verdict is against the weight of "testimony." (7 Missouri, 221.)

In this admission, we conceive, rests the whole argument against the expediency of the exercise of this power. Every one at all familiar with the incidents of a jury trial, 357 must admit the impossibility of conveying to an appellate tribunal a perfect transcript of the evidence given to a jury. The tongue of the witness is not the only organ for conveying testimony to the jury; but yet it is only the words of a witness that can be transmitted to the reviewing court, while the story that is told by the manner, by the tone, and by the eye of the witness, must be lost to all but those to whom it is told. The testimony of one witness, given with calm self-possession, an erect front, and an unhesitating accent, imports verity as strongly as a record, while the confusion, the hesitation, and trembling of another, will contradict to the eye what his faltering tongue has uttered to the ear. Yet the testimony of each will stand alike before the court of review.

For this reason mainly, and for others which we need not adduce, we deem it our duty to adhere to the practice, sanctioned by the most venerable authorities, of leaving the question of granting or refusing motions for new trials to the Judge who has had the privilege of hearing the evidence.

The points assigned for error, subsequent to the twentieth, were not noticed in the argument, and are understood to have been abandoned by the defendant. But as they are upon the record, it is our duty to pass upon them, which we shall do in the briefest possible terms.

XXI. The twenty-first point denies he jurisdiction of the court, which question we have disposed of in our consideration of the first and second points.

XXII, XXIII. The twenty-second and twenty-third points deny the right of Judge Douglas, who was the Judge of the Eastern Circuit, to sit in the case, which was tried in the Western Circuit.

The State Constitution provides, in the 7th sec. of the 358 5th article, "That the Judge of the several Circuit Courts "may hold courts for each other."

XXIV. The twenty-fourth point seems to have reference to the same point, and the assignment is, therefore, not sustained.

XXV. The twenty-fifth point presents an objection to the verdict, upon the ground of excessive damages. This was a matter proper to be brought to the attention of the court below on a motion for a new trial. We have nothing to do with it.

XXVI. The twenty-sixth point is obnoxious to the same objection.

XXVII, XXVIII. The twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth points are mere recapitulations of others already decided upon.

The true elements of this controversy, when divested of the multitudinous wrappings in which it has been presented to our notice, (the printed record making a well sized octavo volume,) are very few and very simple. Bennett was in possesion of the slaves when they were taken from him by Carter, and converted by Carter to his own use. Whether Bennett's possession was rightful or not, Carter had no right to divest him of it munu forti, without showing that he was a judgment creditor or a mortgage creditor of Jordan's. He failed to do both, and stands before the court simply as a stranger, intermeddling without authority with the possession of another.

Having reviewed in detail the many complicated questions presented upon the record of this case, we conclude by saying, we find no such error in the proceedings in the court below as to require us to set aside the judgment, and we shall accordingly direct the judgment to be affirmed, with costs.

Let the judgment be affirmed, with costs, and the case 359 remanded to the court below.

NOTE BY THE REPORTER.—In the 8th line of the Head Notes, on page 283, instead of "former," read latter.

THE SOUTHERN LIFE INSURANCE AND TRUST COMPANY, AND THE STATE OF FLORIDA, PLAINTIFFS AND APPELLANTS, AND CHARLES COLE, RESPONDENT.

An Appeal in Equity is substantially a re-hearing of the cause, and the appeal opens the whole case to the Respondent;—and although the Appellant may show that the view taken by the Court below is erroneous, yet the Respondent is at liberty to show, if he can, that upon the whole case, no other decision can be rightfully made of the case in the Appellate Court.

The act of February 10th, 1832, gives authority to the Appellate Court to pronounce "such judgment, sentence or decree, as the Court below ought to have given." This power could never be exercised, if the Court had not the right to look into the whole case as it is presented in the Record.

But though this Court will re-examine questions decided against the Respondent as well as such as passed sub silentio, or consider points made here for the first time, if raised by the pleadings and proofs, yet care must be taken that neither party be permitted to surprise or mislead his adversary, or to make objections which, if made in the Court below, might have been obviated.

It is well settled that the members or shareholders of corporations created for private emolument,are not admissible as witnesses for such corporations on account of their direct and certain interest. The liability of the company for costs,is a sufficient interest to render a shareholder incompetent as a witness.

Time in a Court of Equity is rarely considered as material where the value of the property contracted for and the circumstances of the parties remain unchanged, but performance will not be decreed where time has elapsed and an important change in respect to value or circumstances has taken place. In sales of stock in the public funds, time is of the essence of the contract; and, in all cases where time is material, or of the essence of the contract,the rule in equity is the same as at law—that is, if the contract is not carried into effect within a reasonable time, by the vendor or the purchaser, it is 360 deemed to be dissolved or abandoned by mutual consent.

Where several acts are to be done, and a contract is entered into for their performance, the execution and performance of one act depending upon, and constituting the consideration for the execution and performance of another—or where there is a variety of instruments forming one transaction,the law will not give effect to any one act, or any one instrument, unless the whole transaction is completed.

Delivery of a deed is a matter in pais, and though the possession of a deed by the grantee is prima facie evidence of delivery, yet the circumstances under which the grantee became so possessed, may be shown even in a Court of law so as to avoid the effect of delivery. The delivery of a deed to an officer or servant of a corporation, is delivery to the corporation itself, provided it is for the use and benefit of the corporation, and with intent to pass an absolute property or interest. But there is no such personal identity between a corporation and its officers as to prevent or preclude a delivery to the latter as an Escrow, to take effect upon the performance of some condition. Nor is it necessary or material that there should be any formal notification of its delivery as an escrow. Under the 24th section of the act of November 23, 1828, in an action at law a plea of want of consideration in under oath, throws the burden of proof of consideration on the plaintiff;—and such by analogy is the rule in equity.

The Statute of Frauds of this State is more comprehensive than the British Statute; for though shares of stock have been held not to be "goods, wares and merchandise," within the meaning of the act of 29th, Charles 2d, ch. 8, the statute of this State uses the words "personal property" as well as the words "goods, wares and merchandise," and there can be no doubt that shares of stock in an incorporated company are included within the very comprehensive terms, "personal property."

Where there is no consideration of benefit or advantage to the grantor in a deed or of detriment to the grantee, it is nudum pactum, and must be so declared by a Court when such want of consideration is made manifest.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Leon, made the 5th day of August, 1850.

A bill was filed by appellants in February, 1849, to foreclose a mortgage made by defendant to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, dated the 20th December, 1841, to secure the payment of $6500, which mortgage was acknowledged by Cole, the respondent, to be his act 361 and deed, for the purposes therein mentioned, and was duly recorded 24th December, 1841.

After the filing of the bill and while the suit was pending, the bond and mortgage so executed by the respondent were assigned to Thomas R. McClintock, a judgment creditor of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company.

The defence set up in the case made by complainants' bill, was—

1st. That the bond and mortgage were delivered as an escrow.

2nd. That there was no consideration upon which a court of Equity could make a decree in favor of complainants.

3d. That there was a total failure of consideration—and that the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company never performed what it had stipulated to do until long after the execution of said bond and mortgage, and when the stock which was the consideration of their execution was greatly depreciated, if not entirely valueless to respondent—that when an attempt was made, after such lapse of time and under such circumstances, to transfer to Cole $6,500 in shares of stock, he refused to accept, and rescinded the contract, as he had a right to do. These grounds of defence were ably and elaborately argued by the counsel for respondent, and were fully sustained by the court.

The decree of the Circuit Court from which this appeal was taken, was the following, viz :

"This cause having been submitted to the court upon the bill, answer, exhibits and proofs, and full argument having been had thereon, and the court having maturely considered the same, and being of opinion that there is no equity in the said bill for which the same should be sustained; that said bond and mortgage are not valid and binding as between these parties, having been executed for a purpose not consummated nor carried into 362 effect, and that the same was without any consideration : It is, therefore, decreed and ordered, that the said bill be and the same is hereby dismissed, and that complainants pay to defendant his costs in this behalf expended."

The opinion of the court is full and clear as to all the points and facts in the case.

The case was argued by Archer and Davis for Appellants, and by Long and Branch for Respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

In the decision of this case, it becomes important in limine, to dispose of the question made as to the effect of the appeal—how far it opens the cause to the consideration and judgment of this court. It is contended on behalf of Appellant, that all questions made by the pleadings and proofs, or which arose in the court below and which were either decided against the respondent, or passed over sub silentio, cannot be urged upon the consideration of this court by the respondent, unless a cross appeal had been entered by him, founded on the decision adverse to him, or the omission to decide the question raised.

It is laid down by Mr. Daniel, in his Chancery Practice, that on a re-hearing or appeal, the whole case is open to the respondent; thus, if the appeal is against the whole decree, it is competent to the court to modify the decree, by making it more favorable to the respondent. (Vol. 3, 126, 127—Harrisburg Ed.) In Sullivan vs. Jacob, (1 Moll. R. 472,) where a defendant appealed from a decree, on the re-hearing the court decreed the plaintiff more extensive relief; and in Oldham vs. Stonehouse, (3 Myl. & C. R. 317,) where a plaintiff appealed from a decree which had been pronounced in his favor, with costs, upon the re-hearing, the respondent satisfied the court that the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree, and the decree was re- 363 versed and the bill dismissed. See also Rawlins vs. Powel, (1 P. Wms., 300,) and Consequa vs. Fanning, (3 Johns. Ch. R. 594-'5) to the same point. In Beekman vs. Frost, (18 Johns. R., 558,) which was an appeal from the Court of Chancery to the Court of Errors, Spencer Ch. J. reviews a number of cases on this point, and deduces from them the following principle: That in the appellate Court, no party shall be allowed to surprise or mislead his adversary; that if a party in the court below shall purposely suffer a decree or judgment to pass against him, by default, without contesting it there, he shall not be heard in the appellate court, or if counsel shall for the first time raise a point here, which might have been obviated had it been made in the court below, he ought not to be permitted to do so. So in Watts vs. Waddle, (6 Peters' R. 389,) the Supreme Court of the United States allowed a plaintiff, who appealed from a decree dismissing his bill, to assume in the appellate court a new ground of relief, not specifically prayed for in the bill, and not asked for in the court below, saying: "There is no rule of "court or principle of law which prevents the complain- "ants from assuming a ground in this court which was "not suggested in the court below." And, although the Supreme Court affirmed the decree appealed from, yet they opened it so far as to let in the new relief, and remitted the case that the relief might be given. See also the cases of Kerr vs. Watts, 5 Peters' Cond. R., 179, and Kerr vs. Moon, 5 Peters' Cond. R., 686. There seems to be no distinction taken in the Chancery practice of the English Courts, or in that of New York, between re-hearings and appeals, but both are treated as the same proceeding.

From a careful review of the authorities, we are satisfied that an appeal in equity is substantially a re-hearing of the cause, and that the appeal opens the whole case to 364 the respondent in the appellate court; and although the appellant may show that the view taken by the court below was erroneous, yet on the other hand, the respondent may argue and show, if he can, that upon the whole case, the same result must be attained here. The authority of this court, by Sec. 5th of the Act of Feb. 10th, 1832, (Thomp. Dig. 449,) is, "to reverse or affirm the "judgment, sentence or decree of the court below, to "award a new trial in the court below, or to give such "judgment, sentence or decree as the court below ought "to have given." It is very clear that the power to give the decree which the court below ought to have pronounced, could never be exercised if this court did not possess the right to look into the whole case as it is presented in the record, and to consider it as the court below should have considered it. We are, therefore, satisfied that we have a right to look into the whole cause, as it is presented in the record, to re-examine questions decided against the respondent, and also such as passed sub silentio in the court below, or to consider points made here for the first time, provided, they are raised by the pleadings and proofs, but adopting, however, for the protection of the parties, the guards laid down by Ch. J. Spencer, in the case before cited, that neither party will be permitted to surprise or mislead his adversary, or to make objections which might have been obviated had they been presented for the consideration of the court below.

We now proceed to the consideration of the question of the competency of Mr. Robert Lyon as a witness on behalf of the appellants. The respondent in the court below, moved that the deposition be suppressed, upon the allegation that he was incompetent, by reason of his inter-

365 est; which motion was overruled, and the deposition was read at the hearing. The objection is now renewed in this court, and the counsel for respondent contend that Mr. Lyon, being, according to the proof, at the time of his examination, a share-holder in the corporation, he was so interested as to be incompetent to testify on its behalf; that the assignment to Thomas R. McClintock, previous to his examination, did not make him competent, because such assignment was made pending this suit, which leaves the corporation liable for costs as a party to the record. It is also urged that, notwithstanding the assignment, there is still an interest in the company, in the event of this suit, beyond the question of costs, which incapacitates the witness. It is argued that the Company, by the assignment to McClintock, impliedly warrant their title to and the validity of the bond and mortgage, which is the subject matter of the suit and the assignment; that the company also warrants that it has no knowledge of any facts, which, if the instruments were originally valid, would prove them worthless, and therefore the company, and Mr. Lyon, as one of its members, have an interest in the recovery here, to prevent a recovery over against the company on the failure of the present suit. That the members or share-holders of corporations created for private emolument, are considered as having a direct, certain and vested interest, and therefore not admissible as witness for such corporation, is well settled, upon authority, 1 Greenlf, Ev. 333, and authorities cited in the margin. The company being a party to this suit upon the record, is undoubtedly liable for costs, and liability for costs, it is also well settled, is a sufficient interest to render a witness incompetent. The court below should have granted the respondent's motion, and suppressed the deposition of Mr. Lyon, and in the examination of the case here, 366 it will be excluded from our consideration. As the incompetency of the witness is clear, upon the point considered, we do not express any opinion on the other.

The bill is filed for the foreclosure of a mortgage, which it is alleged, was executed to the company to secure the payment of a bond for the penal sum of thirteen thousand dollars, conditioned to pay the sum of six thousand, five hundred dollars on or before the expiration of the term of eight years from its date, with legal interest from the 1st day of January, 1841, preceding the date of the bond. The allegation is, that the respondent, on the 20th December, 1841, being indebted to the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company, did sign, seal and deliver the bond and mortgage described. The answer denies positively any indebtedness on the part of respondent to the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company, and admitting the signing and sealing of the bond and mortgage exhibited, denies positively that the said instruments were ever delivered to the Company by the said respondent, or by his authority or direction, and proceeds to give the history of the creation of these instruments, and the purposes for which they were executed. It is in substance this: That being desirous to raise a sum of money to meet some urgent necessity, he concluded to become a property stockholder in the said company, in order to avail himself of the privilege granted to shareholders therein of borrowing two-thirds or three-fifths of the amount of stock; and accordingly commissioned one N. M. Martin to engage for him as many shares of stock as his property, on appraisement, would cover; that he was informed by Martin of the engagement to purchase shares of one Thomas J. Linton or one William L. Tooke, he does not recollect which; that he caused an appraisement of his property to be made, executed the bond and mortgage in question by signing and sealing the same, and deposited them with the cashier or officers of 367

the company, to be delivered to and to become the property of the company upon the transfer of the shares of stock to him which his agent, Martin, had contracted for. It is further alleged that no shares of stock where transferred to him by Tooke or Linton, until December, 1842, when, after the company had become embarrassed, &c., and its stock had become worthless and its notes greatly depreciated in value, and after he had expressly declined to receive any transfer for the reasons before stated, the cashier, Mr. Lyon, procured an assignment to be made on the books of the company, by William L. Tooke, to the respondent, of sixty-five shares of stock, without the knowledge or assent of the respondent, and which assignment and transfer he never accepted.

The defence set up has been considered in argument as resolved into two points: First, that the bond and mortgages are invalid for want of delivery; and secondly, that they are invalid for want of consideration.

It is not pretended that there was, at any time, any loan of money by the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company to the respondent, nor indeed any transaction whatever, except that which related to the effort of respondent to acquire stock in the company. It appears that the appraisement of the property, which he proposed to mortgage as security for the stock amounted to thirteen thousand dollars, and which, according to the rules which the company had established, would secure sixty-five shares of the nominal value of one hundred dollars per share, and making an aggregate of six thousand, five hundred dollars. The fact from whom the stock was to be procured is involved in some obscurity. The respondent, in his answer, says that he employed Martin to purchase the shares for him, and that Martin informed him he had done so from Tooke or from Linton, he cannot distinctly recollect from 368 which of them. Martin, being examined, says, in his deposition, that he contracted with Linton, and not with Tooke, for the stock, and was to allow a premium of ten dollars per share, that it was to be delivered immediately, and that no memorandum in writing was made of the contract. Mr. Tooke, who was also examined on this point, says he never saw the respondent; that, being the holder of one hundred and fifty shares, he had authorized Martin to sell them for him, and that Martin informed him he had contracted to sell sixty-five of the shares to the respondent. A book is also introduced, called "Bond and Mortgage Ledger," which, if it could be considered as evidence, would not serve to dispel the doubt, for, as the book has been explained to the court by the counsel for appellant, the respondent, Cole, is charged to Linton for the value of sixty-five shares, and Tooke, not Linton, is credited by the same amount under the same date. The book of minutes of the proceedings of the directors of the company, is also introduced in which the following entry appears under date of Monday, December 20, 1841: "Voted to ap-"prove the appraisement of Charles Cole's property to the "amount of thirteen thousand dollars, and upon the com-"pletion of the papers necessary, to authorize the transfer "of sixty-five shares stock from William L. Tooke to "Charles Cole, provided the interest of sixty-five hundred "dollars of Wm. L. Tooke's bond be paid to January 1st, "1841." Upon whose application this order was passed, and from whom the statement was derived, that it was Tooke's stock which was purchased, does not distinctly appear. This fact might be one of importance, for if the respondent had bought, the shares of Linton, it would not authorize the company to cover the bond and mortgage by procuring an assignment to the respondent from any other 369 person, without his assent. Martin is the only witness who speaks of his own knowledge, and his testimony is direct, positive, and affirmative. Tooke derives his information from Martin, and it is but hearsay; so also the statement in the vote of the directors may have been derived from Tooke or from Martin. The direct and positive testimony of Martin, under oath, may be considered as weakened by the declarations made by him out of doors; yet if the case turned on this fact, we should feel bound to take the statement of Martin as conclusive upon the point, he being the person best calculated to know the facts; or, if such a course would be admissable, to remit the case to the court below to take further evidence thereof.

We do not, however, think it necessary to decide the question; for whether the purchase of the shares was from Linton or from Tooke, they were to be delivered, that is transferred immediately, and according to the proof, they were not transferred until nearly twelve months after the execution of the bond and mortgage, and not until after the stock had greatly depreciated in value, arising from the pecuniary embarrassment of the company.

Time, in a Court of Equity, is rarely considered as material, for the value of the property contracted for and the circumstances of the parties remain unchanged; yet where the value of the property is greatly diminished, performance will not be compelled. In cases of sales or contracts relating to stock in the public funds, time is considered as of the essence of the contract, Forrest vs. Elwes, 4 Vesey R., 492. There is no proof of the acceptance of the transfer of stock by the respondent, at or after the time of transfer, and we are clearly of the opinion that, upon the contract to transfer and deliver the shares presently, the respondent would not, in a Court of Equity, have been compelled to accept a transfer and delivery 370 nearly twelve months thereafter, when the stock had greatly depreciated in value, and, as he would not be compelled to complete the contract, he was not bound to accept the transfer when made, but might consider the contract as abandoned. At law, where time is considered material, if the contract is not carried into effect within a reasonable period, either on the part of the vendor or the purchaser, it is deemed to be dissolved and abandoned by mutual consent, and such must be considered the rule in equity, where, from the express terms of the agreement, or from the nature or character of the subject matter of sale, time would be considered as of the essence of the contract.

It is, however, argued on the part of appellants, that the liability of the respondent to the company upon the bond and mortgage, does not depend on the fact whether Linton, or Tooke, or any body else transferred any stock to him.

Either the court or the counsel greatly misapprehended the terms, nature and force of the contract proved. It seems to us not to be one of much complexity, when rightly understood. Assuming as a fact what we have heretofore held was not sufficiently proved, that it was Tooke's stock which the respondent was to buy, the transaction is simply this: Tooke held one hundred and fifty shares of the stock of the company, which had not been paid for with money, but which he had been permitted to subscribe for on credit, securing the payment by his bond for the nominal value, say fifteen thousand dollars, with interest from the date of his subscription, and a mortgage upon property. It was proposed that Tooke should transfer to the respondent sixty-five of those shares, and that the respondent should execute his bond for the nominal value thereof and interest, secured by a mortgage upon his property, and when the transfer was made, and the bond and mortgage of respondent accepted by the company, Tooke would be 371 entitled to a release from the company of so much of his bond and mortgage as that of the respondent would cover. These were all concurrent and dependent acts—integral parts of one contract, which must all be executed, in order to give validity to any one of them. They must be performed, too, in conformity with the agreement and with good faith. In this agreement, the company was not only one of the parties to the compact, but it had an important interest—it was to release to one of the parties a sum of money due it on his bond and mortgage, and to accept in lieu of it the security of the personal responsibility and property of another. It was not only bound to know and did know all the acts to be performed by each of the contracting parties, but also that the several acts to be performed were dependent upon each other, and were to be executed concurrently.

The evidence of the connection of the company with, and its participation in the arrangement between Tooke and the respondent, so as to make itself a party to the contract, is found in the order or vote of the board of directors, considered in reference thereto.

It is said by one of the counsel for appellants that this order or vote was misconstrued by the judge below, and which misconstruction led to the erroneous decree complained of. We have examined this entry with great care, and if we would give effect to each and every part of it, we would find it susceptible of but one interpretation. To make ourselves perfectly intelligible, we will eliminate the several parts, and put them as distinct sentences, viz:

"Voted to approve the appraisement of Charles Cole's "property, to the amount of thirteen thousand dollars;" and also,

"Voted, upon the completion of the papers necessary to "authorize the transfer of sixty-five shares of stock from 372
"Wm. L. Tooke to Charles Cole, provided, the interest of "sixty-five hundred dollars of Wm. L. Tooke's bond be "paid to January 1st, 1841."

To give the construction contended for by counsel for appellants, is to render insensible and wholly useless the words, "and upon the completion of the papers necessary," while our construction not only gives effect to every word, but is consistent with the intentions of the parties, as they are gathered from their acts, conduct and declarations, considered with reference to the parol proofs of the agreement.

For the purpose of the performance of the agreement, the abstract of respondent's titles was laid before counsel in whose opinion the company had confidence, and the report thereon was accepted, and the respondent had executed his bond and mortgage. Yet there was wanting to the complete consummation of the contract and agreement of the parties, the transfer on the books of the company, by Tooke, to the respondent, the sixty-five shares of the stock, according to the terms of the said agreement, and the release by the company to Tooke of the sum of sixty-five hundred dollars, upon his bond and mortgage.

The several acts were to be executed concurrently, and each part would have effect and vitality only from the performance of the others, and the execution or performance of one formed the consideration of the others. The respondent was not bound to deliver his bond and mortgage until Tooke should make the transfer of the shares. Tooke was not bound to execute the transfer until the respondent was in condition to assume Tooke's responsibility to the company for the nominal value of the shares, and had paid or was ready to pay the premium agreed on.

372 And the company was not bound to release Tooke until the respondent was in condition to assume Tooke's liability.

It would ordinarily happen in the execution of such triplicate contracts, that one or the other parts might be executed before the others. Yet the parts so executed cannot on any just principle be regarded as distinct and substantive contracts, against the consent of the parties so performing; but they would be considered as steps taken towards the consummation, the whole being in fieri until each and every part was accomplished, for all the parts formed but one whole. In Dutton vs. Morrison, (17 Vesey R., 200,) Lord Eldon says: "In many cases the law "considers a variety of instruments as forming one trans-"action, and would not give effect to any instrument un-"less the whole transaction is completed;" and this is precisely the case here.

The appellants, however, plant themselves upon an alged delivery of the deeds to the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company, its acceptance of them as valid instruments, and an alleged credit to Tooke as conclusive of their right to the decree of foreclosure prayed for. And first, as to the delivery of the deeds: Delivery of a deed is a matter of pais, and there is no doubt that the possession of a deed by the grantee, acknowledged by the grantor for record, is evidence of delivery, but the authorities cited do not make it more than prima facie evidence of the fact. It is, even in a court of law, susceptible of explanation, or rebuttal. The grantor may show that such possession is the result of fraud, mistake or accident, (2 Greenlf. Ev., § 297, and authorities cited in the margin.) But what is the evidence of delivery in the case before us? On the part of the appellants, there is nothing more than the prima facie case made by the possession of the deeds;—on the part of the respondent, there is the express denial of 374 the answer, which is responsive, not only to the allegations of the bill, but the special interrogatory addressed to him. The explanation which he gives as to the manner in which the company became possessed of the deeds, is perfectly consistent with the contract proved, of which the execution of the deeds was an integral part. The respondent executed the instruments and deposited them with the casher, or other officer of the company, at its office, the place where the execution of the contract was to be finally consummated, so far as the respondent was interested, to wit: the transfer of the shares, which, to be full and perfect, must be made on the books of the corporation, there to be ready for the final completion.

It is said that delivery to an officer or servant of a corporation, is delivery to the corporation. To this we assent, with the addition that such delivery is for the use and benefit of the corporation, and with intent to pass an absolute property or interest in the deed delivered; and the rule would be the same if the delivery should be made to a mere stranger. We do not think there is such a personal identity between the corporation and its officers, that a deed may not be placed in the hands of the latter, as an escrow until the performance of some condition, &c.

Whether there was any formal notification by words or not, at the time of the deposit or delivery to the officers of the company, that it was to operate as an escrow, is not it seems, material. In Bowker vs. Burdekin, (11 Mess. & Wels. R., 145,) Parke, B., says: "I take it now to be "settled, though the law was otherwise in ancient times, "as appears by Sheppard's Touchstone, that in order to "constitute the delivery of a writing as an escrow, it is "not necessary, that it should be done by express words, "but you are to look at all the facts attending the execu-"tion—to all that took place at the time, and to the result

So. Life In. & Tr. Co. et al. vs. Cole.—Opinion of Court.

"of the transaction; and therefore, though it is to form an 375
"absolute delivery, if it can be reasonably inferred that it
"was delivered not to take effect as a deed till a certain "condition was performed, it will nevertheless operate as "an escrow."

We find no sufficient proof of the delivery of the deeds in question. The presumption of a delivery, as an independent and substantive contract, is repelled, not only by the answer, but by the proofs, of the contract which was in fact made, and of which the deeds were but an integral part; a contract of which the company had full notice, for it was not an unimportant party thereto.

It must be borne in mind that this court is now sitting as a Court of Equity, which regards not the circumstances or outward ceremonial, but the substance of the act, and therefore we think that if the respondent had entered the parlor of the company, the president and directors being there in session, and by the most formal act had delivered the deeds in question to the head of the corporation, stating the circumstances under which and to accomplish which they were executed, we should be compelled to regard it as a delivery, to take effect only on the final consummation of the contract.

In Flagg vs. Mann, (2 Sumner R., 510,) that learned jurist, Justice Story, says, though there is a technical difficulty in the suggestion of the delivery of the deed to the grantee as an escrow, yet a Court of Equity will not govern itself exclusively by technical principles of law, where the intentions of the parties will be thereby defeated. It requires, however, he says, clear evidence of what that intention is, and whether it will be so defeated, otherwise the rule of law must prevail. In this case we are perfectly satisfied of the intention of the parties, and that if the possession of the deeds by the company be regarded as an absolute technical delivery, the intention of the party will 376 be frustrated and defeated.

Was the difficulty subsequently obviated by the transfer on the books of the company, in December, 1842, of sixty-five shares of stock by William L. Tooke to the respondent, and were the officials authorized, on this transfer, to consider the condition as complied with, and the bond and mortgage the property of the company? We are well satisfied of the negative of both branches of the inquiry.

Assuming again that it was Tooke's stock, and not Linton's, which the respondent had agreed to purchase, and that he got by that transfer the stock which he had actually contracted for, yet, as we have before said, in this contract, from the very nature of the transaction and the subject matter thereof, time was of the very essence of the agreement. After the lapse of nearly twelve months, and after the value of the shares had greatly depreciated, owing to the embarrassments and the threatened insolvency of the company, which finally ensued, it was too late to require the acceptance of the transfer by the respondent, and there is not a title of proof that he did accept it.

The circumstances under which the assignment was made are not wholly free from suspicion. No one was present but Tooke, who made the transfer, and the officers of the company. The respondent was not notified and required to attend, accept the act of transfer, and consummate the contract.

Martin, who was respondent's agent for the purchase, had a store and was in business at Tallahassee, where the transfer was made, was not notified to attend and represent his principal. Martin says, too, he agreed that the respondent should pay a premium of ten per centum, or ten dollars per share, for the stock, yet we find no demand made for this premium, but the claim for it is quietly abandoned 377 Under this state of facts, it is asking too much of a court of conscience to consider this act of transfer as rightly done, and obligatory on the respondent. If the appellants would avoid the effect of the lapse of time, they were bound to show that no injury resulted to the respondent from the delay, and that the value of the shares of stock remained unchanged. The proof, however, is full the other way.

We come now to the question of consideration. The respondent, in his answer, alleges that the bond and mortgage is also invalid for want of consideration. At law, under the 24th section of the act of November 23, 1828, regulating judicial proceedings, (Thompson's Digest, 331, chapter 2, section 1, article 4,) a plea of want of consideration, put in under oath, throws the burden of proof on the plaintiff of showing a consideration; and such by analogy we consider the rule here, the existence of a consideration being denied in the answer, which is under oath. It is contended, on behalf of the appellants, that the consideration is not to proceed from the company, that it did not contract to sell any stock or shares to the respondent, neither did it guarantee that Linton or Tooke, or any body else, would do so. This is true, and yet the deeds must be founded on a sufficient consideration, or else they are nuda pacta, and nullities.

The officers of the company must be presumed to know that, to make the deeds valid securities in the possession of the company, they must be founded on such consideration, and it was therefore their duty to see that the consideration passed from and to the proper parties, and this upon the tri-partite contract before mentioned.

It is urged upon us here that, by the agreement and by the execution of the bond and mortgage in question, the respondent obtained a right to demand the transfer of the 378 shares from Tooke, and that this right of action is a sufficient consideration to support the deeds in the possession of the company; and, on the other hand, it is argued that no such right of action existed, because the contract or agreement is within the 11th section of the act of November 15th, 1828, regulating the conveyance of real and personal property, &c., (Duval's Compilation, 206. Thompson's Digest, 218, § 2.) It is true that the English Courts, in the construction of the 17th section of the act of the 29th Chas. 2, Ch. 3, have held that shares of stock in an incorporated company, are not goods, wares, or merchandise within the meaning of the act, yet we consider that our statute is more comprehensive than the British statute of Frauds.

Our statute provides, "that no contract for the sale of "any personal property, goods, wares, or merchandise, "shall be good, unless the buyer shall accept the goods or "part of them so sold, and actually receive the same, or "give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part "payment, or some note or memorandum in writing, of the "said bargain or contract be made and signed by the par-"ties to be charged, or their agents thereunto lawfully au-"thorized."

It will be observed that our statute uses the words personal property, as well as goods, wares and merchandise, and therefore, though shares of stock in an incorporated company may not properly be considered as goods, wares or merchandise, yet there can be no question but that they are included within the very comprehensive terms, "personal property." Was anything done to take the agreement without the statute? There was no acceptance and actual receipt of the thing sold, or any part thereof by the buyer; nothing given in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment, and no written memorandum of the bargain or contract signed by the parties to be

and mortgage by the respondent, could not have the effect of a part payment, to take the case without the statute, if at all, until delivery and acceptance by the Company with the express assent of Tooke. Payment or part payment, pre-supposes the act of two persons, the bargainee to give and the bargainor to accept, and until it is both given and accepted, the contract is not complete. We think that the respondent had no right of action against Tooke upon the parol contract for the stock, but if he had acquired such right of action, it did not amount to a sufficient consideration to support the deeds, for the respondent did not propose to buy a law suit, but to buy shares of stock.

Again it is argued, that equitably, the shares of stock belonged to the respondent, as soon as the Company approved of the bond and mortgage, which the respondent had executed; and this upon authority of the maxim, that equity regards that as done, which ought to be done. If to the maxim as stated be added this qualification, "where "nothing has intervened which ought to prevent a perform-"ance," we are prepared to yield our assent to the existence of such a rule of equity law, but we deny its applicability to the present case. It has never been so applied as to make a party who has contracted for legal title to property, on payment of the purchase money, liable at all events to pay the price, as upon a contract executed, before conveyance is made, merely because the vendor ought to have conveyed: Nor has any case occurred where it has been held that an executory contract invalid as being within the positive prohibition of a statute, ought, in a court of equity, to be considered as executed.

We are well satisfied that there was no benefit or advantage resulting to the respondent, as a sufficient consideration to support the deeds in question. Let us now examine and see if any detriment or injury resulted to the Com- 380 pany, which will support the deeds as a consideration.

It is alleged that the Company released to Tooke the sum of six thousand five hundred dollars, with interest from the 1st of January, 1841, at eight per centum, in consideration of the bond and mortgage executed by the respondent. The only evidence produced, and which is now before us, to sustain this allegation, is that said to be afforded by a book, styled "Bond and Mortgage Ledger," which we have before adverted to, and which we will now consider more fully. This book, it is admitted, is not a part of the regular sett of account books of the Company, but it is a memorandum book, kept by the cashier for the purpose of readily ascertaining the amount of principal and interest due the Company upon its bonds and mortgages. It is not shown to have been opened and kept by any order of the Board of Directors, nor is the period when the book was first opened ascertained with any degree of certainty. It is also admitted that as the entries therein consist simply of names, dates and figures, without any descriptive explanations, it is not intelligible, save by the personal explanations of the cashier of the Company. The book therefore, cannot be considered as an account book, the entries in which would be evidence against the Company as admissions, but must be considered simply as memoranda of the cashier, and of no higher authority than statements made by him not under oath. In a suit between the Company and Tooke, this book could scarcely be held, under the circumstances, evidence against the Company of the release of six thousand five hundred dollars on his bond of the date of July 1st, 1841. The entry in this book, however, of the debit of the respondent, and the credit of Tooke, bears date January 1, 1842, when the stock was not actually transferred until the month of December of that year. If the

Company considered that Tooke was entitled to the credit 381 of the amount of respondent's bonds and mortgage on the 1st of January, 1842, why was not the amount endorsed upon Tooke's bond, which was then in the possession of the Company? Was it just to Tooke or Lahens & Co., subsequently to transfer it to the latter parties, without an endorsement of the credit? If the respondent became liable to the Bank for the sixty-five shares of stock on that day, surely Tooke became entitled to be discharged to the amount of the nominal value of shares, and if so, to a release or acquittance therefor; to some evidence which he might keep in his own possession. No credit was endorsed upon the bond and mortgage of Tooke when it went in the possession of Lahens, and none was entered while it remained in his possession and that of his attorneys, which continued up to final settlement by compromise in 1847, and when that compromise is adjusted, a release is executed for the whole sum secured by the said instrument, and no mention is made of the credits by Cole. Did the omission to endorse the credit upon the bond of Tooke, at the time of its transfer, result from the fact that it would be premature, the shares not having been transferred to respondent? If so, then the entry in the book is clearly not an evidence of release, if there was no other objection. If this supposition is correct, why did not the Company in December, 1842, upon the transfer of the shares by Tooke, notify Lahens & Co., and ask them to accept the respondent's bond and mortgage, and credit Tooke's which was in their possession? Tooke's action is equally as inexplicable as that of the Company. In December, 1842, he transfers sixty-five shares of his stock to the respondent, from which he expects a credit to the amount of their nominal value, and yet receives no acquittance therefor—it does not appear that he demanded any. So, although, according 382 to the testimony of Martin, the respondent was to pay a premium of ten per centum or ten dollars per share for the stock to the vendor, we do not find Mr. Tooke, on the occasion of the transfer or at any time since, making any claim therefor. Conduct and action so much out of the usual course of business, require explanation, and yet none is offered. It is very clear that the Company was not bound to release Tooke until the respondent had irrevokably assumed the payment of the sum stipulated, to their satisfaction, and as we find no evidence of release to Tooke, founded on the consideration of respondent's bond and mortgage, we are bound to conclude it did not release him. We find no consideration of benefit or advantage to the grantor, or of detriment to the grantee, to support these deeds, and must declare them nuda pacta. We have examined carefully every position assumed by the appellant's counsel in the argument here, and whether we consider the deeds upon the question of their delivery, or that of a want of consideration, they are equally invalid in the possession of the Company or of its assignee.

Our judgment is that the decree of the court below be affirmed, with costs.

SEMMES, Justice, dissenting.

JOHN F. HIGGS, SURVIVING PARTNER, &c., PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, vs. MARY SHEHEE, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

A book account, in this State, is not admitted as evidence of the sale and delivery of the goods, even though it may be proved that the account sued on is an exact transcript from plaintiff's books, and that they were fairly and honestly kept.

So, also, the testimony of a witness that he knew of the delivery of a part of the article charged to defendant, and another part to defendant's overseer, without any evidence as to the particular articles, or their value, is not 383 sufficient to justify a judgment for plaintiff for any amount.

A party demurring to evidence admits the truth of that to which he demurs, and those conclusions of fact which the jury may fairly, that is, legally, draw from it.

When the evidence is so loose, uncertain and indeterminate, that no verdict could be rendered upon it by a jury, the court, upon a demurrer to such evidence, should not give judgment, but set aside the demurrer and award a venire facias de novo.

The opinion of the court, as delivered by the Chief Justice, contains a statement of the case.

Maxwell for plaintiff in error.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice—

This was an action of assumpsit, brought in the Circuit Court for Madison county, by the present appellant, against Mary Shehee, on a merchant's account. The declaration is in the usual form, and the bill of particulars filed with it is an account against the defendant for sundry articles of merchandise, amounting to $107 48.

The defendant filed the general issue, and with it a notice that at the trial she would prove payment and set off. The evidence does not tend to establish this allegation of payment and set off, so that there was no other real issue than that presented by the plea of non assumpsit.

Thomas J. Chace was the only witness examined, and his testimony was substantially as follows:

He was in the employment of Rowles & Higgs during the year 1843, as clerk and book-keeper—knows of the existence of an account against the defendant for that year; its amount was $107 48, "as by examination of the books "now before the witness"—the account constituting the bill of particulars, was made out by witness from the books of Rowles & Higgs, and is a correct transcript from them.

Witness believes that the books of Rowles & Higgs were 384 fairly and honestly kept—witness knows that a part of the articles enumerated in the account were purchased by the defendant, and delivered, and others were got by the overseer of defendant, and delivered to him, as witness presumes, by her order or direction, which were at times written by her.

Witness believes, from an examination of the books, that the account, "as above stated, and now in controver- "sy, is correct, unpaid, and justly due to the firm of said "Rowles & Higgs, according to the best of his knowledge "and belief."

Defendant offered no evidence, but demurred to the plaintiff's evidence, and the plaintiff joined in the demurrer.

Upon this issue, the court gave judgment for the defendant, with costs, to which judgment the plaintiff excepted, and his bill of exceptions being signed and sealed by the Judge, is a part of the record which has been brought before us.

The effect of a demurrer to the evidence is, "that the "party demurring admits the truth of the testimony to "which he demurs, and also those conclusions of fact "which the jury may fairly draw from that testimony. "Forced and violent inferences he does not admit, but "the testimony is to be taken most strongly against him, "and such conclusions as a jury might justifiably draw, the "court ought to draw." Pawling et al. vs. United States, 2 Cond. R., 93. In the case of Young et al. vs. Black, in the same volume of Reports, 609 p., Mr. Justice Story says: "The party demurring is bound to admit as true, "not only all the facts proved by the evidence introduced "by the other party, but also all facts which that evi- "dence may legally conduce to prove."

In applying the rule thus laid down by the Supreme 385 Court to the evidence in the case before us, we find, in the first place, that the facts stated by the witness, though taken to be true, do not directly establish the plaintiff's case. Those facts are of two distinct kinds; first the testimony of the witness as to the books; and, secondly, as to the delivery. The facts, though admitted by the demurrer to be true, that the witness was clerk and book-keeper for the plaintiff, and knew of the existence of the account, and of its amount, from an examination of the books; that the account filed was a correct transcript from the books, and that he believed the books to be fairly and honestly kept, are not direct proof of the assumpsit of the defendant as charged in the declaration. A book account is not admitted in this State to be evidence of the sale and delivery of goods. Such is the general rule of the English law, even in the case of a regular tradesman's books, 1 Buller's N. P., 282, and in those countries and States where tradesmen's books are admitted as evidence, it is always in connection either with the suppletory oath of the party, or from the supposed necessity of the case, where the party does not keep a clerk. See Pothier on Obligations, quoted in 12 J. R. 464, and cases referred to in the same book from several of the New England States. In this State, we have not relaxed the English rule, which is in perfect consistency with the general law of evidence, (unless the allowing a party to swear to an account under fifty dollars in a Magistrate's Court may be so considered,) and we hope that it will never be relaxed.

In this case, however, the book account is not even sustained by the oath of the party, nor is there any supposed necessity, as in the New York cases, from there being no clerk, of admitting it: so that there is really no direct proof in this branch of the testimony to sustain the case. So also it is very clear that the testimony of the witness, 386 that he knew of the delivery of a part of the articles to defendant and another part to her overseer, without saying how much and what was their value, however true, is not sufficient of itself to justify a judgment for the plaintiff for any amount.

The facts proved being thus insufficient of themselves and directly to establish the plaintiff's case, let us see, in the second place, if the conclusions of fact which the jury might fairly draw from the testimony without forced and violent inferences, (to use the language of Judge Marshall,) will answer.

The word "fairly," which here qualifies the right of a jury to draw their conclusions, must be understood to import "legally," for nothing is fair in a Court of Justice but what is sanctioned by the rules of law, and in the citation made from Judge Story, it is said the demurrent admits "all the facts which the testimony legally may conduce to "prove." Could, then, a jury have legally concluded, from the facts proven, that the goods were bought by defendant? Could they have legally come to this conclusion, because the account was a correct transcript from books which were admitted to be fairly and honestly kept?

If the jury had any doubt on this point, it would be their duty to ask counsel of the court, and they would then learn that they could not arrive at such conclusion, without doing violence to plain and well established rules of law.

There are two distinct characteristics of evidence which are to be regarded in this connection: I mean its relevancy and its weight. The first it is the province of the court to determine; the second belongs to the jury. The demurrer to the evidence, while it substitutes the court for the jury in its peculiar duty of weighing the evidence, does not relieve the court of its own appropriate duty of part of its duty by the court that the rule of finding all that a jury might fairly find, has any application. The rules of law are uniform and inflexible.

The relevancy of evidence is the same, with or without a demurrer to the evidence, and in both cases must be decided by the Judge. The weight of evidence, when determined to be relevant, is variable, and it is only in this regard that the Judge, when put in the place of the jury, must lean as much as he fairly can against the demurring party. In this case the Judge knows, in his character as Judge, that account books of themselves are no sufficient evidence of an account, and however much weight is given to the evidence with that qualification, it will avail nothing to the plaintiff, for it is not proper evidence, and must be discarded by the Judge from his consideration, as he would instruct a jury to discard it from their's.

These considerations have satisfied me that the court below committed no error in not giving judgment for the plaintiff on this demurrer.

It is not so clear to me that his Honor was right in giving judgment for the defendant. To ascertain this, will lead us into a more extended inquiry into the future of a demurrer to evidence, and the law regulating it.

The older books made a distinction between written and parol evidence, "but it is now well settled that evidence "of any kind, written or parol, direct or circumstantial, "is a subject of demurrer." (Gould's Pl. 433.) But it is not in every case that the opposing party is compelled to join in demurrer. Where the evidence is direct and certain, he will be compelled; but it is otherwise when the evidence is "loose and indeterminate," or when it is "cir-"cumstantial." In cases of this latter sort, he cannot be compelled to join in demurrer, unless the demurring party admit expressly on the record every fact that the "loose and 388
"indeterminate" and "circumstantial" evidence conduces to prove—thereby relieving the court from the task of weighing doubtful and uncertain evidence. Without an express admission of this nature, the other party is not bound to join, and if he does, the court can pronounce no judgment on the demurrer.

These general rules are found in Mr. Gould's Treatise on Pleading in his chapter on demurrers, and he illustrates them by a reference to the leading case of Gibson & Johnson vs. Hunter, in 2 H. Black, 205. "That was an action "by the holder against the acceptors of a bill of exchange, "payable to a fictitious payee, or order, and which, after "the acceptance had been endorsed by the drawers in the "name of the fictitious payee, for valuable consideration "to the plaintiff. The latter exhibited evidence of a long "course of dealing in similar bills between the drawers "and acceptors—for the purpose of raising a presumption, "from these circumstantial facts, that the defendant, at "the time of accepting the bill, knew the payee to be fic-"titious; and of then urging, as matter of law, that if this "presumption was established, the defendants were bound "by their acceptance. To this evidence, the defendants "demurred, without admitting, upon the record, their "knowledge, at the time of accepting the bill, that the "payee was fictitious, and the plaintiff joined in demur-"rer. But it was resolved in the House of Lords, by the "unanimous opinion of the Judges, that, because the de-"fendants' knowledge of the payee being a fictitious per-"son, (which was the great point of fact in issue,) was not "expressly admitted on the record, the point of law inten-"ded to be raised by the demurrer could not arise upon the "record, and consequently that no judgment could be "given upon the demurrer."

389 The Lord Chief Justice, (Eyre,) in giving to the House of Lords this opinion, concludes as follows: "We conceive "no judgment can be given on this record. The examin- "ation of the witnesses in the case has been conducted so "loosely, or this demurrer has been so negligently framed, "that there is no manner of certainty in the state of facts, "upon which any judgment can be founded. There "ought to be an award of a venire facias de novo. The "issue joined between the parties, in effect has not been "tried, and the case of Wright vs. Pindar is expressly in "point, that another venire facias should issue."

The only portion of the evidence, in the case before us, which legally conduces to the proof of the issue, is the testimony of the witness in relation to the delivery of some of the articles enumerated in the bill, to the defendant and her accredited agent, but it is so "uncertain and indeter- "minate" as to render it impossible for any reasonable verdict to be founded on it. The amount of goods thus delivered, and their value, are alike left uncertain.

A judgment for one cent, as suggested by the counsel for the plaintiff, would be doing injustice to the plaintiff, if his demand has any merit in it, while at the same time the evidence is not determinate enough to justify even that judgment against the defendant, for no attempt is made to prove any value in the articles delivered, and this should not be left to mere conjecture. On the other hand, the evidence is sufficient to prove that there were some indebtedness on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff, however impossible it was to fix its amount from the testimony on the record. The fact that the evidence in the case of Gibson vs. Hunter was uncertain and indeterminate, insufficient to warrant a judgment for the plaintiff, was not thought to be a competent reason for rendering judgment for the defendant; but the Lords were advised by the 390 judges that it was a reason for ordering a new venire, and such was their judgment.

So, in the case before us, while the evidence is manifestly insufficient to justify a judgment for the plaintiff, we think there were sufficient grounds for his Honor below to refrain from pronouncing any judgment on the demurrer, which he had a right to do. Gould's Pl., 437, 2 H. Bl., 209.

It is accordingly the opinion of the court that a venire facias de novo be awarded.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the following opinion:

A demurrer to evidence is a proceeding by which the Judge before whom a cause is tried, is called upon to declare what the law is upon the facts shown in evidence, and is analogous to the demurrer upon facts alleged in pleading. The effect of it is to take from the jury, and refer to the court, the application of the law to the facts.—Regularly before the party demurring can call upon his adversary to join in demurrer, he should admit, upon the record, every fact which the evidence conduces to prove, or if this is not done, the court is to draw the same inferences and conclusions which a jury might fairly do, for the demurrer admits the truth of all facts which, upon the evidence stated, might be found by the jury in favor of the party offering the evidence. (Gibson vs. Hunter, 2 H. Blk. R. 187. Cocksedge vs. Fanshaw, Dougl. R., 131.) The demurrer acts upon facts, not the evidence of facts, and the evidence is to be taken most strongly against the party demurring; the court is not to investigate the facts in dispute, or to weigh the force of testimony, but to assume as fact what the evidence reasonably conduces to prove.

These rules are well established upon authority, and I propose to take them as my guide, in arriving at a con- 391
clusion upon this demurrer. This action is for goods, &c., sold and delivered, and the pleas, the general issue and payment. Under the issue on the first named plea, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the sale and delivery of the goods, and the price agreed upon to be paid for them, or the value thereof. The only evidence offered by the plaintiff was the deposition of Thomas J. Chace, who was examined under a dedimus. This witness deposed that he was in the employment of plaintiff and his late partner during the whole time mentioned in the account, in the capacity of clerk and book-keeper; that the account annexed to the deposition, amounting to $107 48, was correctly transcribed from the books by himself; that they were fairly and honestly kept, and that he knows a part of the articles enumerated in said annexed account were purchased by and delivered to defendant herself, and others were gotten by defendant's overseer, and were delivered to him by defendant's order and direction, which were sometimes in writing. The account, or bill of parcels, to which the witness refers as annexed, exhibits the price or value of each item charged therein.

Taking this testimony most strongly against the party demurring, and in favor of the party offering, it seems to me that if a jury had passed upon it, and found a verdict for plaintiff, the court would not have been authorized to disturb it as a verdict against evidence. The witness was clerk and book-keeper; it may therefore fairly be presumed that he either sold and delivered the goods, or was cognizant of the sale, and made the entries in the books by which they were charged. There was therefore no one more competent to prove the plaintiff's demand, or the character of the books for fairness and honesty. Again, he speaks of his personal knowledge of the delivery of a part of the articles to the defendant in person, and others 392 to her overseer upon her orders and directions. The value or prices of the articles being fixed to each item respectively in the bill of parcels, to which the witness refers, is certainly some evidence of the value thereof. But it is supposed that there may have been other clerks and book-keepers, and that some of the sales and entries may have been made by such others, and that there may have been some articles charged, the sale and delivery whereof, he may not have known anything about, save by the entry on the books; and the testimony is not sufficiently precise to exclude such a presumption. The answer is, that it is not the province of the court to scan with such nicety the evidence of the facts: it is the province of the jury to weigh testimony and decide: under the demurrer the court is to assume as facts what the evidence conduces to prove, not what it conclusively proves. So again it may be answered, "idem est non esse, et non apparere," as the witness does not speak of any other clerks or book-keepers than himself, or any other goods sold than those which he knew were delivered to the defendant, or her overseer, it must be presumed there were no others.

Upon every point of view, I am satisfied that the court below erred, for if, in his opinion, the evidence was loose and indeterminate, he should have refused to give any judgment, but should have set aside the demurrer and awarded a ve nire de novo. Gibson vs. Hunter, 2 H. Blk. R. 187. Fowle vs. Common Council of Alexandria, 6 Peters' Cond. R. 328. Believing as I do that this demurrer has been inconsiderately entered and joined, that the force and effect of the pleading was not fully appreciated; and as there was an issue on the plea of payment by the defendant, on which of course she has had no opportunity of offering proof, and that the entry of a judgment in this 393 court for the plaintiff on the demurrer would operate as a surprise upon the defendant, and possibly cut off a defence on the merits, I find but little difficulty in concurring with the Chief Justice in his conclusion, to reverse the judgment and remit the case to the court below with an award of a venire facias de novo.

SEMMES, Justice, dissented, and delivered the following opinion:

I cannot assent to the judgment of the court in awarding a venire facias de novo.

I give my unqualified concurrence to that portion of the opinion delivered by the Chief Justice which maintains that the evidence in the court below was insufficient to warrant a judgment for the plaintiff; and I frankly confess I know of no principle of law which would authorize a court or jury to refer to the bill of particulars in a plaintiff's declaration to supply any defect or omission in the evidence.

If it can be referred to as proof, or to aid the proof, for one purpose, it can be for all purposes.

If it is evidence to establish any one item, it is evidence to establish the whole cause of action; and as a consequence, the extent of a plaintiff's recovery, instead of depending upon the well defined rules of evidence, would be determined by every plaintiff in framing his bill of particulars. The sole object of a bill of particulars is to apprise the opposite party of the cause of action, its character and extent; not that it contains intrinsic evidence of its correctness, or raises the slightest presumption of indebtedness.

But I am compelled to dissent from the opinion so far as it determines that the court below committed error in sustaining the demurrer. If, as is conceded, the court be-394 low could not, under the evidence, overrule the demurrer and give judgment for the plaintiff, it was bound to sustain the demurrer and give judgment for the defendant. I do not say that this would follow in every case, but under the facts in this, it does result as a necessary consequence. The opinion of the court, as I understand it, is based on the hypothesis that the evidence in this case was of such character that no judgment could be given for either party upon demurrer.

If this be true, the judgment pronounced by this court is sustained by authority, and cannot be questioned.

There can be but little diversity of opinion as to the effect of a demurrer to evidence. It is well settled that a party who demurs, withdrawing thereby the consideration of the facts from the jury, is bound to admit not only the truth of the evidence, but every fact which that evidence legally conduces to prove in favor of the other party; and if, upon the facts, a jury, by a fair construction of the evidence, would have been authorized to have given a verdict against the party demurring, the court would also be at liberty to give judgment against him. 3 Peter's Rep., 36, 96, 2 Blackstone Rep., 209. In other words, the Judge being substituted in the place of the jury, in the consideration of the facts, is bound to give the same weight and construction to the evidence which the jury could do, under his construction of the law, arising from the facts. The whole proceeding upon a demurrer to evidence being under the control of the Court, it will not, I admit, rule a party to join in a demurrer, where the evidence is purely circumstantial, or of such a loose and undefined character that a doubt is entertained as to its effect, unless the party demurring admit, if need be on the record, every fact which could be reasonably inferred from it or which, in the words of the authorities, it conduces to establish.

Higgs vs. Shehee.—Opinion of Court.

The application of these well settled principles to the 395 evidence in this case, will determine the question before us. The facts proven are substantially these: That the account sued on is a correct transcript from the books of Rowles & Higgs, and that witness knows that a part of the articles enumerated were purchased by the defendant, and delivered. Is this evidence so uncertain and undefined that there is a doubt as to its meaning? And was not the court below as fully competent to determine its import and effect as a jury? If the evidence was circumstantial, operating beyond proof of the fact of sale and delivery, or if it was susceptible of more than one construction, and a reasonable doubt existed as to which construction should prevail, then I concede it was the province of a jury to draw the inference and determine the question. But what does this evidence legally conduce to prove? Certainly not the value of any one of the items charged, or any other fact available to the plaintiff.

Instead of demurring to the evidence, had the issue been submitted to a jury, what would have been the result? The court would have been bound to have instructed the jury to have found for the defendant, and for the reason that there was no evidence to sustain the issue; for, so far from the transcript of the books, though attested by the clerk or book-keeper, being in evidence, the books themselves would have been no evidence; and that in the utter absence of all proof of the value of any article, it was not the province of the jury, from the isolated fact of the delivery of some of the items, to infer a delivery of all, and arbitrarily affix any value, or assess any damages; for, unlike a judgment by default, the plea in this case denying all cause of action, the plaintiff was not entitled to even nominal damages.

It cannot be said that the evidence in this case was cir- 396 cumstantial, from which the jury could have inferred any fact sufficient to sustain the cause of action, or any part of it. The evidence did not warrant any inference or deduction beyond the fact proved.

The case of Gibson vs. Hunter, 2 Blackstone Rep., 187, is relied on by the court as authority in this case. But, with due deference, I do not think the authority applicable. It is unnecessary to refer particularly to the facts in that case, as reported; it is sufficient to say that the evidence was purely circumstantial. And in answer to the question propounded by the House of Lords, whether upon that evidence any judgment could be rendered by the court upon demurrer, Chief Justice Eyre said, "That "the examination of the witnesses in the case had been con- "ducted so loosely, or the demurrer had been framed so "negligently, that there was no manner of certainty in "the state of facts, upon which any judgment could be "founded," and a venire de novo was awarded upon the ground that, by reason of the party demurring, not admitting upon the record the facts which this circumstantial evidence conduced to prove, the issue between the parties had not in fact been tried. But it is further said in this authority, that the same rule of law requiring a party to join in demurrer, where the evidence offered is written, applies to parol evidence, when it is certain, and admits of no variance.

Wherein consists the analogy between the authority and the case before us? Is the evidence here "loose, inde- "terminate and circumstantial?" Or is it not well defined, admitting of no variation or inference? In one sense the evidence in this case is uncertain, and so may be said of all evidence, however definite, which fails in establishing the point in issue. And so all relevant evidence offered by a plaintiff conduces to prove the issue.

397 But this is not the sense in which the term is used in the authorities; otherwise, no one could demur to evidence unless he admitted the facts put in issue, which admission would be a sufficient answer to and overrule the demurrer.

If, as contended, the plaintiff in the court below was not compelled to join in demurrer, under the proofs, I ask what fact was the defendant bound to admit under his demurrer beyond the sale and delivery of the articles? If their value as charged, it would in effect have been a confession of judgment for the entire demand; and the effect of a demurrer to evidence would, therefore, be to defeat its very object and purpose.

One of two propositions we are bound to admit;—either that the evidence in this case conduces to prove no fact beyond a sale and delivery of the goods, in which event the judgment of the court below was correct, or that the evidence conduces to prove the entire demand of the plaintiff, which no one, I apprehend, would be willing to concede.

Giving to this evidence the utmost latitude, I do not find that the facts as proven, unaided by other testimony, establish anything material to the issue, and that, as it admits of no inference or interpretation in favor of the plaintiff, I do not see the necessity of calling for the investigation of a jury, which must result in a verdict no wise different from the judgment of the court.

398 THE TALLAHASSEE RAILROAD COMPANY, APPELLANTS, VS. HAYWARD AND WALKER. APPELLEES.

The act of February 10th, 1832, which requires an appellant to file a true copy of the proceedings in a cause in the Circuit Court with the clerk of the Supreme Court on or before the first day of the next succeeding term thereof, is imperative in its terms, and makes it the duty of the Supreme Court to dismiss the appeal upon an application based upon the certificate of the clerk of the court below that an appeal has been obtained and a bond given.

Motion to dismiss appeal from judgment of the Circuit Court of the County of Leon, on the ground that the transcript of the record of the proceedings of the court below had not been filed with the clerk of this court as required by law.

Archer, for motion, cited Thomp. Dig. 448, and contended that the court had no discretion, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Baltzell, for appellants, resisted the motion.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

The appellees move the court to enter this cause on the docket, and dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution. Though the question presented is one purely of practice arising under our statute, yet the court deems it of sufficient importance to accede to the request made by counsel, and deliver its opinion in writing.

In aid of their motion, the appellees exhibit to the court a certificate from the clerk of the court below that an appeal had been taken, and bond given as required by law.

This application is predicated on the following statute: "It shall be the duty of the party appellant to demand "from the clerk a true copy of all the proceedings in such "cause in the circuit court, and file said copy with the "Clerk of the Supreme Court on or before the first day of 399

"the next succeeding term thereof," &c. A subsequent part of this statute also provides that "if the party ap-"pellant fail to file the proceedings as aforesaid, it shall "be the duty of the said court, unless good cause be "shown, to dismiss said appeal, on the adverse party pro-"ducing a certificate from the clerk of the court below "that an appeal has been obtained, and a bond given as "aforesaid." Thomp. Dig. 448, § 1.

By reference to this certificate, it appears that the appeal in this cause was taken on the 10th of November, 1851, during vacation, from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Leon County.

It is conceded in argument that no notice of the appeal has been given to the adverse party, and it is not pretended that a copy of the record was filed with the clerk of this court on the first day of the term, as required by the statute.

The construction which the court has given this statute is, that it is the imperative duty of the court to dismiss an appeal upon an application based on a production of the certificate, unless the party in default shows some good cause for not having complied with the provisions of the statute.

It is a penalty which an appellant subjects himself to on failing to prosecute his cause—a penalty imposed by law, and over which this court has no discretion. This construction, which the court has been constrained to give, is the only one which, in its opinion, the words of the statute are susceptible of, and it seems too manifest to admit of discussion.

No reason is assigned by counsel for appellants, why the record was not filed in this court at the commencement of the term, except the fact informally presented, that at the time, or shortly after the appeal was taken, the President 400 of the Railroad Company was temporarily absent from Leon County. This statement unsupported by affidavit, being objected to by the adverse party, cannot influence the judgment of the court. But conceding to it all the weight it could be entitled to if formally presented, it constitutes no excuse for the default in this case.

It is insisted by counsel for appellants that the court should regard this application as purely technical in its character, and calculated to defeat the ends of justice; and that the adverse party cannot be prejudiced by denying their motion, and docketing the case for trial at this term. If reference is had solely to the merits of the cause, the objection may be considered as technical, and so may be considered every condition, imposed by law, to the exercise of the right of appeal, but it is none the less our duty to enforce these terms and conditions, when our judgment is invoked by the adverse party; and, in the opinion of the court, the ends of justice can only be attained by administering the law as we find it. A departure from this principle would be to assume a discretion where none is given, and substitute our own terms to the right of appeal, for the fixed and well defined rules prescribed by the Legislature.

Some stress has been given to the fact that the motion to file the record and go into trial, is made simultaneous with the motion to dismiss. The court is at a loss to know how this cures the default, or places the appellants in any better position than if they had made no motion; for, having incurred the penalty, it is at best but an appeal to the opposite counsel, and not an argument for the consideration of the court.

If we relax the rule in this case without cause, upon what principle could we refuse the application to file the record

401 if made on the last day of the term? Surely not upon the ground that the party in default offers, as in this case, a trial to his adversary. In either event, the adverse party would be prejudiced by being forced into trial, without notice and without preparation, or by a continuance, have the execution of their judgment suspended. By denying this motion, we would compel the appellees to adopt one or the other of these alternatives. This we have no power to do.

Let the appeal be dismissed.

THOMPSON, Justice, was understood to dissent from the judgment of the court, and to place his dissent on the following grounds: That the statute did not direct the appeal should be peremptorily dismissed, but vested a discretion in the court to relieve the appellant from that penalty, upon good cause shown. The Legislature evidently intended not only to put within the power of respondent, in cases where the appeal was frivolous and entered merely for delay, a summary and speedy remedy, instead of the old common law remedy of a scire facias quare executionem non, but to make the fact of such omission by the appellant to file the transcript of the record by the first day of term, presumptive evidence of the frivolousness of the appeal. Whatever therefore will remove or repel this presumption, is good cause upon which the court can and ought to exercise the discretion vested, and relieve the party from the consequence of his laches. As in this case, where the transcript of the record is brought in by the appellant, before the appeal is actually dismissed, and he moves to docket it for trial, the presumption of frivolity, or the intent to create delay merely, is, pro hac vice, repelled, and his motion ought to prevail over the motion to dismiss.

He further observed that, if the transcript of the record
402 should be brought in by the appellant so late as to preclude a disposition of the case at the term to which the appeal is returnable, or it should otherwise be made to appear that the respondent would be prejudiced, the court, in the exercise of its sound and just discretion, could and ought to impose the penalty provided by the statute. The whole matter was lodged in the discretion of the court; and it was always competent, while the rights of the adverse party were duly respected, to relieve the appellant from a mere technical point, in which the merits of the case were not involved, and thus dispense full and equal justice.

WILLIAM D. MOSELEY, GOVERNOR, &C., FOR THE USE OF THE COUNTY OF MONROE, APPELLANTS, VS. ASA F. TIFT, APPELLEE.

A statute conferring authority to impose taxes, must be construed strictly. The 32d Section of the Act of 1845, ch. 10, authorizes the Board of County Commissioners to levy a tax upon the same persons and species of property as are subject to state tax.

The Legislature, in imposing a tax upon "sales at auction," does not seem to have had in contemplation either a tax upon the person of the auctioneer, or upon the property sold by him. The tax so imposed is in the nature of a commission upon the amount received by him for sales made, and for which he is personally liable to the State. The Legislature did not design to confer the power of imposing taxes of this sort for county purposes.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of Monroe county.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Baltzell for Appellant.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case is brought up by appeal from the Circuit Court sitting in Monroe county. It was an action of debt 403 brought by the plaintiff here in the court below, on an official bond given by the defendant as an auctioneer.

The bond is in the form required by law, and is conditioned that the defendant "shall well and truly discharge "the duties of auctioneer, and pay into the treasury of "the State of Florida two percentum of the gross amount "of sales made by him or by his order, or in any other "manner, according to the laws now in force, or which "may hereafter be passed, regulating sales at auction, and "prescribing the duties of auctioneers in relation to the "same."

The breach assigned is in substance as follows: That the defendant did not well and truly discharge the duties of auctioneer, according to the conditions of the obligation aforesaid, in this: that in the year 1847 the County Commissioners of Monroe county had assessed a tax of one per cent. on the amount of auction sales made in that county and that defendant had made auction sales during that year to the amount of $30,000, and had not paid the tax of one per cent. so assessed.

The defendant demurred to the declaration, and for cause of demurrer, said, "that the said County Commis- "sioners had not the authority by law to levy said taxes."

The condition of the pleadings presents a single question to our consideration.

The power of the County Commissioners claimed by the plaintiff, and thus denied by the defendant, depends upon the construction given to the 32d Sec., ch. 10, of the Acts of 1845. See Thompson's Digest, 99. It is there provided, "that the Board of County Commissioners shall in every "year lay a county tax upon the same perons and spe- "cies of property as are subject to State tax.„ &c.

A statute conferring authority to impose taxes, must be construed strictly, and in this rule of construction be ap- 404
plied to the case before us, there seems to be no difficulty in ascertaining the limits of the powers of the Commissioners. They extend to the right of taxing "persons and property," under certain restrictions as to the kind and amount. In imposing a tax upon "sales at auction," the Legislature does not seem to have had in contemplation either a tax upon the person of the auctioneer, or upon the property sold by him. The tax is in the nature of a commission upon the amount received for the sale of property, and is not to be satisfied out of the property itself, as other taxes. It is a personal charge upon the auctioneer, for which he alone is responsible, and yet it is not in the nature of a capitation tax. We do not think the Legislature designed to give authority to the County Commissioners to impose a tax of this sort for county purposes. We do not know of any instance in which this right has been elsewhere asserted, and the general sense of the limitation of the authority of the Commissioners, indicated by the absence of any such claim, we believe to be warranted by a true construction of the statute.

The judgment of the court on the demurrer must be affirmed.

RICHARD HAYWARD AND THOMAS H. AUSTIN, PLAINTIFFS IN ERROR, VS. CHARLES LEBARON, ADMINISTRATOR OF GEO. L. FAUNTLEROY, DECEASED, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

The law which obtains in a place at the time the contract is made, enters into and forms a part of such contract, as fully as if it was incorporated therein.

Where there is a loan of bank notes which, though depreciated at the time, yet serve and pass as money, both the borrower and the lender acting bona fide and innocently, regarding and treating the notes as money, and there 405 is no shift or device to cover a loan of money, and thus evade the statute against usury, the transaction is not usurious.

Usury cannot result from the act or intention of one of the parties to the contract;—both must concur in the same design—the lender must agree to accept and the borrower to give the usurious interest.

This case was brought up by writ of error from the Circuit Court of Leon County, under the following state of facts, viz:

1st. The note or memorandum which was filed as the cause of action, and offered and read as evidence, was given by defendants to J. H. T. Lorimer, the agent of Geo. L. Fauntleroy, upon the consideration of a loan or deposit of fifteen hundred dollars in bills of the Union Bank of Florida, which at the time were at a discount of about eight per cent. for par funds, but which were generally received and paid in Middle Florida in payment of debts. This loan of deposit, it was admitted, was not made with any corrupt intent to evade the statute of usury.

The note or memorandum referred to as the cause of action was in these words, viz:

Borrowed from J. H. T. Lorimer, Att'y for Geo. L. Fauntleroy, fifteen hundred dollars, payable on demand. $1,500. (Signed) HAYWARD & AUSTIN.

Tallahassee, May 25, 1839.

2d. The note was delivered to LeBaron, as administrator of Fauntleroy, and as part of the assets of his estate. LeBaron placed it in the hands of Austin, one of the plaintiffs in error, prior to the Spring term, 1842, of Leon Superior Court. The latter placed it, together with other notes due to LeBaron as administrator, in the hands of an attorney. Suit was not brought by the attorney upon the note in question, because, according to his recollection, it was expected to be paid out of collections by him on claims in favor of Hayward & Austin which had been put in his hands for suit.

406 3d. It appeared and was admitted that the Union Bank had, previous to the date of said note, suspended payment in specie, and has continued suspended ever since, and is now insolvent.

Upon the foregoing state of facts, the court gave judgment for the plaintiff (LeBaron) in the court below, for the amount of the note, with interest from the time of the demand proved.

To which judgment the defendants excepted.

Walker & Hayward for plaintiffs in error—

1st. The general rule is, that a loan of depreciated bank paper at its nominal value, taking or reserving the legal rate of interest upon such value, constitutes usury. 8 Smedes & M., p. 533, 2 J. J. M., p. 140, 2 Peters, 527.

2d. The absence of a corrupt intent to evade the statute of usury, does not take this case out of the statute. 9 Peters, p. 378, Marsh. vs. Martindale, 3 B. & P., 158, 5 Randolph, p. 132, 12 Smedes & M., p. 286, 4 Florida, p. 119, 4 J. J. M., p. 48-87, 1 Yerger, p. 244, 2 Harr. & Gill p. 13, 3 Iredell, p. 415, 522, 5 Iredell, 698.

3d. The fact that the money lent passed currently in the payment of debts in Middle Florida, does not take this case out of the statute. 5 Iredell, p. 698, 8 Smedes & M., p. 533-543.

Archer and Hogue for defendant in error—

Cited and relied upon the case of Bank of the U. S. vs. Waggoner. 9 Peters, 378.

Baltzell for plaintiffs in error, replied, and contended—

1st. That the judgment should have been for $1380 principal, that sum being the cash value of $1500 of nominal amount of Union Bank bills loaned.

2d. That the statute of this state prohibits the taking,

"directly or indirectly," above the rate of eight dollars for 407 the loan of one hundred dollars for one year, &c., and says nothing about corrupt intent.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question in this case is whether the contract, which is the foundation of the action, is tainted with usury or not. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Bank U. S. vs. Waggoner, (9 Peters, R. 399,) says: "To "constitute usury within the prohibitions of the law, there "must be an intention knowingly to contract for or to take "usurious interest, for if neither party intend it, but act "bona fide and innocently, the law will not infer a corrupt "agreement. Where indeed the contract on its very face "imports usury, as by an express reservation of more than "legal interest, there is no room for presumption, for the "intent is apparent—res ipsa loqutur. But where the con- "tract, on its face, is for legal interest only, then it must "be proved that there was some corrupt agreement or de- "vice, or shift, to cover usury, and that it was in the full "contemplation of the parties." These distinctions thus laid down are fully sustained by the cases cited in the decisions of the English Courts.

In the case at bar, it is not pretended there was any express agreement for any particular rate of interest, and the inquiry must be, whether upon the facts set forth in the bill of exceptions, any corrupt and unlawful bargain, loan, exchange or shift, by which usurious interest was reserved, is to be inferred. The facts of the case show that the consideration of the note sued upon was fifteen hundred dollars in the bills or notes of the Union Bank of Florida, computed at their nominal value but which were then at a discount, for specie, of about eight per centum; that said bills or notes were generally 408 received and paid in Middle Florida, where the transaction occurred, in the discharge of debts; that the Bank had suspended specie payment, had never resumed, and was then (at the time of trial,) insolvent. It was also admitted that in the transaction there was no intention to evade the statute of usury. Do these facts constitute a case of usury? A number of cases in the State Courts of the States of the Union have been cited by counsel for plaintiffs in error to maintain the affirmative of the proposition, but as this transaction took place while Florida was a Territory of the General Government, and the Supreme Court of United States had jurisdiction by appeal and writ of error, over the judiciary established in the Territory, and its judgments upon common law principles were of binding force and obligation therein, we feel bound in the decision of this case, to be governed by the decisions of that high tribunal.

The decision of the case of the Bank of the U. S. vs. Waggoner, was made in 1835, and the contract in this case was made in 1839, and the latter must be presumed to have been made with reference to the former. The law which obtains in a place at the time a contract is made, enters into and forms a part of such contract, as fully as if it was expressly incorporated therein.

In the case cited, the court puts the case distinctly upon the ground, whether there was an intended loan of money and a reservation of illegal interest, and a shift or device to cover it, and evade the law by advancing something other than money upon the loan: in other words, whether the parties intended usury, and made use of any shift or device to cover a loan of money; or whether they intended in good faith a loan of bank notes, which to the lender were of the full value of their numerical amount, and were so treated bona fide by the borrower. In that 409 case, the good faith of the parties in the transaction, and the absence of the corrupt intention to evade the statute, were gathered from the facts of the case, and when so ascertained, the conclusion of the law was applied that the statute had not been violated.

Here, in the case before us, the absence of the unlawful and corrupt intention is expressly admitted; and who is there so competent to know the true character of the contract as one of the parties thereto? For it will be recollected that usury cannot result from the act and intention of one of the parties to the contract alone, but that both must concur in the same design; the lender must agree to accept, and the borrower to give the usurious interest; and this is the rule whether the contract be upon an express reservation of more than the legal rate, or it be the result of a shift or device to evade the statute in the pretended bargain and sale or exchange of any goods, bank notes, or any other commodity whatever.

We would be fully warranted, upon the authority before cited, to rest an affirmance of the judgment upon the admission in the record of the good faith of the contract; but when this admission is coupled with the other facts of the case, the conclusion is irresistible of the perfect innocency of the transaction: indeed we cannot find "a loop to hang a doubt upon."

Fauntleroy was possessed of bank notes, depreciated it is true, eight per centum, if he desired to convert them into specie, because of the suspension of the bank, yet generally current in the payment of debts, and of course available to him to this extent; he lends them to the plaintiffs in error for their promissory note, and there is nothing to negative the presumption that the bank notes were not equally available in the hands of the borrowers for the same 410 purpose—no pretence of any loss or sacrifice in the disposition actually made of the notes.

The Supreme Court, in the case cited, says: "Because "an article is depreciated in the market, it does not follow "that the owner is not entitled to demand or require a "higher price for it, before he consents to part with it. "He may possess bank notes, which to him are of par "value, because he can enforce payment thereof, and for "many purposes they may pass current at par, in payment "of his own debts, or in payment of public taxes, and yet "their market value may be far less.

"If he uses no disguise, if he seeks not to cover a loan "of money under the pretence of a sale or exchange of "them, but the transaction is bona fide what it purports to "be, the law will not set aside the contract, for it is no vio-"lation of any public policy against usury." We do not wish to be understood as holding that a loan of bank notes depreciated in value may not be a cover or cloak for an usurious transaction, but merely that such a contract is not disclosed in this case.

If it had appeared from the evidence that the plaintiffs in error were embarrassed, and pressed by executions, or other urgent demands, and had applied to the agent of Mr. Fauntleroy for a loan of money to relieve their necessities, and depreciated bank notes had been put upon them as the condition of the loan, and they had accepted them because, under the pressure of their circumstances, they were compelled to have money though at a sacrifice, the cloak or device to cover the usury would have been apparent, and the protestations of innocence of both parties would afford no protection against the conclusion of law. If Fauntleroy, in making this contract, designed to play the usurer, we find in the facts of this case no such cupidity and unhallowed love of gain as the imagination would portray 411 incident to such a character.

The small discount of eight per centum is all the difference between the notes loaned and specie coin, amounting to a gain of one hundred and twenty dollars; he takes the borrowers note payable on demand, not reserving any interest; he then quietly remains for nearly three years before he makes a demand, and puts the debt upon interest. If he had really intended the unlawful gain which is supposed by counsel for plaintiffs in error, he would have made the demand at an early period, possibly the very next day, which he might have done. But his carelessness on the subject of interest, leaving the borrower to enjoy the loan, if such it be, for two years and seven months, without interest, is of itself, a strong circumstance to repel the intention to violate the statute.

Upon the whole case, we are perfectly satisfied that the judgment of the court below was correct, and it is affirmed with costs.

THE TALLAHASSEE RAIL ROAD COMPANY, PLAINTIFFS IN ERROR, VS. HAYWARD AND WALKER, DEFENDANTS IN ERROR.

An injunction bond becomes forfeited on the dissolution of the injunction; and upon the failure of the obligors to perform the conditions, a right of action accrues to the obligee for the penalty of the bond. The court is bound to give judgment for the penalty, and such damages as may be ascertained by a jury for the breaches proved.

The bond declared on must be described with such precision, certainty and clearness as to fully apprise the defendants of the cause of action which they are required to answer. It is sufficient for the plaintiff to set forth such facts in his declaration as constitute a breach of the condition. The extent of the damages is matter of proof, to be ascertained by the jury.

Where the condition of the bonds is to pay the balance due upon a certain judgment specifically mentioned and set forth in a decretal order of the court, 412 bearing a particular date, and ten per cent. thereon, the precise amount of such judgment need not be stated in the declaration, that being a matter of proof on the trial.

Error to the Circuit Court of Leon county.

Hon. J. WAYLES BAKER, Judge.

The defendant in error sued in the court below on an injunction bond conditioned for the payment of the balance due on a certain judgment therein referred to, and ten per cent. thereon. The suit was brought after the dissolution of the injunction, for the recovery of ten per cent. on the amount of said judgment.

Issue was joined, and a jury being waived, a trial was had before the court, and a judgment entered against the plaintiffs in error for the sum of $941.

The plaintiffs in error, defendants in the court below, then moved in arrest of judgment, for the reasons appearing in the assignment of errors here, which are set forth in the opinion delivered by the court, the motion in arrest having been overruled in the court below.

Baltzell for plaintiffs in error.

Archer and G. K. Walker for defendants in error.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The appeal taken in this case having been dismissed, for reasons contained in the opinion of the court delivered at this term, the case is now presented for our consideration upon a writ of error subsequently awarded by the court.

The suit is an action of debt, commenced in Leon Circuit Court, upon an injunction bond executed by the plaintiffs in error on the 7th December, 1850, and payable to the defendants in the penal sum of $18,417.70.

The bond recites that in a certain cause in Chancery, Tallahassee R. R. Co. vs. Hayward & Walker.—Opinion of Court.

413 pending in the Circuit Court of Leon county, wherein the Tallahassee Railroad Company were complainants, and Hayward & Walker and others were respondents, the Judge of said court granted an injunction upon certain conditions set out in the decretal order, made and entered on the 7th of December, 1850, on the minute book of said court, &c.

'The condition of the said bond is that the Tallahassee Railroad Company shall well and truly pay the balance due upon a certain judgment and execution mentioned and set forth in said decretal order, and ten per cent. thereon, in case said injunction shall be dissolved, or the bill be dismissed.

The declaration is in the usual form, making profert of the bond, averring a dissolution of the injunction, and assigning as breaches the failure on the part of the obligors to pay the balance due on said judgment and ten per cent. thereon. The defendants, after craving oyer of the bond, plead performance of its conditions; upon which issue was taken and the parties went to trial. A jury being waived, the cause was submitted to the Judge of the court below, who, upon the evidence, rendered a judgment for the plaintiffs below, in the penalty of the bond and nine hundred and forty-one dollars as damages, to be discharged by the payment of the said damages.

The defendants, in the court below moved in arrest of judgment on the following grounds:

First. The declaration is imperfect, deficient, and sets forth no sufficient cause of action to enable the court to render judgment against the defendants.

Second. There is no allegation of a judgment, nor of the amount of the balance of the judgment, nor of the amount of damages claimed as due to the plaintiffs, nor is there a 414 direct averment of the dissolution of the injunction, without which no judgment could be rendered for plaintiffs.

This motion was overruled by the court, and judgment entered up for the plaintiffs.

The defendants below assign the following grounds of error:

First. The Circuit Court erred in giving judgment for plaintiffs below.

Second. Judgment should have been arrested, and the motion for the purpose should have been granted, and not overruled.

Third. The judgment is for too much, even upon the data assumed by the court.

Fourth. The obligation of the defendants below, was to pay the balance due upon the judgment and execution, mentioned in the decretal order of the 7th of December, 1850, and ten per cent. thereon, when in fact there is no averment in the declaration of the amount of said judgment or execution, the time of rendition. the court which rendered the same, or any other circumstance connected therewith.

Fifth. The judgment is informal, irregular and illegal. being for $18,417.70, and $941 damages, to be discharged by the payment of $941.

It is unnecessary to notice separately these several assignments of error. An examination of some of the leading questions, arising from them will dispose of the others. One of the main rules laid down by all writers, upon the subject of pleading is, that the declaration should set forth the facts of the case with certainty, by which is understood a clear and distinct statement of the facts, which constitute the cause of action, so that they may be understood by the party who is to answer them, by the jury who are to ascertain their truth, and by the court who is to pronounce the judgment. Applying this rule to the declara- 415 tion before us, is it liable to anyone of the objections raised by counsel for plaintiffs in error? We think not.

The cause of action in this case is manifestly the bond declared on, and not as is insisted by counsel, the judgment and execution enjoined by the court, and for the payment of which, with ten per cent., the bond was executed.

On the injunction being dissolved, and the obligors failing to perform the conditions, the bond became forfeited and the right of action accrued to the defendant, in error, to demand the penalty. This they sued for, and by the judgment of the court, recovered.

It cannot be pretended, but that the bond is declared on with such precision, certainty and clearness, that the defendants were fully apprised of the cause of action, and what they were called on to answer.

But it is insisted that, upon the pleadings, the court could not, consistently with the rules of law, give judgment for the penalty, or assess any damage. But the court below was bound, under the pleadings upon the issue being maintained, to give judgment for the penalty, and assess such damages, as the evidence proved the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

At common law, the plaintiff not only had judgment for the penalty in the bond, but was also entitled to take out execution for the whole amount, without any regard to the actual damage he had sustained by a breach of the covenant, and the defendant was compelled to resort to a Court of Chancery to relieve him from the excess of the penalty, over and above the damages, the plaintiff had sustained. But by the statute, 8 and 9 W.3,c.11, §8, and the construction given it by the English Courts, the plaintiff was bound to assign the breaches of such covenants as he proceeded to recover satisfaction for, and the jury were bound to assess not only 416 the damages and costs as before, but also damages for such of the breaches as the plaintiff upon the trial of the issues should prove to have been broken, and the like judgment was entered up as before the passage of the statute, which was for the debt (penalty,) nominal damages and costs. The execution issued for the debt and cost recovered, but was endorsed to levy only the damage assessed for the breaches of the covenant and costs. The true character of the plaintiff's demand, upon suit on the bond, is the same under this statute as it was at common law. He sues for the penalty, and is entitled to a judgment for the penalty, but the statute being remedial in its character, while it secures to the paintiff relief to the extent of the damages he has actually sustained, protects a defendant from the payment of any further sum than is in conscience due.

The action being on the bond and for the recovery of the penalty, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to state in his declaration such facts as constitute a breach of the condition, and thereby shew a title to demand the penalty. But it never was held necessary either before or after the passage of this statute for the plaintiff to aver that he had sustained damages by reason of the breaches.

The law will imply damages, and the extent of them is matter of proof, to be ascertained by the jury. The condition of the bond in this case was to pay the balance due upon a certain judgment and execution mentioned and set forth in the decretal order of the court of the 7th December, 1850, and ten per cent. thereon. The precise amount of this judgment was a subject matter to be proved on the trial, and not necessary to be averred in the declaration to sustain the cause of action or the issue presented by the pleadings.

As to the third ground assigned as error, not having be-417 fore us the data upon which the court below based its judgment in assessing damages, we cannot say whether they are too much or too little.

With nothing to guide us but the record, we are bound to presume that the court below did not assume any data, but pronounced its judgment upon the evidence, and that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the judgment. If the defendant below desired this court to review the testimony given on the trial, he should have made it a part of the record by bill of exceptions or otherwise. We cannot go beyond the record, and judge of the force and effect of evidence not incorporated in it.

In regard to the averment, in the declaration, of the dissolution of the injunction, the court is satisfied that it is sufficient. In point of form, an averment may be in any words amounting to an express allegation of the existence of a particular fact. This has been done in this averment, besides the words used are precisely those recommended by Mr. Chitty in his Treatise on Pleading. 1 Chitty, 324.

Independent of the foregoing considerations, the court is satisfied that, if any defect existed in the pleadings in this case, they have been cured by the verdict, because it became necessary to prove the facts alleged to have been imperfectly stated or omitted, and without which the judgment could not have been rendered. Arch. Pl. 164. 6 Pick. Rep. 413.

Let the judgment below be affirmed.

418 JOHN H. LEWIS AND WIFE, APPELLANTS, VS. GREGORY YALE, APPELLEE.

It is well settled principle of law that where husband and wife file a join. answer, such answer may not be read in evidence against the wife, where the subject matter relates to her estate of inheritance.

A femme covert is not competent to enter into contracts so as to give a personal remedy against her.

When, therefore, a bill seeks to affect the separate property of the wife, through her personally, it should be dismissed. The wife may pledge her separate property, but in order to charge it, her trustees must be made parties to the bill.

There cannot be a decree in personam against a married woman, even where she has signed the contract, the specific performance of which is sought.

The power of the Courts to reform contracts between attorney and client, is limited to the duty of protecting the latter against the undue influence of the former. Therefore, where a special contract has been entered into, by which the value of the services of an attorney has been fixed and ascertained, a Court of Equity cannot interpose to increase the compensation agreed on.

The question of title, so far as respects charges and incumbrances, depends upon their character and amount. Upon a reference to a Master, if it should ascertained that they are of such a character and amount as to enable a vendor to get them in within a reasonable time, the report should be in favor of the title.

A Court of Equity cannot award compensation in damages for injury sustained by non-performance of a contract, where the primary relief (specific performance) cannot be decreed.

As a general principle it may be asserted that a party seeking a specific performance must recover on the case as made in the bill; but such latitude has been allowed in the matter of amendments, as to authorize a plaintiff to amend his bill, and take a decree according to the case made by the answer.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the Eastern Circuit, sitting in Equity in and for the County of Alachua, made by the Hon. THOMAS DOUGLAS, Judge.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Archer and DuPont for Appellants.

Forward for Appellee.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the 419 court.

It appears from the facts in this case that the appellant, Mary, wife of the other appellant, was, at the time of their intermarriage, seized in fee, as the residuary devisee of her father, Samuel Betts, of an interest or share of a tract of land in East Florida, known as the "Alachua Arredondo Grant," as tenant in common with divers other persons—that a suit in equity for the partition of the respective interests of the several owners, was instituted by some of the tenants against the others, among the latter of whom were the present appellants—that the appellants employed the respondent, who is a solicitor and counsellor, to represent them and defend their interests in the said litigation —and out of this employment, the present suit has arisen.

The respondent, who was complainant in the court below, alleges in his bill in detail the foregoing facts, and that after a decree for partition had been passed in the partition suit, ascertaining the respective interests of the tenants, and among others that of the appellants as 62,000 acres, out of the aggregate of the whole, amounting to 250,000 acres, or thereabouts, the appellants, by John H. Lewis, entered into a contract with him for his remuneration, which contract is in writing, and is exhibited with the bill. It is in the following terms: "In consideration "of services rendered as counsel, in behalf of my self and "wife, in the partition of the Alachua Grant, by Gregory "Yale, Esq., I bind myself to have conveyed to him by "deed of release, with special warranty, one thousand "acres of land, the same to be of average quality to the "total amount of sixty-two thousand acres decreed to Ma- "M. Lewis at the Superior Court of St. Augustine, sitting "this month. Witness my hand and seal, the 4th July, "1845. JOHN H. LEWIS. [Seal.]"

Although the consideration of the promise and the cov- 420 enant to convey the land, seems, by the terms employed, to have been a past or executed consideration, yet both parties admit, and the proofs in the cause show it was not considered as such by either party, but was intended to and did include such future services of the respondent as were incident to and should be requisite and necessary to be performed in and about the execution of the decree, and the confirmation thereof by the court. Subsequently, however, to the decree aforesaid, which in point of fact was not carried into full execution, the report of Commissioners under said decree being excepted to, further litigation ensued, in an application by some of the parties for a re-hearing, and to set aside the decree on the ground of surprise, and subsequent discoveries of matters affecting their rights, and also in the filing of a supplemental bill or bill of review.

The bill further alleges that the respondent attended to this additional litigation as solicitor and counsel for the appellants, and made divers necessary journies and attendances at distant places and courts, and which were and ought to be considered as distinct substantive services, for which he should have been allowed additional compensation. He further alleges that on application by letter to the appellant, John H. Lewis, the said appellants agreed, by letter of the 12th of April, 1847, enclosing copy of a letter to the Hon. Wm. Law, of the 7th of April, 1847, so to modify the contract of July 4th, 1845, as to give to the said respondent the "right of location" of the said tract of land, which he seems to consider in his said bill of complaint as equivalent to the right of selection, by claiming to be entitled to "a selection or right of location of one thousand "acres under said modified contract," omitting the qualification of its average quality.

Lewis and Wife vs. Yale.—Opinion of Court.

The bill further alleges the submission by the tenants or claimants of the land, of the question of their respective interests to the arbitrament of the Hon. Isaac H Bronson, the award of the arbitrator by which the interest or share of the appellants was ascertained and fixed at 24,000 acres of land—the confirmation of the award, and such other proceedings as finally led to a sale of the whole tract, for the purposes of a partition, and the purchase by the appellants of 11,774 acres.

The bill further alleges a refusal by the appellants to convey one thousand acres of land, to be selected by the said respondent, out of the land in their possession, and prays for a decree for the specific performance by the conveyance of one thousand acres of land selected by the respondent, as provided in the modified contract, or compensatory damages in lieu thereof.

The appellants answer the bill in a joint answer, and to which reference will hereafter be made. It will be sufficient here to state that the contract, as it is understood to be insisted upon in the bill, is denied, although a contract is admitted, which they allege they have at all times been willing to perform, have offered to perform, and are still willing so to do.

In the examination of the questions presented by this record, it will be important primarily to consider and ascertain who are properly the parties to this contract, and what has been agreed upon by them.

The respondent in his bill alleges that the contract was made by both the appellants, Mrs. Lewis assenting and acting through her husband. Is this allegation correct? The covenant of July 4th, 1845, is signed by John H. Lewis alone, and by its terms it professes to be entered into by him alone, and to be binding on himself, and not on any other person, although from the expression that he "binds himself to have conveyed" the land mentioned, he must be understood as contracting for the conveyance of property, in which he did not assert a perfect title in himself.

It is true that the consideration expressed is for services rendered by both Lewis and Wife in the partition suit, and the tract of land to be conveyed is to be carved out of the lands decreed in the suit as the property of the wife; yet there is not one word which evinces an intention to bind her, or to make her a party to the covenant.

It is impossible to give any other interpretation to this instrument than that it is a personal contract of John H Lewis. So, also, the correspondence by which the contract is claimed to be modified and enlarged, is between the appellant, John H. Lewis, and the respondent. John H. Lewis in this speaks of himself alone: what he thinks what he is not willing to grant, and what he does concede. The counsel for respondent has argued with much earnestness the admissions of the joint and several answer of the appellants, and especially the answer which they jointly make to the ninth interrogatory as conclusive upon the point. That interrogatory requires the disclosure, whether the said appellants did not enter into a contract with the respondent, as in the said bill is set forth, and whether or not, the "copy of the obligation of July 4th, 1845, by "the said Lewis and Wife, through the said John H. Lewis," is not a true copy, &c.? And the answer is, they "admit they entered into a contract with the complainant "for his services, that they have no copy or duplicate of "said contract, and ask that the complainant verify his allegation," &c., but admit they believe the copy exhibition to be a true copy. This admission of Mrs. Lewis, so totally at variance with the exhibits and proof of the respondent, the written contract and the letters in evidence can only be ascribed to inadvertence, or to the peculiar structure of the interrogatory to which it is an answer, as leading to the error. Or it may have been supposed by the appellants or their counsel to be a corollary from the facts elicited and brought out by the twenty-ninth interrogatory of the bill, viz: "That the defendant, John H. "Lewis, has been the agent of the defendant, Mary, his "wife, in all things touching her interest in the Arredondo "Grant; that she was knowing to and did sanction "the contract between the complainant and John H. Lewis and a modification thereof, but not as set forth by "the complainant, and to that construction, understanding "it according to the construction given thereto by the complainant, she never could have assented but under duress: they admit fully her knowledge of the fact that "complainant, since his connection with the suit, has been "of counsel in their behalf, and that John H. Lewis has 'been, as meet he should have been, her counsel and adviser in the premises."

In such a conclusion we cannot concur. If John H. Lewis, as agent of his wife, had power or authority to bind her in this contract, he has not executed or pretended to execute the power. There must be a contract in writing signed by the party to be charged, or by some one duly authorized.

In Aylett vs. Ashton, 1 Mylne & C. 105, a femme covert, possessing property, two-thirds of which was supposed to be settled to her separate use, and the remaining third to belong to her brother in India, whose concurrence it was represented she could procure, in the presence of her husband, and with his concurrence signed an agreement in writing to grant a lease. The husband present offered also to sign the agreement, but it was waived as unnecessary. It was soon after discovered that one-fourth only was settled to her separate use; to one other fourth she was entitled absolutely; one-fourth belonged to her brother in India, and the remaining fourth had belonged to a deceased sister, which latter was afterwards purchased by the husband. On a bill against husband and wife for a specific performance, it was held, that the husband, not being a party to the contract, there being no written agreement signed either by himself, or by a person duly authorized in his behalf, there could be no decree against him for his marital interest, in the fourth owned absolutely by the wife, or for the other fourth which he had purchased, and which he held in his own right.

But a full and conclusive answer to the argument is to be found in the principle of law, that where husband and wife put in a joint answer, such answer may not be read in evidence against the wife where the subject matter relates to her estate of inheritance. Evans vs. Cogan, 2 P. Wms. 450. Hodgson vs. Merest, 9 Price R. 556. Elston vs. Wood, 2 Mylne & C. 678.

It may be as well however to state, in this connection, as we will have to advert to the point when we come to the consideration of the decree, rendered in this cause, that the respondent's case, as made by the bill, would not have been aided, if Mrs. Lewis had signed the contract with her husband.

The prayer for a specific performance involves a decree in personam against her, which a Court of Equity cannot grant. There is no case, says Vice C. Plumer, in which this court has made a personal decree against a femme covert. She may pledge her separate property and make it answerable for her engagements; but where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but only a personal decree against her, the bill cannot be sustained. Francis vs. Wigzell, 1 Mad. R.

148. Holmes vs. Tenant, 1. Bro. C. C. 16. In Aylett vs. Ashton, before cited, the bill was dismissed as to the wife, as well as the husband. The court says, a femme covert is not competent to enter into contracts, so as to give a personal remedy against her. The bill there, like the present, did not seek to effect the separate property, except through Mrs. Ashton personally.

If, says the court, it had sought to affect the property upon the ground that the contract had given the plaintiff a right against the property, the suit would have been brought against the trustees; for there must be some trustees of that part of the property settled to her separate use. Although a femme covert has power, and the court has jurisdiction, over the rents and profits of her separate property, no case has given effect to her contracts against the corpus of her separate estate. The recent case of Owens vs. Dickinson, 1 Craig and Phillips R. 48, to which we have been referred, is not in opposition to the doctrine here asserted.

Although we are satisfied that Mrs. Lewis is not a party to the contract, yet we think she is properly made a party to the bill, because it is her property which is the subject matter of the contract. The bill should, however, not in such case, pray any discovery from, or relief against her.

We will now proceed to the consideration of the terms of the agreement. As to the covenant of July 4, 1845, and its proper interpretation, there is no contest. It is admitted that thereby John H. Lewis promised and agreed, as the remuneration for the services of respondent, to have conveyed to him by deed of release, with special warranty, one thousand acres of land, the same to be of average quality to the total amount of 62,000 acres decreed to Mrs. Lewis, and, ot course, as interpreted by the respondent, of the average of the entire tract of 250,000 acres.

It seems likewise to be admitted by the bill of complaint, and by the letters of respondent, that although the consideration expressed was for services rendered, yet that certain duties "necessarily incident to, and connected with, "the duties of the Commissioners, and the action of the "court thereon," remained to be attended to on his part. The report made by the Commissioners, under the decree of June Term, 1845, was excepted to, and was never confirmed. The difficulties specified and detailed in the bill arose, which were only finally settled by the award of the Honorable Isaac H. Bronson, on the reference to his arbitrament of all the matters in difference between the owners of the Arredondo Grant, touching their respective interests. Pending these difficulties, the respondent addressed the appellant, John H. Lewis, the letter of the 29th of January, 1847, (Exhibit K.,) in which he states that, since the decree of June Term, 1845, new and important matters have come to light, unknown at the time of the contract of July 4, 1845, giving a new character to the controversy, and producing, in a certain sense, the only litigation in the case; that he had attended to it exclusively at great labor and sacrifice; that he had, so far, realized nothing for his services, and, to be candid, he regarded the one thousand acres of an average quality out of the 62,000 acres, and that again of an average quality out of the 250,000 acres of the Grant subject to distribution, as being subject to "precarious location," of little value, unless he should receive the estimated value made by the Commissioners. This, he says, he is willing to do, and to stand by Lewis in the lower courts until the case shall end, if he (Lewis) will give him that estimate for the one thousand acres.

This letter is not only important, as the first of the series which led to the modification, as it is termed, of the original contract, but because it gives also the grounds of dissatisfaction with it, namely: more labor than he had anticipated, by the new aspect the case had assumed, and the precarious location to which the land promised by the contract was subject.

The complaint is not that one thousand acres of land of average quality, is not sufficient compensation, for he offered to go on to the end of the law suit in the Circuit Court, if he can only be secure in the receipt of the average value fixed by the Commissioners, which, we presume, was the received opinion, at the time, of the value of the lands.

To this letter John H. Lewis replies, on the 15th of February, 1847, and parries the application, saying: "I "beg you not to discuss your interest in the Lion's skin "until it is off your back. You would not have had, nor "shall you have any cause of complaint when the battle "is ended. Our enemy now should be our care." This answer being unsatisfactory, the respondent again addresses Lewis, on the 2d March, 1847, and expresses his unwillingness that the question of a new arrangement of his compensation should be thus indefinitely postponed; again urges its consideration upon him, and pointedly and distinctly informs him that if he (Yale) continues to act as his solicitor and counsel, he (Yale) must have the privilege of selecting one thousand acres out of the quantity which shall be ultimately decreed to appellants, instead of the same quantity of land of average quality, according to the contract of July 4th, 1845, or that he should be paid in money at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per acre. In this letter he distinctly asserts that he considers all services he has rendered since the rendition of the decree of June Term, 1845, except as incidental to that decree, as extra, and entitling him to additional compensation.

The senior counsel, the Hon. Wiliam Law, having, as it appears, made a similar application, about the same time, for an increase of compensation, the appellant, John H. Lewis, replies to Wililam Law on the 7th, and to the respondent on the 12th of April, 1847.

It seems that the application of Mr. Law, as well as that of the respondent, was for the right to select lands. In the letter to the Hon. William Law, the appellant, John H. Lewis, says: "If litigation ensues beyond what could have "been reasonably anticipated when we entered into the "contract, and which should justify a claim to equitable "compensation, I will, under the contract, submit to im- "partial counsel, what this shall be, or I will give you your "election, under your contract, to take money and land, or "land only; or, should you prefer it, I will give you such "a favorable location as will ensure a speedy sale." And again he says to him: "If you knew the value of the "selection of lands you propose, you would not think it just." Of the respondent's claim, he says: "Mr. Yale, who has "borne manfully the brunt of the battle, asks me for a fa- "vorable location. I shall concede it to him, as his atten- "tion, zeal and talents entitle him to the boon beyond his "contract." A copy of this letter is enclosed to the respondent, and he is informed in the letter of the 12th of April that, so far as concerns his interest, it may be regarded as the answer to his letter. He says, further, that he (John H. Lewis,) trusts it will prove satisfactory, and says that it is yielded not only as the proper reward of respondent's diligence, but to prove the writer's conviction that there should be, at all times, not only good faith and inviolable fulfillment of contracts between counsel and client, but that the friendliest feelings should prevail. In this letter, Mr. Lewis speaks of an application by respondent for a favorable location, which was the application of the 29th of January, overlooking the fact that in the letter of the 2d of March, the respondent's demand is enlarged to the claim of a right to select lands, or probably being misled by the fact that the alternative or money proposition, was the same in both letters, viz: fifteen hundred dollars.

It is to be observed that the appellant, John H. Lewis, neither in this nor any other letter, makes the slightest admission of the performance of extra services calling for additional compensation. Indeed, in the letter of the 7th of April to Judge Law, he says: "To avoid misconstruction "of this offer, I wish it to be understood that I shall not "deem this as a substitute for the original contract, or that "unexpected litigation has occurred, unless it may be ne- "cessary for you to attend other terms than the next at St. "Augustine."

From this extract, and the ground upon which Mr. Lewis puts the modification of a favorable location conceded to the respondent, it will be seen that he fairly informs his counsel that he does not admit as true the existence, at that time, of unexpected litigation since the decree of June term, 1845, which would warrant a claim to extra compensation. On this point they are at issue.

On the 18th of May, the respondent, acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Lewis' letter on the 12th of April, says: "Un- "derstanding from the letter to Judge Law, to which "you refer in mine, that you concede to me the right of loca- "tion, and so far modify the contract of July 4th, 1845, I "hereby express myself satisfied with the modification." The respondent here, it will be seen, varies the form of expression. Mr. Lewis says he concedes to him a "favora- ble location." which respondent interprets or says he 430 understands it to be the "right of location.' If there be any substantial difference between the two phrases, which it is not material for us to inquire into, and if the correspondence had closed here, a well-founded doubt would arise whether the minds of the contracting parties had assented to the same thing.

But the appellant, John H. Lewis, on the 29th May, acknowledges the receipt of this letter, and expresses himself gratified that the respondent is satisfied with his modification of the contract of July 4th, 1845, and says he (Lewis) always intended to go beyond his contract, but was unwilling to define limits until the result was ascertained and the measure of service fully conveyed.

By this we ascertain that by the terms or phrase, "a favorable location," the appellant, Lewis, and the respondent both understood that the latter should have the right of location, and we have now the terms of the contract as modified. Is the respondent correct in his interpretation thereof when he treats the "right of location" conceded by this correspondence, and the "right of selection" demanded by his letter of the 2d of March, as convertible terms or expressions?

Recurring to the respondent's letter of the 29th of January, we find the complaint to be founded on the fact that his one thousand acres of land, of average quality, was subject to "precarious location," and therefore, of little value, unless he could realize the average price or value thereof, as estimated by the Commissioners, of one dollar and fifty cents per acre. We understand him as expressing the opinion that the contract of July 4th, 1845, might be satisfied by the conveyance of any tract of the quantity of one thousand acres, which will answer to the quality of an average, no matter where it is located or placed, within the limits of the grant, and therefore of little value to him.

He therefore desires that the average value shall be se- 431
cured to him, irrespective of location, by an undertaking on the part of the client to pay that value in money, assuming the correctness of the Commissioner's estimate; and although in his letter of the 2d of March, he asks to be allowed to select one thousand acres from the body of land which may be ultimately decreed to the appellants, yet he presents the same money alternative of fifteen hundred dollars, the average price of one dollar and fifty cents per acre, showing that his claim did not at any time exceed the average value so estimated. Again, in the letter of May 18th, after stating his understanding of the concession made by Lewis, he adds, "and so far modify" the contract of July 4th, 1845, clearly indicating that all he asked for was granted. Coupling these facts with the very emphatic expression of the appellant, John H. Lewis, to Judge Law, in his letter of the 7th of April, that if the counsel knew the value of one thousand acres of selected land, he would not think it just, we are bound to conclude that the intention was to concede this requisition did not exist in the mind of John H. Lewis, and that the respondent could not at the time have so understood him. The value of one thousand acres selected from the tract, according to the proofs in the cause, and the concession of counsel for respondent in the argument here, is stated to be worth at least seven thousand dollars, and this fact well justifies the remark of Mr. Lewis as to the want of justice in the requisition. If Lewis had yielded to the importunity of the respondent, and was now here resisting the performance of the promise, upon reason and authority, this court would be bound to declare it unconscionable. Justice Story, in his observations upon the relation of client and attorney or solicitor, says that it must give rise to great confidence between the parties, and to very strong influ- 432 ences over the actions and rights and interests of the client. The situation of an attorney or solicitor puts it in his power to avail himself not only of the necessities of his client, but of his good nature, liberality and credulity to obtain undue advantages, bargains and gratuities. Hence the law, with a wise providence, not only watches over all the transactions of parties in this predicament, but it often interposes to declare transactions void which, between other persons, would be held unobjectionable. By establishing the principle that, while the relation of client and attorney subsists in full vigor, the latter shall derive no benefit to himself from the contracts, or bounty, or other negotiations of the former, it supercedes the necessity of any inquiry into the particular means, extent and exertion of influence in a given case—a task often difficult and ill supported by evidence which can be drawn from any satisfactory sources. Comm. on Eq. Ju., 310. So a gift, made to an attorney pendente lite will be set aside, as arising from the exercise of improper influence; for it has been said with great force that there would be no bounds to the crushing influence of the power of an attorney who has the affairs of a man in his hands, if it were not so. And sales made and annuities granted to attorneys under similar circumstances, will, upon the same principles of public policy, be set aside, at least unless they are established to have been transacted uberrima fide. Ibid, § 312.

But we are very clear in the conclusion that the modification or enlargement of the agreement extended only to the right to locate the tract upon lands of average quality within the grant—that no more is conceded, and that the right to select land is limited and restricted to the lands of average quality, and this we find to be the contract admitted in the answer of the appellants.

It has been urged upon the court by the counsel of the

Lewis and Wife vs. Yale.—Opinion of Court.

433 respondent, that this construction of the contract of the appellant, John H. Lewis, makes the remuneration grossly inadequate to the services rendered the appellants, and from the proofs at the hearing it is no doubt as he alleges. All unite in their testimony of the merit of the respondent, and none gives stronger evidence in his favor than Mr. Lewis himself. We can only express our regret that he should not receive adequate compensation for his labor, skill and fidelity, but we cannot afford any remedy. In the absence of a special contract, the courts will afford solicitors, attorneys and counsel every legal and proper facility to secure a fair and reasonable remuneration for services rendered; but when a special contract is entered into, by which the value of the services is to be ascertained or measured, or where property is accepted in lieu of money, the courts can only enforce the contract according to the legal import of its terms. The power of the courts to reform contracts between attorney and client, is limited to the duty of protecting the latter against the "crushing influence of the power" of the former, and to relieve him from unreasonable and unconscionable exactions, agreements, gifts, etc.

The decree rendered in this cause in the Circuit Court recites that specific performances of the contract set forth in the bill, cannot be decreed. Why, we are not informed. It cannot be for the reason that Mrs. Lewis refuses to join her husband in the execution of the conveyance, for there is no evidence in the record of such refusal. It cannot be, for the reason that the appellants do not own any lands answering to the description in the agreement, for we find neither allegation nor proof to that effect.

It is conjectured, however, by the respondent's counsel that it was because the appellant's share of the whole tract as ascertained by the sale made in February, 1849, was 434 $11,906 77, and that they purchased lands to the extent and value of $18,979 84: thus exceeding their interest, under the general average, the sum of $7,073 07; and that, by decree of the court, this excess was directed to be paid by installments, and was to be a lien and charge upon the whole of appellant's lands until paid, and because of some supposed lien of Judge Law for his compensation.

There was no refrence to a Master to ascertain the state of the titles, &c. From the same exhibit, the decree of the court in the partition suit, it appears that the appellants purchased eighteen sections of land, on which the sum of $7,073 07, together with a sum due for costs, was charged; and it further appears that if the instalments had been duly paid, about which payment however there is no evidence, there would have remained due for principal and interest at the time of the decree, about $3,200. Taking this hypothesis to be true, is a charge of $3,200 upon eighteen parcels of land, containing in the aggregate 11,774 acres, and valued at $18,979, such an incumbrance as would justify a Master in reporting against a title?

In Daniel's Chy. Pr., it is said, that when the title is clear, but there are terms or incumbrances to be got in, the Master should report in favor of the title. Before he does so, however, he should be satisfied that the terms or incumbrances can be got in. If he is not satisfied on this point, he should report that a good title cannot be made, unless the terms, &c., can be got in. Vol. 2, p. 873, (Harrisburg ed.) citing Bennett, 152. In Coffin vs. Cooper, 14 Vesey R. 205, on a motion to discharge a purchaser upon the Master's report, Lord Eldon ruled that where the Master's report is that the vendor getting in a term or getting administration, &c., will have a title, the court will put him under terms to procure it speedily, and denied the motion. See also Wood vs. Bernal, 19 Vesey R. 221, and Halsey vs. Grant, 13 Vesey R. 73. From these citations, 435 it will be seen that the question of title, so far as respects charges and incumbrances, depends on their character and amount, and whether or not they can be got in within a reasonable time by the vendor; and from the want of a Master's report, or proofs of the state of the title at the date of the decree, we have no means of testing the correctness of the recital that specific performance could not be decreed for this cause. As there are no facts in the record upon which any of the foregoing hypotheses can be sustained, can the recital aforesaid be founded on the position assumed in the argument here by the counsel for the appellants, that a Court of Equity will not enforce against a husband a specific performance of an agreement to dispose of his wife's estate, but will refer the purchaser to a court of law for his remedy, and upon which it was argued that the decree should be reversed, and the bill dismissed? The point has been the subject of much difference in opinion. In Hall vs. Hardy, 3 P. Wms. R. 139, Sir Joseph Jekyl, M. R., said: "There have been an hundred pre-"cedents where, if the husband, for a valuable considera-"tion, covenants that his wife shall join with him in a fine, "the court has decreed the husband to do it, for that he "has undertaken it, and must lie by it if he does not per-"form it." To the same effect, are the cases of Barrington vs. Horn, decided by Ld. Ch. Cowper, (5 Vin. Ab. 547, pl. 35,) Morris vs. Stephenson, decided Sir Wm. Grant, M. R. (7 Vesey R. 478,) and that of Withers vs. Pinchard, decided by Lord Rosslyn, cited in the argument of the last cited case. In opposition may be cited Otread vs. Round, also decided by Ld. Ch. Cowper, (4 Vin. Ab. 203, pl. 4,) in which the wife had expressly refused. The Chancellor says: "It is a tender point to compel the husband by a "decree to procure his wife to levy a fine, though there "have been some precedents in this court for it, and it is 436
"a great breach upon the wisdom of the law which secures "the wife's lands from being aliened by the husband with-"out her free and voluntary consent, to lay a necessity "upon the wife to part with her lands, or otherwise to "cause her husband laying in prison all his days;" and said he did not think it proper in the case to decree a specific performance of the covenant, but that the defendant must refund the purchase money paid, with costs. In Emery vs. Wase, (8 Vesey R. 514,) Lord Eldon doubts whether the point was as well settled as it was understood to be; and in Innes vs. Jackson, (16 Vesey R., 370,) he says he considers it still doubtful. There is also a dictum of Ch. Baron Alexander, in Frederick vs. Coxwell, (3 Young and Jer. 514,) that he considered the rule to be shaken. Amidst this contrariety of opinion, and believing, as declared by Lord Eldon, that the policy of the law is, that a wife is not to part with her property but by her own spontaneous and free will, we should be inclined to refuse in any case an absolute decree for specific performance against the husband, on the ground that it is calculated to invade that policy.

We regard with much favor the decree made by Sir John Strange, M. R., in Sedgewick vs. Hargrave, (2 Vesey Senr. R. 57.) In that case the sum of $200 had been paid to the husband as a compensation for the relinquishment of his wife's interest in an estate. On refusal to convey, and upon bill filed against them, the Judge observed, that he feared a bare decree on the husband to join or procure his wife to join, might not answer the ends of justice; and as he was not warranted to make a personal decree on the wife, he directed the husband to join in a conveyance, and to procure her so to do; and to induce him, he added the alternative that if he does not, in the time and manner di-437 rected by the Master, perform it, he should repay the plaintiff the money advanced. So, in this case, regarding the service rendered as the payment for the land, the court might decree in the alternative that the appellant, John H. Lewis, convey and procure his wife to join with him, or pay the value of the lands, which value should be previously ascertained by reference to a Master, whose report, with the evidence on which it is founded, would enable the Chancellor to arrive at a correct conclusion on the point.

The decree continues to recite that, considering the respondent here entitled to compensation for his services as solicitor for said appellants, it is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the appellants, (John H. Lewis and Mary his wife,) pay or cause to be paid to the respondent the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, with interest from the decree, and awards execution generally, &c. This decree is doubtless intended to be in accordance with the alternative prayer of the bill for compensatory damages, but would more properly seem to be based upon a rescision of the contract.

Upon the question whether a Court of Equity may award compensation in damages for the injury sustained by the non-performance of a contract, in the event of the primary relief for a specific performance failing, we have no doubt. It is not within the jurisdiction of the court. The cases in the English Courts which maintain the affirmative of the proposition are Denton vs. Stewart, 1 Coxe's cases, 258, and Greenaway vs. Adams, 12 Vesey R., 395, both of which are doubted in Gwillin vs. Stone, 14 Vesey R., 128, and expressly overruled in Todd vs. Gee, 17 Vesey R., 274-279, and in Sainsbury vs. Jones, 5 Mylne. & Craig R. 1-3. The American cases cited in the argument here, so far as they are upon the point, are decided expressly on the authority of the overruled cases, and are not consider-438 ed as giving any additional weight to them. The cases of compensation in Equity, says Ch. Baron Alexander, in Newham vs. May, 13 Price R., 749, have grown out of the jurisdiction of the Courts of Equity, as exercised in respect of contracts for the purchase of real property, where it is often ancillary as incidentally necessary to effectuate decrees of specific performance. Thus, where a specific performance is decreed, upon the application of either party, with an allowance to be made for any deficiency as to the quantity, quality or description of the property, or for any delay in performing the contract. Nelson vs. Bridges, 2 Beavan R., 239, Todd vs. Gee, 17 Vesey R. 278, Grant vs. Munts, Cooper's Equity cases, 173, Dyer vs. Hargrave, 10 Vesey R., 505, Wilkinson vs. Torkington, 2 Y. & Coll. cases, 726, Hepburn vs. Auld, 5 Cranch R., 278. Or where the suit is by the vendor or against the vendee, the court decreeing specific performance, will also decree the payment of the purchase money, or, as in the case of Sedgewick vs Hargrave, before cited, where the vendor was decreed to convey, and procure his wife to join, or to repay the purchase money. In all these and similar cases, the jurisdiction properly attaches in equity as ancillary to the relief granted by the decree, and as necessary to make it effectual. By keeping this distinction in view, it will reconcile the apparent contrariety of the decisions on the subject. When the court below ascertained that specific performance could not be decreed, the jurisdiction of Equity terminated, and the bill should have been dismissed.

How far the principle we have asserted would be applicable in a case where pendente lite and with a view to defeat the plaintiff of his specific performance, the vendor should convey or incumber the property, it is not necessary for us to decide, as we do not find any such fraudulent 439 conduct imputable to the appellants.

The compensation or damages awarded, appear by the decree to have been ascertained on the basis of the value of the services of the respondent as solicitor, &c., for the appellants, which was a virtual rescision or setting aside of the contract between the parties, by which the value of the services was estimated. One thousand acres of land of average quality, to be located by the respondent, was settled and fixed as the equivalent of the services rendered. It was threfore erroneous; the damages or compensation, if proper to be allowed, should have been estimated by the value of the land.

The decree is also erroneous in rendering a judgment in personam against Mrs. Lewis, for the reasons and upon authorities heretofore cited.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree rendered in this cause should be reversed—holding, as we do, that the contract which the respondent prayed to be enforced against the appellants, is not the contract which the parties entered into; that there is no sufficient showing in the record to support the declaration in the decree that the contract, which the court below ascertained, could not be specifically performed; that compensation cannot be decreed when specific performance is denied; that the basis on which the amount of compensation was ascertained, is incorrect; and that a decree in personam cannot be rendered in a Court of Equity against a femme covert, and especially upon a contract she never entered into.

What disposition shall be made of the case?

The counsel for the appellants insist that a party seeking specific performance, must recover on the case as made in the bill, and cannot recover on a case made by the evidence at the trial, and that this court should dismiss the bill of complaint. As a general proposition, the author- 440 ities cited seem to sustain the position assumed, but great latitude has been allowed to a plaintiff in making amendments. Lord Redesdale in Lindsay vs. Lynch, (2 Sch. and Lefroy R. 9) mentions a case where a plaintiff filed a bill stating an agreement, and the defendant, by his answer, admitted that there was an agreement, but different from that stated by the plaintiff; and it was held that the plaintiff might amend his bill, abandoning his first agreement, and praying for a decree according to that admitted by the defendant.

Although this course was denied by Lord Redesdale to the plaintiff, in Lindsay vs. Lynch, it was because the plaintiff had amended his bill after the coming in of the answer; and had persisted in his original demand, praying in the alternative for that, or for a decree according to the agreement admitted by the answer; which course his Lordship considered as unfair and improper.

This case differs from Lindsay vs. Lynch, which was the case of a parol agreement; here it is in writing, and the reason given does not apply. We are inclined to adopt the precedent mentioned by Lord Redesdale as the rule to govern this case.

Let the decree of the court blow be reversed, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court of the Eastern Circuit sitting in the County of Alachua, with directions to allow the respondent, upon application, to amend his bill according to the suggestions herein, and pray for a specific performance of the contract admitted by the appellant, John H. Lewis, in his answer, upon the terms of furnishing said appellant with a copy of the amendments gratis; and for such other and further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, and acording to the usual.

Lewis and Wife vs. Yale.—Opinion of Court.

441 course of proceedings in Equity, as may be requisite and proper in the premises.

Let the appellants recover the costs and charges by them expended and incurred in and about the prosecution of their appeal.

JOHN H. LEWIS AND WIFE, APPELLANTS, VS. GREGORY YALE, APPELLEE.

The general rule in regard to costs is, that they follow the result of the suit. In a Court of Equity this rule is departed from where the failing party can show to the court any circumstances which would render it unjust that he should pay the costs of the proceedings.

But the rule will not be departed from in a case where the course and conduct of the losing party have been the chief cause of great accumulation of costs.

Motion by counsel for appellee to re-consider and change so much of the decree of the court in the foregoing case as awards to the appellants, against the respondent, the costs and charges by them incurred and expended in the prosecution of their appeal.

Motion denied.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the folowing opinion:

We have been asked by the counsel for respondent to reconsider so much of our judgment in this case, pronounced at a former day, as allows the appellants, against the respondent, the costs and charges by them expended and incurred in and about the prosecution of their appeal, upon the ground of the merits of the respondent in the services rendered the appellants, which formed the consideration of the contract between the parties and the hard bargain he has made for his remuneration, it being alleged to be grossly inadequate.

442 The general rule in regard to costs is that they follow the result. In a Court of Equity, however, the rule is departed from in those cases where the failing party can show to the court any circumstances which may satisfy it that it would be against the ordinary principles of justice that he should pay the cost of the proceedings. Conceding that the services of the respondent were valuable, and that he did make a hard bargain on his part, is it sufficient Equity in this case to induce the court to depart from the general rule?

In considering such questions, a Court of Equity is very much governed by its desire to discourage and repress unnecessary litigation, and will generally withhold costs from the party who is guilty of any misconduct with reference to the subject matter of the suit. The respondent, who was plaintiff in the court below, is a lawyer of eminence, and the court would for this reason look for more accuracy of view and propriety of action with regard to the institution of the suit, and its conduct, than from a mere layman, or one less distinguished in the ranks of the profession.

It was proved in the record, that at the sale of the lands in February, 1849, the appellant, John H. Lewis, gave the respondent written authority to bid for, and buy on his account, a tract of one thousand acres of land, in satisfaction or performance of a contract, but the dispute arising as to the value of lands so to be purchased, the respondent returned it. The testimony of the witness is not very precise on this subject, but the answer of the appellant alleges it was an offer on his part to perform the contract which is admitted in his answer, and which this court has ascertained to be the true contract. Willingness to do what a party ought in equity and good conscience to do, places him, with regard to the question of costs, upon a vantage ground. Lewis was willing to perform his contract, but 443 not to accede to the demands of his adversary. There is surely no misconduct in this.

Again, the demand of Yale is for a construction of the contract which, if it had been the true construction, he as a lawyer must have known a Court of Equity would not enforce, because it was unconscionable. Upon the principle of discouraging unnecessary litigation alone, notwithstanding the merits of the respondent, we would be bound to adhere to the general rule. But there is another consideration which presses itself upon us, and which is entitled to much weight. The principal and heaviest item of costs is that of ascertaining the voluminous record of the cause, upon the institutions of this appeal.

The bill filed by the respondent contains much useless and redundant matter, in the very prolix and circumstantial history of the services rendered by him in the Circuit Courts for the appellants, and which formed the consideration of the contract, and the bill was thereby swelled to an unnecessary length.

To the bill were annexed, as exhibits, the voluminous record of the suit for the partition of the Arredondo Grant including the petition for rehearing, and the proceedings thereon, the bill of review and the answers thereto, with the proceedings thereon, including the reference to the arbitrator and his award, and the final decree thereon, together with copies of agreements made in said cause, and correspondence between the counsel of appellants, all tending to show the magnitude and importance of his services, but wholly foreign to the questions properly presented in this controversy. Of the four hundred and seventy odd pages of the record sent up from the court below, not more than one hundred pages, if so much, properly belonged to the cause.

When the appellants sought relief in this court from an 444 erroneous decree against them, they were obliged to bring up the whole record, encumbered, as it was, with such a large amount of extraneous and useless matter. If the appellants had been wrong in resisting the respondent's claim, still they should not be mulct in unnecessary expense.

The respondent is properly accountable for this unnecessarily voluminous record, and we regret that we are compelled, under the circumstances of the case, to consider that his merit, so far as regards the services he has rendered the appellants, is more than counterbalanced by his demerits in the institution and conduct of this suit; and that, if the costs awarded to the appellants prove a heavy burden, he has contributed much to it himself by the reckless manner in which he encumbered the record.

We find nothing in the defence made by the appellants to object to. They were resisting an unjust demand, and in doing so, have, no doubt, incurred heavy expense for counsel fees, and it would be unjust in this court to add to the burden by taking from them one of the fruits of their success.

In the exercise of the sound discretion invested in us, we must deny the motion.

SUPREME COURT

TERM AT JACKSONVILLE

EASTERN DIVISION

HEIRS OF JACOB BRYAN vs. DENNIS, MARY, AND OTHERS.

In the construction of interpretation of a statute, all laws in pari materia, should be considered in order to ascertain the will of the Legislature; for that which is within the intention of the makers of the law, is as much within the statute as if it was in the letter.

Laws which have reference to the public welfare or the policy of a State, should be construed liberally.

The policy of this State is, and ever has been, opposed to the settlement of free negroes within her borders, and consequently to the unrestricted manumission of slaves.

The Act of 1829, which gives the right to manumit slaves, provides, at the same time, a remedy for the evil, by requiring the owner, after the act of manumission, to transport them beyond the limits of the State. The design of the Legislature manifestly was, that this restriction should apply in the case of a manumission of slaves born in the State, as well as to slaves brought here from other States.

The repealing section of the Act of 1842, is in relation to "Free Negroes and Free Mulattoes," and does not, in any wise, affect the Act of 1829, in reference to slaves.

The Act of 1829, imposes a penalty upon the person who shall manumit any slaves brought into this State, of $200 for every slave so manumitted; and provides that, before the grant of manumission, he shall enter into bond for their transportation beyond the limits of the State.

A deed of manumission, made by a person who has not complied with the conditions of the Act, is absolutely void; the title to the slaves remains unaffected, and descends to his heirs.

This was a proceeding instituted by the appellants in the Circuit Court of Duval county, before the Honorable Thomas Douglas, Judge of the Eastern Circuit, to test the 446 right of the appellees to their freedom, under a deed purporting to be a deed of manumission executed by Jacob Bryan in his life time, and bearing date the 25th November, 1842.

The nature of the proceeding, and the facts of the case, are stated in the opinion of the court.

Sanderson, for appellants, contended:

I. The act of 1829, Thomp. Dig. page 533, must be strictly complied with, or the slaves attempted to be manumitted under it, take nothing, and "shall not be deemed free." The appellees claim to be free under and by virtue of the deed of manumission, introduced in evidence. That deed must be shown to have been executed in strict conformity with the requirement of that act, and the onus probandi rests with the appellees, as well in this court as in the court below.

The statute of 1829 requires "that such person or persons shall, before he grants such manumission, give bond with two or more securities," &c.

The record shows, and the facts agreed upon and submitted admit, that no such bond was ever executed as required by the above cited act. The giving and filing of the bond was a condition precedent, required by said act, and must have been strictly complied with, or the deed is void, and the slaves attempted to be manumitted "shall not be deemed free." This principle is recognized and established in the case of Henry Miller, Adm'r., vs. Herbert & Herbert, 5 Howard, 72; and when "a statute limits a thing to be done in a particular form, it includes in itself a negation, viz: that it shall not be done otherwise." Plowd. 206*b*. Also, in Bazzi vs. Rose & Child, cited in Wheeler on Slavery, 307, and Mary vs. Morris, Wheeler, 311. If, then, the deed is not such a deed as is required and con-447 templated by the act, the affirmative of the propositions of appellants necessarily results.

II. The act of 1829 prescribes the manner in which slaves brought into the States after its passage, may be manumitted, and imposes a penalty for a violation of its provisions. If a statute inflicts a penalty for doing an act, the penalty implies a prohibition, and the act is unlawful. 1 Kent, 467. 5 Barn. & Ald. 335. Dwarris on Statutes, 667-680.

This deed, not having been executed in terms of the act, is void, and nothing was granted by it: the title to the negroes remained in Jacob Bryan, the grantor, until the State enforced her rights under the statute. The State having released this right to the heirs of Bryan, the title, upon his death, vested in claimants.

III. The act of 1829 applies to the descendants of such as are brought into the State after its passage, as well as to the ancestors so brought in. Partus sequitus ventrem obtains. Butler & Boarman, Wheeler 21. Timms & Potter, Wheeler 24. The rule of the civil law, Wood's Civil Law, 114, is of force in this State.

IV. The policy of the State is against manumission, and requires a strict enforcement of this act, and embraces alike within its provisions the issue as well as the ancestor.

That the policy of the State is to prohibit emancipation, and the consequent increase of a free negro population, is evidenced by the Constitution and several acts of the General Assembly. In the act of 1829, "prescribing the terms of manumission in certain cases;" the act of 10th February, 1832, Thomp. Dig. 534, "prohibiting the migration of free persons of color into the State;" and again in the 16th Article of the Constitution, Section 1st, the State has declared her will. She has there clearly indicated and prescribed such to be her policy, and it is unquestionably the duty of this court to determine and carry into effect that 448 policy by its judgment. And this court will, in giving a construction to the act of 1829, consider its policy, and give it such an interpretation as may appear best calculated to advance its object by effectuating the design of the Legislature.

Livingston, with whom also was Frazier, for appellees, contended that the judgment of the court below, refusing the order for the sale of Dennis and Mary, and declaring them free, was a proper one for the reasons—

I. That they were duly emancipated by their former master, Jacob Bryan, deceased, by deed dated 25th November, 1842, which was recorded on the same day, according to law.

II. If this act of manumission was contrary to the provisions of the act of 1829, it only created a forfeiture to the State of Florida, who could proceed against them in a manner prescribed by the statute, but which right or remedy cannot be assigned or released to the present parties, to enable them to proceed as they have attempted in this suit.

The act of 1850, (Pamphlet Laws, 174,) confers no right or interest on the petitioners, because the only word of conveyance used in said act is release, which is a technical term, and has a well known and certain definite meaning at common law.

If terms of art are used in this statute, they are to be taken in their technical sense; and if a statute make use of a word, the meaning of which is well understood, and has a certain definite sense at common law, the word shall be expounded and received in the same sense, in which it is understood at common law. See Dwarris on Statutes, 44, 48. 1 Kent Com. 465.

449 The State of Florida could make no release of property in the defendants to the petitioners, because—

I. The petitioners were not in possession, nor had any kind of interest or estate in said negroes or mulattoes at the time of the release. See 4 Cruise Dig. 84, 85, 86, 88. Bouvier Law Dictionary, Title Release, and Tomlin's Law Dictionary, Title Release.

II. Because there was no privity between the releasor and the releasee. See 4 Cruise Dig. 87, 89, 90, and Tomlin's Law Dictionary, Title Release.

This statute transfers no right of action to the petitioners, because the right of the State is a mere "chose in action," which is not transferrable by release, and can only be released to the persons against whom the remedy existed. 4 Cruise Dig. 88. Tomlin, Title Release.

The act of 1829, entitled, "An Act to prevent the manumission of slaves, in certain cases, in this State," is a penal statute, and should be construed liberally in favor of defendants, and strictly against them. See Daggett vs. the State, 8 Wheeler's Am. Com. Law, 139. Rex. vs. Powell, 4 T. Rep. 472. Dwarris on Statutes, 736, 737, 749, 770.

This statute is an innovation upon the common law, and must be construed strictly, and not extended further than the case absolutely requires. See Dwarris on Statutes, 685, 729; 1 P. Williams R. 252, and 1 Kent's Com. 464.

Jacob Bryan, deceased, had a right of common law, to emancipate defendants. Wheeler on Slavery, 297, 301.

The act of 1829 is merely directory, and not mandatory, and the authorities of the State may proceed against persons manumitted under it, or not, at their discretion.

The defendants, Dennis and Mary, were born in the State of Florida, and not having been brought into the State since the passage of the act of 1829, are not subject to the penalties imposed by the act.

450 The act of 1829 was repealed by the 9th section of an act entitled, "An act to prevent the future migration of free negroes or mulattoes in this Territory, and for other purposes," approved 5th March, 1842, and was not in form at the time of the making of this deed of manumission. See pamphlet Laws 1842, p. 34.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The proceedings in this cause, somewhat informal and novel in their character, were commenced by petition in Chancery, before the Judge of the Circuit Court of Duval county for the recovery of certain negroes, alleged to have been the property of one Jacob Bryan, in his heirs at law.

Under the prayer of the petition, process was issued by the court below against these negroes, and three of them, Dennis, Mary and Sarah, the defendants in this proceeding, were taken into custody by the Sheriff of the county. These defendants afterwards appeared, by counsel, and filed to said petition their plea, and upon the issue of liber vel non, the cause was set for hearing. At the December term, 1851, of said court, a jury being waived, the case was submitted to the Judge, who thereupon decreed that the said Dennis and Mary were free and entitled to their discharge, and that the said Sarah was a slave, and as such to be sold, and the proceeds deposited in the registry of the court. From that portion of the decree liberating Dennis and Mary, an appeal was taken to this court.

The facts of the case, so far as they are material to the present investigation, are the following: In the month of January, 1830, Jacob Bryan, a resident of the State of Georgia, removed to Florida, bringing with him certain negro slaves, among whom were Sarah and Susan, the mother of Dennis and Mary, who were subsequently born in this State.

On the 25th of November, 1842, Jacob Bryan executed 451 an instrument in writing, purporting to be a deed of manumission, which, by its terms, emancipated and set free the defendants, by name, as well as other negroes mentioned, in said petition. It is in proof that Bryan never gave bond, as required by law, for the transportation of these negroes beyond the limits of Florida, and that they continued to reside here until after the death of Bryan, which took place in 1847, he dying intestate.

The main question arising under the issue upon these facts is, whether the deed of manumission, by virtue of which these negroes claim their freedom, is valid under the laws of this State?

The act of the Legislature upon the subject of manumitting slaves, passed November, 1829, declares that any person who shall manumit any slaves brought into this State (Territory) after the passage of the act, shall forfeit and pay for every slave so manumitted the sum of two hundred dollars, and that any person bringing into the State any slaves after the passage of this act, and wishing to manumit them, such person, before he grants such manumission, shall give bond, with two or more securities, in a sum equal to the value of such slaves, to be approved by the Judge of Probate, conditioned for the transportation of such slaves beyond the jurisdiction of said State, within thirty days after such manumission. It is further declared by the statute, that any slave manumitted contrary to its provisions, "shall not be deemed free," but shall be liable to be taken up, under an order of the Circuit Court, and sold by the Sheriff at public sale, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the State. No proceedings were ever taken under this statute against these negroes, in behalf of the State; but on the contrary, the Legislature, in 1850, passed a special act for the relief of the appellants, as the heirs of Jacob Bryan, releasing to them all the right, title 452 and interest of the State of Florida in and to said negro slaves.

It is insisted by counsel for defendants that the act of 1829, above referred to, was not in force at the time the deed of manumission was executed, being repealed by the latter clause of the act of 1842, and that consequently the said Bryan had, as at common law, the unrestricted right of manumitting slaves. Whatever may have been the effect of a repeal of this statute upon the common law right of a master in this State to free his slave, it is unnecessary for us to determine. It is a sufficient answer to the position taken by counsel to say, that the repealing section of the act of 1842 is restricted to laws in relation to "free negroes and free mulattoes;" the act of 1829 is in reference to slaves. True, it provides for their manumission, upon certain conditions, but this does not bring it within either the spirit or letter of the repealing clause, because it is manifest that before the slave can become a "free negro," and consequently be embraced within the terms of the repealing act, the conditions to his freedom imposed by the act of 1829, must be fully complied with. The act of 1842 was designed to amend the law, as it then stood, in relation to the migration of "free negroes and free mulattoes" to the Territory, and hence the propriety of the repealing clause in reference to laws on the same subject. A fair construction of the act of 1842 would not exend its operation beyond this.

It is further contended by counsel that two of these negroes (Dennis and Mary) having been born in this State, are not comprehended in the statute, although they are the descendants of slave Susan, who was brought into the Territory in 1830. This construction of the act, however plausible it may be considered, cannot be sustained. That Heirs of Bryan vs. Dennis, et al.—Opinion of Court.

453 these two negroes are not within the letter of the law, is conceded, but non constat, they are not within its policy and spirit. By reference to the well settled rules of law in the construction of statutes, and in view of the policy of this State in regard to the manumission of slaves, it will become manifest that the interpretation we have given this act is sound and legitimate. In the construction of a statute, all laws in pari materia should be considered in order to ascertain the will of the Legislature; for that which is within the intention of the makers of the law, is as much within the statute as if in the letter; and the intention of the Legislature may often be collected from the cause of necessity of enacting the law.

Hence the proposition is indisputable, that a statute often times comprehends within its spirit a case not within its letter, because it is within the mischief for which a remedy is provided. And to the same effect, whatever is within the equity of a statute should be considered a part of it, though to effect this it may become necessary to enlarge or restrain particular words. It is held by all legal writers that laws which have reference to the public welfare, or the policy of a State, should be construed liberally, and with a view to carry out, as far as practicable, the design of the law; and although the natural import of the words used in a statute is to be considered as expressing the intention of the Legislature, yet where such import is repugnant to the principles of national policy, it is the duty of the court to enlarge or restrain the words, by such construction as will repress the mischief and advance the remedy. See 7 Mass. Rep., 523.

As to the policy of this State in reference to free negroes, it is well defined and well settled. From her early history as a Territory, she has been opposed to the settlement of this class of persons within her borders, and as a conse-
454 quence, to the unrestricted right of her citizens to manumit their slaves. The repeated action of the Legislature in reference to this subject, is a sufficient indication of public sentiment and the policy of the State. The conviction upon the public mind is settled and unalterable as to the evil necessarily attendant upon this class of population, and although treated by our laws humanely, they have ever been regarded with a distrust bordering on apprehension—a class of people who are neither freemen nor slaves, their presence at all times deleterious and often dangerous to the public welfare. In 1832, the Legislature of the then Territory were compelled to enact the most stringent laws to arrest the evil, by prohibiting the further migration of free negroes within her limits; and the emphatic language of the Constitution of the State, depriving the Legislature of the power of passing laws for the manumission of slaves, was but carrying out the principles of that policy settled upon by the previous Legislation of the country. By the act of 1829, the Territorial Legislature, in giving the right to emancipate slaves, provided at the same time a remedy for the evil necessarily growing out of an unrestricted exercise of the right, by compelling the owner forthwith to transport them beyond the limits of the State. If we construe this law so as to restrict its application to slaves brought into the State, and not include their descendants within its provisions, we at once lose sight of the whole policy of the law, and entail upon the State an evil of the most dangerous character, and which it is manifest it was the design of the Legislature to suppress.

The act of 1829 being, in our opinion, in force at the time the deed of manumission was executed, and its provisions embracing all the negroes mentioned in said petition, was the [illegible] manumission contemplated by the grantor consummated by the deed? Or had the deed at its execution any vitality? It is not pretended that the 455 grantor ever gave bond, as required by the first section of the act. The bond is a condition precedent to the act of manumission, and without it the deed has no legal existence, and consequently is inoperative in vesting in the contemplated beneficiaries any rights whatsoever.

But it is said that though the State may have claimed a forfeiture of this property, yet the deed is good as against the grantor and his heirs, and that the latter are estopped, by the act of their ancestor, from asserting any property in these slaves. The law is otherwise. The deed, upon its execution, was absolutely void, for all purposes—a mere gratuity, made in contravention of law, and imposing no disabilities on the grantor over this property, further than it remained in possession, liable to the claim of the State. Though the statute contains no prohibitory clause, yet it inflicts a penalty, and every contract having the subject matter for its consideration or object, is invalid. 4 Serg. & R., 159. Formerly it was held that unless the statute contained a prohibitory clause, the contract was not void. But in the more recent case of Bartlett vs. Vinor, Holt, C. J., held, that every contract made for or about any matter or thing which is prohibited and made unlawful by any statute, is a void contract, though the statute itself does not mention it shall be so, but only inflicts a penalty; because a penalty implies a prohibition, though there are no prohibitory words in the statute. And such is the law as recognized both by the English and American Courts. See 1 Binn., 118, 4 Dall., 269, 10 Bing., 107, 5 B & Ald., 335.

Independent of this, the statute itself expressly declares that all slaves manumitted contrary to its provisions, shall not be deemed free—terms emphatic and comprehensive enough to dispel all doubts as to the condition of these negroes. The deed being void, the title to the slaves remain- 456 ed unaffected. It continued in Bryan during his life, and descended to his heirs on his death. The title did not, as contended by counsel, at any time vest in the State, but remained undisturbed in Bryan, subject to be divested by the State upon seizure and sale.

It is true, on the execution of the deed, the State had an inchoate right to the property, under the statute, to be consummated or relinquished at her pleasure. The act of 1850, is a full relinquishment and renunciation of this right, in favor of the heirs of Bryan. A general release or relinquishment, upon the part of the State, of her claim, would have enured to the benefit of these heirs, the title being in them.

Before the passage of this act for their relief, the appellants had the right to reduce this property to possession, and since its passage, their right of possession and right of property is paramount and complete. And we do not understand the necessity that existed of instituting the proceedings in this case in their behalf, or of invoking in any way the action of the Circuit Court in asserting their rights over this property.

SUPREME COURT

TERM AT TAMPA.

SOUTHERN DIVISION.

THOMAS P. KENNEDY, APPELLANT, VS. THOMAS MITCHELL, APPELLEE.

A defendant in attachment, under the statute of this State, has at all times, up to the trial of the suit upon its merits, the right to traverse the allegations in the plaintiff's affidavit, either as to the debt or the cause of suing out the attachment. This right is available to the defendant as well after as before plea to the action.

But if the motion to dissolve be made after the defendant has appeared and pleaded to the action, the plaintiff amy still proceed in his suit, and prosecute his claim to final judgment, though the attachment may be dissolved —otherwise, if the attachment is dissolved before plea to the motion. In the latter case, the suit abates.

The proviso in the seventh section of the act of 1834, (Art. 5, Thomp. Dig., 370,) which requires motions to dissolve attachments to be made at or before the first term of the court, &c., has reference only to causes pending at the time of the passage of the act.

The nature of the case and the questions involved are stated in the opinion of the court.

Gettis and Pearson for Appellant.

Magbee for Appellee.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

This suit was commenced by attachment in the Circuit Court for the county of Hillsborough, by the appellant, Thomas P. Kennedy, against Thomas Mitchell, the respondent.

The writ of attachment was sued out on the 26th of March, 1851, and made returnable to the following Spring 458 term of said court. The Sheriff returned the writ as executed, by levying on certain property, and reading the same to the defendant in attachment. The plaintiff afterwards filed his declaration, in accordance with the statute, on the first day of the appearance term.

On the 4th of September following, the defendant filed his affidavit traversing the special cause assigned by plaintiff for suing out said attachment, and entered his motion for a dissolution of the same, a notice of which was duly served on the opposite counsel.

Afterwards, at the Fall term of said court, the plaintiff moved for a judgment by default, for want of a plea to the action; which was overruled, and the issue raised by the defendant's affidavit was then tried by a jury, and upon their finding, the said attachment was dissolved, and the suit abated and was dismissed.

The questions presented for our consideration, under the assignment of errors on the appeal taken in this case, are, whether the court below committed error in overruling the plaintiff's motion for a judgment by default, and in dismissing said suit?

It is contended by counsel for appellant that the reading of the writ of attachment, by the Sheriff, to the defendant, was a sufficient notice to the latter of the institution of the suit, and consequently that the court below erred in determining that the defendant was not legally in court, so that a judgment by default could be rendered against him. Whether there be error in the judgment of the court below or not, as to the sufficiency of this notice, is altogether immaterial to the decision of this case; for the judgment of the court in dismissing the suit, upon the finding of the jury, is in no wise affected, whether the defendant was legally served with notice of the suit, or voluntarily appeared for the purpose of moving a dissolution of the at-459 tachment. A defendant in attachment, under our statute, has at all times, up to the trial of the suit upon its merits, the right to traverse the allegations in the plaintiff's affidavit, either as to the debt demanded, or as to the special cause assigned for suing out the attachment; and for the purpose of securing this right, and rendering it at all times an effectual remedy, the courts are, by express provision of the statute, declared to be always open for hearing and determining motions for the dissolution of attachments. Thompson's Digest, 369, § 3 Art. 3. This right is available to the defendant as well after as before plea to the action, though its effect upon the suit is different; for where the attachment is dissolved before the plea to the action, the suit abates and must be dismissed, but if the motion to dissolve be made after the defendant has appeared and pleaded to the action, the attachment alone is dissolved, and the plaintiff may still proceed in his suit and prosecute his debt or demand to final judgment. Ibid. 370, Art. 5. It is insisted, however, by counsel, that under the proviso to this section of the act, the motion to dissolve the attachment must be made at or before the first term of the court to which suit is brought, in order that a dissolution of the attachment shall operate as an abatement of the suit, and authorize the court in dismissing it. We are of a different opinion. It is very manifest that the proviso refers to the latter clause of the 5th art. of the act, having reference to causes then pending, and restricts the motion to dissolve not only to such causes, but to the first term of the court after the passage of the law; whereas, the first clause of the same article, providing for the dissolution of attachments before and after plea to the action, has reference exclusively to suits "thereafter to be commenced."

To give this statute a different construction, would be at variance with its letter and spirit, and render its provisions inconsistent and contradictory; and however much it 460 is to be regretted that this special legislation in reference to causes then pending before the courts, should have been resorted to, yet it is not the province of this court to extend the operation of the act to causes not contemplated by the Legislature.

In the case before us, there was no plea to the action, but the motion of the defendant for a dissolution of the attachment, based upon his affidavit, under the statute, did operate and was in effect a plea in abatement to the suit, and as such suspended any rights the plaintiff may have under his motion. We are of opinion, therefore, that the court below committed no error in overruling the plaintiff's motion, and in dismissing the suit upon the verdict of the jury finding the issue in favor of the defendant.

Per Curiam—Let the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

ARTHUR H. MORSE, APPELLANT, VS. ISAAC GARRISON, APPELLEE.

The prohibition contained in the 4th section of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to provide for the Armed Occupation and Settlement of the unsettled part of the Peninsula of East Florida," approved August 4th, 1842, has reference only to contracts for the alienation of the land made before its issuing of the patent; and was not intended to protect the land after patent issued, from other contracts or debts of the occupant to the satisfaction and payment of which, lands are subjected by the laws of this State.

Any attempt by Congress to give such protection after the title had passed from the United States, would have been abortive and nugatory.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the Southern Circuit sitting in and for the County of Hernando, Hon. Joseph B. Lancaster, Judge.

Morse vs. Garrison.—Opinion of Court.

461 The opinion of the court contains a full and clear statement of the facts and of the principles involved in the case.

Pearson for Appellant.

No counsel for Appellee.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case arose on a motion to dismiss a levy under a judgment in favor of the appellant, "upon the ground that "the land levied on was donation land, and that the pa- "tent therefor issued on a day subsequent to the day of "the date of the judgment on which the execution was is- "sued under which the levy was made." The facts made apparent to the court upon the hearing of the motion, were as follows: At the April term, 1847, of the Circuit Court for Hernando, then Benton county, the appellant, Morse, recovered judgment of Garrason, the appellee, for the sum of $103 12, with costs. Execution issued on the judgment on the 1st day of May, 1847, and was received by the officer on the same day. The sheriff levied this execution on the land in question on the 19th day of March, 1851. The land thus levied on was a quarter section of land which had been patented to the defendant, Garrason, by the President of the United States in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the Armed Occupation and Settle- "ment of the unsettled part of the Peninsula of East Flo- "rida," approved August 4th, 1842. The patent to Garrason bore date the — day of August, 1849.

Upon a consideration of these facts and the law of the case, his Honor, Judge Lancaster, pronounced the following judgment upon the motion to dismiss the levy:

"It is considered and adjudged by the court, that the 462 "said judgment and execution, or either of them, consti- "tute no lien upon the lands contained in said quarter sec- "tion, and that the levy of the said execution thereon is "illegal: It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the "court that the said levy be dismissed."

By a written agreement between the attorney for the plaintiff and the defendant in person, the case is submitted to this court as an appeal from the judgment of the court below on the motion to dismiss the levy. We regard the judgment of his honor as erroneous on two grounds: first, that the act of Congress does not attempt to protect the land in question, after the issuance of the patent, from a liability for debts other than such as might be incurred on contracts for the alienation of the land; and secondly, that such an attempt, if made, would have been abortive and nugatory. The 4th section of the act is the portion of it to which his Honor had reference in the judgment pronounced by him. It is in these words: "All sales, gifts, "devises, agreements, bonds or powers to sell, transfers or "liens whatsoever, private or judicial, of the lands, or any "portion thereof, acquired by this act, made at any time "before patents shall have issued for the same, shall be "utterly void and without effect to every intent and pur- "pose, whether in law or equity; and the purchaser or "obligee under any such sale, agreement, bond or power "to sell, transfer or lien, shall not be entitled to recover "back the price or consideration paid therefor, but shall "forfeit the same absolutely to such settler or his heirs."

It was one obvious intent of this provision of the act to prevent the occupants from being disturbed in the occupancy and enjoyment of their land until their title to it should be perfected by the patent. This undisturbed possession was necessary to carry out the desire of the United States Government of filling up, with a resident population, the frontier settlements exposed to danger from the 463 presence of hostile Indians, who had been permitted to remain in Florida.

The possession of the land was, therefore, assured to them for five years until, by the issuance of a patent, they might be in a situation to receive the full value of the property, if they then chose to sell, or if the laws of the land should then subject the property to the satisfaction of their judgment debts.

It was also a further object of this section to protect the settler from the consequences of improvident contracts, made while his title was yet incomplete, and when, perhaps, his necessities, in a new and exposed country, might be pressing.

With this view, all sales or alienations, under whatever guise, whether private or judicial, before the issuance of the patent, are prohibited and made void, and without effect, and the party dealing with the occupant is subjected to the penalty of forfeiting the consideration he may have paid. This last provision satisfies us as to the meaning and intent of the terms, "liens, whether private or judicial," which seems to have led the court below into error. It was clearly intended that the prohibition of sales and other alienations of the inchoate title should not be evaded by a collusive judgment and execution obtained in a court of law; and if it had appeared to this court that the judgment now before us, were of this collusive character, we would feel bound to give effect to the salutary guard thrown around the occupant to shield him from oppression, and to pronounce the judgment void and without effect.

There is no evidence or even allegation of any collusion in this case. The judgment must be taken to have been fairly obtained, upon a bona fide debt justly due to the plaintiff by the defendant, on some other contract than for the sale of the land, and being such, it does not come with- 464 in the reason of the provisions contained in the fourth section of the Armed Occupation Act. As this judgment is not, then, within the prohibition of the act, the general law of the State of Florida gives to the judgment creditor the right to satisfy his judgment out of the real estate of the defendant. Act Feb. 12, 1834, § 1; and the lien of the judgment attached upon after acquired property from the date of the acquisition.

To this conclusion the court have come, upon the consideration of the act of August 4th, 1842. Such we deem to be a fair construction of the meaning of Congress in the prohibitions embraced in the fourth section; but as we have already intimated, we should be constrained to regard the prohibition as abortive and nugatory if the intention had been, as understood by his Honor below, to have placed the patented land beyond the reach of all pre-existing creditors, no matter what might be the nature of the claim, or how distinct it might be from any contract for the land itself. While the Government of the United States retained the title in itself, it might properly impose prohibitions upon the prospective alienation of the title by the armed occupant before he received it from that Government, and all contracts in relation to it may properly be declared void, but it would be a very different thing for that Government to convey a complete and perfect title to lands in this State, and at the same time to assume to exempt such lands from the operation of the general laws of this State regulating the collection of debts, or the alienation of property.

If this might be done in favor of the armed occupant, it might be done in favor of all purchasers of the national domain, and a privileged class be thus created, entitled to exemptions denied to other citizens. The same principle 465 would imply the right of congress to exempt the lands sold by the United States from taxation, and thus to exempt their occupants from contributing to the support of the State Government.

We conclude, then, that the prohibition contained in the fourth section of the Armed Occupation Act, has reference only to contracts for the alienation of the land, made before the issuing of the patent, and was not intended to protect the land after patent issued from other contracts or debts of the occupant, and since the judgment now under consideration by us is not of the former class, it does not come within the prohibition, and should be satisfied, as in other cases, out of the property of the defendant.

The judgment of the court below dismissing the levy must be reversed, and the levy re-instated, with directions to the proper officer to proceed therewith according to law.

WILLIAM SANDERS, APPELLANT, VS. MARSHAL PEPOON AND ROBERT OLCOTT, APPELLEES.

The act of 1846, Ch. 81 §1, Thomp. Dig. 342, refers only to such instruments as are duly proved before the recording officer, or some judicial officer, and recorded in compliance with law.

An acknowledgement by one of two grantors or bargainors of the execution of an instrument required by law to be recorded, is not sufficient to entitle it to be recorded, and if recorded informally, it is not entitled to be regarded or treated as a registered instrument; nor will the fact that the grantors or bargainors were partners in trade make any difference.

By the law of this State, no mortgage of personal property shall be effectual or valid to any purpose, unless the mortgaged property be delivered within twenty days to the mortgagee, and shall in good faith remain in his pos-466 session, or unless the mortgage be recorded in the County in which the mortgaged property is at the time of the execution of the mortgage. The transfer of the possession is actual notice, and the registration of the mortgage constructive notice of the transaction.

Where the latter is resorted to, the forms and requirements of the registration act must be strictly pursued.

An absolute bill of sale of personal property need not be recorded, and therefore, when such an instrument is recorded, even though it may be proved with all the forms and solemnities required by law, in the case of conveyances of real estate, yet, if the possession continues with the bargainor, the conveyance is inoperative and void, as against creditors and subsequent purchasers.

This was an action of assumpsit for money had and received, brought by the appellees in the Circuit Court of Monroe County against the appellant. The suit was instituted to recover from the defendant, in the court below, the amount of a note made and executed by one John H. Geiger in favor of Ashley & Hovey, merchants at Key West, and endorsed by them to said defendant. The claim of the plaintiffs was based on a mortgage, the nature and character of which are fully set out in the opinion of the court. The mortgage or instrument upon which the claim was founded, bore date July 7, 1848, and purported to be a deed of conveyance of goods, wares, merchandise, notes, &c., belonging to the said Ashley & Hovey, including debts to become due, until a note for $800, alleged to have been executed by them in favor of the plaintiffs below, should be paid. In the year 1849, John H. Geiger executed the note in question, payable to Ashley & Hovey, the maker, some time in 1849 or 1850.

The question was as to the right of the appellees to recover, under their alleged mortgage, the amount of the note so paid to appellant.

King for appellant.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the 467 Court.

The respondents, who were plaintiffs in the court below, founded their right to recover in this case upon an instrument of writing which is called a mortgage. This instrument bears date on the 7th July, 1848, and was recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Monroe county, on the 17th January, 1849, upon the acknowledgement of one of the alleged mortgagors only. It is executed by Sydney J. Ashley and James B. Hovey, who are described as partners in trade at Key West, under the style and firm of Ashley & Hovey, and professes, n consideration of the sum of eight hundred dollars to them in hand well and truly paid by the respondents, to bargain, sell and convey to the said respondents, their executors, administrators and assigns, "all the goods, wares "and merchandise in the schedule marked A., and all other "goods of every description in our store or place of business "at Key West, together with the book debts in said schedu-"ule named, and all book debts, notes and accounts due "and owing to us, and we do also grant and convey to the "said parties aforesaid, all goods, wares, merchandise and "property which shall at any time be contained in our "said store, and all debts and accounts which shall accrue "to us, until the said money shall be re-paid to the said "parties, and do authorize and empower the said parties "themselves, or their agents, at any time to take possession "of the books belonging to the said firm, for the purpose "of collecting the said debts, and to collect the same for their "benefit, as well as to take possession of the other proper-"ty in said store."

The habendum of the conveyance or instrument, conveys the premises to the respondents, their executors, administrators and assigns forever.

There is no clause of defeasance, nor indeed any evi- 468 dence whatever that the instrument, which is absolute in its terms, was intended as a mortgage, unless it may be collected from the clause in the premises above recited, which states as among the rights and interests intended to be conveyed the "future acquisition of goods, wares and "merchandise, and the subsequent accrual of debts and "accounts to the grantors until the said money shall be re-"paid to the said parties."

The schedule which is referred to in the bill of sale, is scarcely more definite than the description of the property intended to be conveyed, as it is set forth in the premises of the instrument. It is as follows, viz:

"SCHEDULE A., referred to in the annexed bill of sale:

"Groceries to the value of . . .	$400 00
"Hats and Caps, value, . . .	50 00
"Stationery, value, . . .	50 00
"Dry Goods, value, . . .	200 00
"Clothing, value, . . .	200 00
"Book accounts, about, . . .	500 00
"Goods shipped on board the brig Na-"poleon, destined for our store at Key "West, ...	252 80"

It would seem from the evidence that Ashley & Hovey continued their business from the date of the bill of sale as they had before done, up to the close of the year 1849, when they finally closed their store, and that during this time one John H. Geiger became indebted to them for supplies furnished his vessels, and settled by giving his three notes, one of which for the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, at six months date, by the acknowledgment of the appellant, was transferred to him by said Ashley & Hovey, in payment for a bill of goods which they had Sanders vs. Pepoon and Olcott.—Opinion of Court.

469 bought of him; and it was further proved that the note so transferred had been paid by Geiger to the appellant.

Upon the trial, various exceptions were taken to the ruling of the judge upon the admission of testimony, as well as the refusal to instruct the jury, as prayed for by the appellant, and to the instructions actually given.

The bill of sale or mortgage, as it is termed in the bill of exceptions, was offered in evidence, without other proof of its execution, than the acknowledgment made before the recording officer by Ashly, one of the grantors, and it was admitted by the court against the objection of the appellant. The rule of the common law is perfectly clear that every species of writing, as well as deeds, when offered as evidence, must be proved by the subscribing witnesses, if there be any; or at least by one of them; (1 Greenl. on Ev. 569,) but the application of the act of 1846, Ch. 81, section 1, Thomp. Dig. 343, is by no means free from difficulty. The statute gives to certified copies of any instrument of writing required, or authorized by law to be filed or recorded in any public office of the State the same force and effect as evidence, in all cases and in all courts and places as the original has, providing however that the court or judge may, when the same shall be deemed necessary for the attainment of justice, require the party to produce or account for the absence of the original; and it would seem very like an absurdity to make a certified copy from the records of an instrument of writing evidence without other proof of execution than the acknowledgment made preparatory to its registration, while it would deny the same effect to the original instrument, with the original certificate of the recording officer of the proof or acknowledgement thereof attached thereto. But we do not express any opinion as to the extent to which a correct interpretation of this statute would lead, as there is some di-470 versity of opinion in the court upon the point, and because we all agree that the statute, whether it is to be confined to its letter or should be extended to all cases which may fall within its reason and spirit, can, and does only, refer to such instruments as are duly proved before the recording officer, or some judicial officer, and recorded in compliance with law.

Instruments of writing providing for the transfer of personal property, before being admitted to record, are required to be proved before the recording officer, or some judicial officer of the State, in the same manner as is prescribed for conveyance of real estate, with the exception that where there is no subscribing witness, the handwriting of the mortgagor or bargainor may be proved by witnesses. Thomp. Dig. 183. To this instrument of writing, there is a subscribing witness, and therefore by the 4th section of the act of 1828, (Thomp. Dig. 180,) proof of the execution should have been made by the acknowledgment of the parties executing the same, or by the oath of the subscribing witness. One of the parties only appeared before the Clerk of the Circuit Court, and made the acknowledgment; it was not competent for him to acknowledge for the other grantor or bargainor, although the relation of partners in trade subsisted between them, and the instrument therefore was not only not proved so as to entitle it to record, or being recorded informally, to the character and effect of a registered instrument. We are very clearly of opinion that the act of 1846 did not apply; and it was error in the court below to admit the instrument in evidence without common law proof of its execution.

Having ascertained the commission of this error by the court below in the progress of the trial of this cause, we might pause here and pronounce a judgment of reversal, but as we view the infirmity of the case upon the merits too manifest to warrant an award of a venire facias de 471 novo, we proceed to its further consideration.

The instrument of writing seems to have been treated and considered in the court below as a mortgage, although, as we have before remarked, the instrument ex facie is an absolute conveyance, containing no recital of a debt due, save the very vague expression before quoted, that the instrument was to operate on the future acquisitions of goods and merchandise and the future accrual of debts, &c., "until the said money shall be repaid," when there is no previous mention made of any money due, or loaned, and containing no clause of defeasance. We find no parol evidence in the record giving to the instrument the character of a conditional conveyance or mortgage, or connecting with it the note of Ashley & Hovey to the respondents for eight hundred dollars, bearing date the 6th day of July, 1848, which was offered in evidence in the court below, and which from all we can see was wholly irrelevant.

But whether the instrument be regarded as a mortgage or as an absolute bill of sale, the infirmity of the case of the plaintiff below is equally apparent. Viewed as a mortgage, it is inoperative for want of the record provided by the 5th section of the act of November 15, 1828, (Thomp. Dig. 183,) as necessary to its validity.

We have seen that the acknowledgment of the execution of the instrument being by one grantor only, it was not duly proved for record; and although transcribed upon the record books of the County of Monroe, such act of transcribing did not give to it the force and effect of a record in contemplation of the statute.

The act of the Legislature declares that no mortgage of personal property shall be effectual or valid to any purpose whatever, unless the mortgage property be delivered within twenty days to the mortgagee, and shall remain 472 thereafter in good faith in his possession, or unless the mortgage be recorded in the county in which the mortgaged property shall be at the time of the execution of the conveyance. The object of the statute is that notice of such a transfer shall be given, in order to prevent frauds and injury to the community. Possession of personalty is indicative of ownership, and the change of the possession from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and its continuance in the control of the latter, would give to the transaction such notoriety as would amount to actual notice. When, however, the possession remain with the mortgagor, and the alternative of registration is resorted to, the notice is but constructive, and the courts have ever held that, to make such constructive notice effectual, the forms and requirements of the registration acts must be strictly pursued. It is never extended to all deeds and conveyances which may be registered, but to such only as are authorized and required by law to be recorded, and are duly registered in compliance with law.

Considering the instrument as an absolute bill of sale, it was not required by law to be recorded, and therefore the registration was a vain and futile act: it was not constructive notice of its existence, even if its execution had been proved with all the forms and solemnities required by law for the proof of execution of conveyances of real estate; and the possession continuing with the bargainors, the conveyance was inoperative and void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers, as we have heretofore ruled in Gibson vs. Love, 4 Fla. R. 217. According to the testimony, the appellant acquired the promissory note in question in payment for a bill of goods which he had sold to Ashley & Hovey. Now whether the transfer of the note was simultaneous with the delivery of the goods, and might be considered as a purchase of the promissory note with the goods so delivered, or the note was received by the appellant in discharge of a precedent debt due him for goods sold and delivered to the said parties, is equally immaterial, for as to either character of subsequent purchaser for value or creditor, the conveyance was null and void, because the possession of Ashley and Hovey was inconsistent with the conveyance.

These considerations show most clearly that the respondents, by the conveyance exhibited, acquired no right to, or lien upon, the promissory note in question, or the debt which it was given in liquidation of, and therefore the respondents were not entitled to recover; and the court below should have so ruled. We do not deem it necessary to examine particularly the propriety of the refusal by the court below to give to the jury the instructions prayed by the appellant, or those which the court did give, as the view we have taken covers the whole merits of the case.

Some considerations have suggested themselves to us springing out of the form of the conveyance, and the vague and uncertain description of the property in esse intended to be conveyed, as well as to its peculiar and transitory character; and also the propriety of giving effect to transfers and mortgages of property, and of rights or things in action subsequently to be acquired by the mortgagor, but as the examination of the points is not necessary to a disposition of the cause. we forbear to notice them.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, with costs; and inasmuch as it appears by the record. that the amount of the judgment and costs has been paid by the appellant, let a writ of restitution of the amount so paid issue from this court, upon the application of the appellant or his counsel.

SUPREME COURT

TERM AT MARIANNA.

WESTERN DIVISION.

REUBEN KENT, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, vs. R. F. LYON, GUARDIAN OF A. M. LOTT, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

Where a man makes a deed of gift of slaves or other property which as against creditors is conceded to be void, and dies in possession of the property granted, it is assets in the hands of his administrator, and the deed of gift, in reference to the creditors, is to be considered as if it had never been made.

If the fraudulent donee has gone into possession of the property in the life time of the donor, he is not liable to the donor's representative either for the property or its value, but is responsible to the creditors for the value.

Error to the Circuit Court for Jackson county.

A sufficient statement of the case will be found in the opinion of the court.

Yonge for Plaintiff in Error.

Campbell for Defendant in Error.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

This was a case of a claim interposed under the statute, by the defendant in error, to a negro slave called Jenny, who had been levied on to satisfy an execution in favor of the plaintiff in error against George R. Williams, administrator of Jesse Lott, deceased. The cause was tried at the Fall Term, 1850, of the Circuit Court for Jackson county.

The slave was in the possession of Lott at the time of his 475 death, and passed with other personal property into the hands of Williams, the administrator, and passed from him to the possession of the Sheriff.

At the trial of the claim, the claimant relied upon a deed executed by Jesse Lott in his life time, by which he had conveyed to A. M. Lott, his daughter, the negro in question, and also upon a judgment which the claimant, in behalf of his ward, had obtained in trover against Williams for the value of the same slave.

The deed from Lott to his daughter seems to have been conceded on all hands to have been fraudulent as to creditors. At all events there is sufficient evidence on the record to show it was so. But the defendant in error alleging that it was good between the parties to it, and their representatives, contended that therefore the property was not assets in the hands of the administrator, and as a consequence not liable to satisfy the execution.

His Honor in the court below sustained this position of the defendant in error, and charged the jury as follows :—"If you are of opinion that Jenny is embraced in the deed "executed by Jesse Lott to his daughter, and is the one "upon whom the execution in this case is levied, you will "find her not subject to the execution." A verdict was rendered for the claimant, in accordance with this instruction.

The plaintiff in error excepted to the charge, and the case is thus presented to our consideration, involving this inquiry: If a donor, after having made a conveyance of his personal property, which is fraudulent as to his creditors, dies in possession of the property, and it goes into the hands of his administrator, is it assets for the payment of his debts ?

There is some apparent conflict among the authorities upon this question, but we think they are easily reconciled by adverting to the principles of law which regulate 476 and adjust the respective rights of the parties to this suit, and of the administrator of Jesse Lott.

Our statute of January 28th, 1823, which is a re-enactment of the statute of the 13th Elizabeth, provides, that all conveyances executed with intent to delay and defraud creditors, shall be "deemed, held and adjudged and taken to "be utterly void, frustrate and of none effect," as against such creditors. Th. Dig., 215. On the other hand, the principle is clear that a fraudulent conveyance is good between the parties and their representatives. Hawes vs. Leader Cro. Jac., 270. In that case the intestate made a grant of his goods to B., by fraud between him and B., to cheat the creditors, and he kept possession of the goods and died. B. then sued the administrator for the goods, and he pleaded this covin and fraud, and the statute of 13 Eliz., but on demurrer the plea was held bad, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, on the ground among others, that the deed was void only as against creditors, but that it remained good as against the party himself and his representatives.

These two principles are illustrated by the effect given to the fraudulent conveyance when tendered as evidence on the trial respectively of the two classes of conflicting claims to which we have referred.

When the contest is between a creditor and the fraudulent donee or grantee, the conveyance upon which the latter relies, if tendered as evidence, is, under the statute, "deemed, held, adjudged and taken to be utterly void, "frustrate and of none effect" as to the creditor. The title of the donee necessarily fails, for want of evidence to support it, and the creditor prevails, after having shown pre-existing title. But where the contest is between the donee and the representatives of the donor, and the donee

Kent vs. Lyon, Guardian.—Opinion of Court.

477 tenders his fraudulent conveyance, the representative is estopped from impeaching the deed of his testator or intestate—there is no party to the suit against whom the deed is "frustrate and of none effect," and the donee in his action at law must necessarily prevail.

The case now before the court is precisely the one first supposed.

Kent having obtained judgment and execution against Williams, the administrator of Lott, levies his execution upon a negro woman of which Lott had died possessed, and which was found in the possession of the administrator. A claim is interposed, under the statute, by the guardian of the fraudulent donee, and to support this claim he relies mainly upon the fraudulent conveyance from Lott to his daughter. The statute having declared in effect that this deed, as against Kent, should be adjudged utterly void, the court erred in instructing the jury that it was conclusive evidence of Anna Maria Lott's title. In regard to Kent's claim, it was a nullity, and it should have been so adjudged.

It will be found, we think, that the point decided, in every case referred to in the argument, turns upon the distinction we have here made as to the effect of the fraudulent conveyance, when tendered as evidence in the two classes of controversy.

Before we proceed to the examination of the several cases, we will advert to one of the general rules deduced from them, as a further illustration of our meaning.

The fraudulent donee who goes into possession during the lifetime of the donor, when he attempts to repel the effect of this evidence by the exhibition of his fraudulent deed, he is at once arrested by the exclusion of this deed as being a nullity, in regard to the party with whom he is contending. He is without evidence of his authority to 478 intermeddle with the goods of the intestate, and necessarily becomes liable as executor of his own wrong.

The case of Backhouse's Admr. vs. Jett's Admr. et al., was that of a gift of slaves and other property by a father to a son, consummated by delivery in the life time of the father. Chief Justice Marshall, on a bill filed by the creditors of the father against the donee, decided that the slaves were not assets in the hands of the administrator, but that the donee was responsible for their value to the creditors. These conclusions are in consistency with the rule we have laid down and other well settled principles. The property fraudulently conveyed was not assets, because, having passed out of the possession of the donor in his life time, his administrator, as such, could not be charged by the creditors—having no possession himself as administrator and being debarred by the policy of the law from acquiring possession by impeaching the deed of his intestate. These general conclusions were not affected by the accidental circumstance that in this case the donee and the administrator were the same person.

The property was not held to be assets, but the defendant, as fraudulent donee, was held to account to the creditors for its value.

The case of Osborne vs. Moss, 7 T. R. 161, is a mere affirmation of the point settled, in the case of Hawes vs. Leader, already referred to The principle decided is, that a grantee under a deed, fraudulent as to creditors, may nevertheless recover of the administrator of the grantor, and it is in obvious consistency with the rule.

The case of Rawles vs. Graham, 4 Monroe, 120, is a reiteration of the principle already quoted from 2 Saunders, and approved in Backhouse vs. Jett, to wit, that a fraudulent grantee is responsible to creditors as executor de son tort for what he received in the life time of the 479 donor.

The case of Bethel vs. Stanhope, Cro. Eliz., 810, was that of a suit by a creditor against an executor de son tort who pleaded no assets.

It was found upon special verdict, that the testator was possessed of divers goods, and by covin, to defraud his creditors, made a gift of them to his daughter, with a condition that, upon the payment of £20, it should be void, and died.

The defendant intermeddled with the goods, and afterwards the daughter, by this gift, took the goods, and after that, administration was committed to the defendant.

The question was, whether these goods should be assets in his hands. It was adjudged that they were, as he had intermeddled with them after the death of the intestate; but it was remarked by the court that if the goods had been taken in the life time of the intestate, they would not be assets until recovered.

The case of Shears vs. Rogers, 3 B. & Ad., 362, fully establishes all the conclusions at which we have arrived from a consideration of the general principles involved in this case. It was an action of debt against an executor, on bond given to plaintiff by John Morgan, deceased. Plea, plene administravit praeter certain goods—replication, assets ultra, upon which issue was joined.

The evidence showed a fraudulent conveyance by the testator of certain household property, he continuing in possession until his death. After his death, the executor took possession.

It will be perceived that this case, in all its essential parts, is precisely the same as the one before the court. There was judgment for the plaintiff, and several of the Justices delivered opinions.

Lord Tentenden, C. J., said: "The authorities show that 480
"whenever a man makes a gift of goods which is fraudu"lent and void as against creditors, and dies, he is consid"ered to have died in full possession, with respect to the "claim of the creditors, and the goods are assets in the "hands of his Executor. It is impossible to say here that "the lease was not assets, for the defendant had it in his "possession."

Littledale, J., said: "I am of opinion the lease was as"sets. The assignment was void as soon as the creditors
"claim to treat it as such, though not until then."

Taunton J., after referring to the insolvent circumstances of the testator, says: "The assignment is utterly void "and frustrate against creditors, and the case is to be con"sidered as if it had never been executed. The intestate
"therefore died possessed of the lease, and it was assets in "the hands of the Executor."

Patterson, J., concurring in the opinion of the other Justices, says: "As the statute says that the fraudulent
"deed shall be utterly void and frustrate; and as the lease "was in the hands of the testator at the time of his death,
"it passed to the executor, and was assets in his hands."

The judgment here made and the opinion of the several Judges, completely covers every point in the case now under consideration.

The rights of creditors are fully asserted in this decision, more clearly and perhaps more broadly than in some of the older cases to which we have referred, but not more so, we think, than a consistent and a salutary construction of the statute requires. We conclude, then, in reference to the case before us, and in language warranted by the opinions just quoted, that because the deed from Lott to his daughter was fraudulent and void as against creditors, the slave, Jenny, remained the property of Lott, so far as 481 Lott's creditors were concerned, and was clearly assets in the hands of the Administrator, and that the deed of gift is to be considered, in reference to creditors, as if it had never been executed.

The first error assigned is therefore sustained. The second error assigned is, that the court erred in charging that the judgment in the case of R. F. Lyon, guardian of A. M. Lott vs. George R. Williams, [action of trover,] the record of which suit is in evidence, showed that Jenny was not assets, and was such estoppel as would compel the defendant in this suit and plaintiff in fieri facias to pursue the property in other modes.

This assignment is therefore sustained. The judgment in this case will be set aside, and the case remanded to the court below, a venire de novo awarded, and on the trial of the right of property, the jury will be instructed in accordance with the foregoing opinion.

ARCHIBALD PATTERSON AND REBECCA HIS WIFE, AND JAMES WACHOB, ADMINISTRATOR OF JOSEPH F. WACHOB, APPELLANTS, AND CHRISTOPHER C. COBB, ADMINISTRATOR DE BONIS NON OF JAMES W. EXUM, AND SUSAN A. MING, ADMINISTRATRIX OF FREDERICK L. MING, DECEASED, RESPONDENTS.

A party to the record is not a competent witness, even though before his examination he has surrendered and released all his right, title and interest, both at law and in equity, to the sums of money demanded or sued for.

An executor or administrator has no authority to bind the estate of his testator or intestate by promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations.

482 To take a case out of the statute of limitations, there must be an express promise, or such an acknowledgment as will legitimately raise an implication of a promise.

According to the general principle of the common law, an executor is guilty of a devastavit if he applies the assets in payment of a claim he is not bound to satisfy. A debt barred by lapse of time is as much within the reason of the rule as any other claim or demand which he would not be justified in paying.

The policy of the law of Florida with respect to demands barred by lapse of time, is indicated by the provision (Sec. 3, Thomp. Dig., 444,) which requires the court before which a cause is tried against an executor or administrator, on an open account, to expunge therefrom every item which shall appear to have been due five years before the death of the testator or intestate.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Jackson, made at the May Term of said court, 1850—HON. GEO. S. HAWKINS, Judge.

The nature and object of the bill filed by the appellants, complainants in the court below, and the defence set up by the respondents, as well as the principles and points involved in the controversy, are succinctly stated in the opinion delivered by the court, affirming the decree of the court below.

Woodward and Yonge for Appellants.

Bush for Respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

On the hearing of this cause in the court below, upon the bill, answer, exhibits and testimony, it was considered and ordered that the bill of the complainants, who are appellants here, should be dismissed, and the propriety of that judgment is the question before this court.

It is alleged in the bill that in year 1832, James W. Exum became indebted to the complainant's intestate on several promissory notes and receipts—that in February

1838, Exum died, leaving Frederick L. Ming, his executor. 483
In January, 1839, Joseph F. Wachob died, and in March, 1841, suit was instituted on these claims, by his personal representative, against Ming as executor of Exum, and that in October, 1847, the suit was discontinued, at the request of Ming, and upon his promise and undertaking to pay the debt claimed therein—that Ming died in the Summer or Fall of the year 1843, leaving the debt unpaid, and administration de bonis non of the estate of Exum having been committed to the respondent, Cobb, a suit at law for the recovery of the debt was instituted against the latter, which was pending in November, 1848, when the court house in Marianna was destroyed by fire, and the records and papers and files of the pending causes consumed therewith, and among them the files of the suit alluded to, together with the original evidence of the debt claimed.

The suit on the law side of the Circuit Court was not renewed, but the appellants sought their redress on the Equity side of the Court, founding their claim to this jurisdiction upon the fact of the destruction of the evidence of their claim, and an allegation that "a discovery as to "the condition of the estate at Exum, and the progress of "administration, is essential" to their case.

The answers of the defendants admit that the receipt, &c., set up by the complainants, did exist, but deny all knowledge that they were evidence of any debt by Exum to Wachob—that they knew nothing of any loaning of money by Wachob to Exum, but on the contrary believe that Exum was always largely in advance to Wachob, the latter being his deputy as marshal, and constantly in the receipt of sums of money due said Exum as costs. They deny all knowledge of the alleged promise by Ming to pay the sums claimed by the appellants—set up the defence of the statute of limitations, and a claim to indemnity from 484 the estate of Wachob to the estate of Exum, because of a recovery against the latter, by reason of a misfeasance or non feasance of Wachob, as the deputy of Exum in the performance of his duties in levying under executions lodged in the marshal's office.

The defendants also insist, under the statute, that the complainants' remedy, if any, is full, adequate and complete at law, and pray that they may have the same benefit of objection therefor as if they had demurred to the bill.

The first point assumed by the counsel for the complainants is, that it is competent for an executor or administrator to waive the statute of limitations by omitting to plead it a fortiori, upon a sufficient consideration, and such a promise by the executor or administrator will bind the estate.

Before proceeding to consider this point, it may be well to remark, that the testimony only offered to prove a promise by Ming, is the deposition of Archibald Patterson, one of the parties on the record. It is alleged by the counsel for respondents, that his objections to the competency of said witness, noted at the time of the examination, was sustained by the judge below, and one of the counsel for appellants has presented a brief upon the question of competency, but the other counsel deny here the propriety of the consideration of this question, inasmuch as it does not appear from the transcript of the record that the objection was made and decided in the court below; neither does it appear but that the objection was waived at the hearing, and the deposition read. We do not deem it of sufficient importance to send down a certiorari to ascertain this fact, if it could be ascertained from the record below, or to institute an inquiry whether or not this point is open to the respondents in this court, under our decision in the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company vs. Cole. If the objection was taken and decided in the court below, it was correctly ruled both upon reason and authority; and there was, therefore, no evidence of any promise by Executor. Patterson is a party to the record, and although before his examination he surrendered and released to the heirs and representatives of Wachob all his right, title and interest, both at law and in equity, to the sums of money demanded, if he had any, yet it did not remove the objection; he was still a party on the record, and was liable for costs. 1 Greenlf. on Ev., 329, 330, 401, 402. Scott vs. Lloyd, 12 Peters' R. 149. Stein vs. Bowman, 13 Peters' R. 219 Bridges vs. Armour, 5 How. S. C. R. 95.

If the testimony of Patterson was read at the hearing, the question of the authority of an executor or administrator to bind the estate of his testator or intestate by promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, presents itself for consideration, and we are very clear that he has no such power. It is true that Mr. Williams, in his Treatise on Executors, (page 1110,) citing Norton vs. Frecker, 1 Atk. R. 526, says that an executor is not bound to plead the statute of limitations to an action commenced against him, by a creditor of the testator, and there are other cases which hold that he may remove the bar directly by a new promise; yet in a more recent case, cited by the same author, (Shewen vs. Vanderhurst, 1 Rus. & M. Rep. 349,) under a common decree in an administration suit, a creditor having applied to prove a debt barred by the statute, and the executor refusing to interfere, the residuary legatee was allowed to set it up.

The early English decisions, under the Stat. 21 Jac. I, c. 16, held that the statute affected the remedy only, leaving the debt still subsisting; that it created simply a presumption of payment from the lapse of time, and that any ac-486 knowledgment which repelled this presumption, was sufficient, although it was accompanied by a denial of liability; but in A'Court vs. Cross, (3 Bing. R. 329,) the courts commenced to give a more reasonable construction to the statute, holding that if there be any thing said at the time of the acknowledgment to repel the inference of a promise, it will not be sufficient, and the defence, which before that time was looked upon with disfavor, was now regarded favorably. The courts of the United States have gone further, and have given the defence a liberal application, considering the statute as it was intended by the Legislature, a statute of repose, to quiet old and stale claims set up after the circumstances attending the transaction had passed from the memory, or the witnesses had died. They have always held, that to take a case out of the statute, there must be an express promise or such an acknowledgment as will legitimately raise an implication of a promise. Reference has been made to the courts of decisions in the English Courts, to show the leaning against this defence in the early cases, and therefore the little reliance to be placed on them as precedents.

According to the general principles of this common law, an executor is guilty of devastavit if he applies the assets in payment of a claim he is bound to satisfy, as if he makes disbursements in the schooling, feeding and clothing of the children of the deceased, subsequently to his decease. So, if he pays a bond founded on an usurious contract, or a bond ex turpi causa, such payment will amount to a devastavit, as well against legatees as creditors; so, if the testator was bound in a joint obligation, and he dies before the co-obligor, the executor is not liable on the instrument at law, and therefore, if he pays the sum due upon it, he will be guilty of a devastavit. 2 Williams on Executors, 1109.

Patterson et al., vs. Cobb et al.—Opinion of Court.

Upon what good reason the payment of a debt barred 487 by the lapse of time before the death of the testator, should be excluded from the operation of this rule, we cannot discover. Clearly the right to recover against the executor does not exist, and therefore he is under no obligation to pay—the payment under such circumstances is a palpable misapplication of assets.

In the United States the decisions on the point have not been uniform, the earlier cases following the English precedents holding that an executor was not bound to set up the bar of the statute of limitations, where he had reason to believe that the debt was originally just, and had not been paid, and that his promise to pay would remove the bar, but it is believed from a careful review of the decisions that the weight of authority is the other way—that the executor has not power to bind the estate by an acknowledgment, or a new promise. See Fisher vs. Tucker, 1 M'Cords Ch. R., 175. Peck vs. Potsford, 7 Conn. R., 180. Richmond, admr., Petitioner, 2 Pick, 560. Rogers vs. Rogers, 3 Wend. R., 517. Thompson vs. Peter 12 Wheat. R. 565. Certainly the decisions quoted seem to be based on grounds more consonant to reason and justice and the principles of law. It seems idle to assert as a principle of law that an executor cannot bind the estate by any contract, and yet permit him by a new promise to charge the estate with a debt extinct by operation of a statute.

In the case at bar, the right of action accrued in 1832, and the testator died in February, 1838; the bar therefore was complete at the time of the testator's death, and the debt must be presumed to have been paid, and was not a legal and just demand against his estate.

Our own statute, (act Nov. 10, 1828, Thomp. Dig. 444, §3, art. 1,) indicates very strongly the policy of the law of Florida on this point. It requires the court before which a cause is tried against an executor on an open account 488 against the deceased testator, to expunge from the account every item which shall appear to have been due five years before the death of the testator, and this, of course, without reference to the state of the pleadings.

It is also urged by appellants counsel that the statute of limitation does not run where there are mutual accounts and reciprocal demands. This is correct, but the case at bar is not such a case; the principle is founded on the exception in the statute in favor of such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchants, and has never been extended beyond the direct concerns of trade, in cases of accounts current between the parties, in which there are reciprocal charges and credits. Here there is no account current, but the claim of the appellants rests upon matters stated and settled by written memoranda and receipts.

We are well satisfied that at the time of the death of Exum, the debt claimed by the appellants was not a subsisting debt or demand against his estate, because of the bar of the statute; that the bar has not been removed by the alleged promise of the executor for want of power to bind the estate by such promise, and that this point of defense is fatal to this cause.

It is not deemed necessary to decide any of the other points raised by the pleadings, and discussed in the argument.

DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of Florida,

JANUARY TERM, 1853.

HELD AT TALLAHASSEE.

DAVID BARROW, APPELLANT, vs. WILLIAM BAILEY, ADMINISTRATOR DE BONIS NON OF JOHN BELLAMY, DECEASED, RESPONDENT.

1. If a creditor seeks the aid of a Court of Equity against the real estate of his debtor, he must show a judgment at law creating a lien upon such estate; and if he seeks such aid in regard to personal property, he must show an execution, sued out and pursued to every available extent.

2. Upon a proceeding in scire facias quare executionem non, two writs successively issued and returned nihil, are equivalent to one writ returned scire feci, and the court may, upon such returns of nihil, proceed to award execution.

3. When such writ of execution is awarded upon a return of scire feci, the defendant is concluded by the judgment; but when it is awarded upon two returns of nihil, the defendant may afterwards present his defence by audita querela, or upon motion to the court, and may have the full benefit thereof.

4. Inadequacy of price, in a sale of property where the vendor is greatly indebted, is a mark or badge of fraud, and, when associated with other circumstances of suspicion, may be conclusive. Where, therefore, a vendor who was largely indebted, and embarrassed by the pressure of his creditors, sold his entire estate, real and personal, to a friend and relative whom he summoned from a distance to make the purchase, at a price considerably less than the fair market value of the property, and less than the sum of his 10 debts, the conferences between the vendor and purchaser during the negotiations being secret, and no appraisement by or reference to any third person on the question of values, and the avowed intention being to prevent the property from being sacrificed by creditors at sales under legal process; it was held, that fraud might and ought to be inferred therefrom, and that the conveyance, in equity, should be considered valid only as to the consideration paid by the purchaser which was actually applied to the payment of the debts of the vendor, and that the overplus or residue should be held by such purchaser as a trust fund, for the benefit of the creditors of the vendor.

This cause was brought up by appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of Jefferson county, made at November Term, 1852, by the Hon. J. Wayles Baker, Judge, sitting in Chancery.

William Bailey, as administrator de bonis non of John Bellamy, deceased, filed his bill against Henry Doggett and David Barrow, to set aside a sale made by Doggett to Barrow, as fraudulent and void as to creditors.

Doggett being largely indebted to the intestate of complainant, and being in embarrassed circumstances, in April, 1845, sold and conveyed to David Barrow all his property in Florida of every description, consisting of large tracts of land, plantation implements, crops, provisions, cattle, horses, and other stock, and one hundred and seventy-eight slaves, for the consideration of forty-five thousand dollars, and an annuity of five hundred dollars during the life of Doggett, who was then old and infirm. Barrow, who was the brother-in-law of Doggett, was summoned to Florida by Doggett for the purpose of making the sale.

The bill alleges inadequacy of price, and other badges of fraud, and charges that the sale was made with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors.

The answer of Barrow admits his knowledge of the debt in favor of complainant's intestate, the sale to him, and his possession of the property, but denies that there was any fraud in the transaction. He avers that to prevent a 11 sacrifice of the property, in connection with his esteem and friendship for Doggett, he was induced to make the purchase.

The material facts in the case will be found in the opinion of the court, to which reference is made.

James T. Archer and M. A. Long for appellant.

A. E. Maxwell and M. D. Papy for appellee.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

William Bailey, as administrator de bonis non of the estate of John Bellamy, deceased, brought his bill of complaint on the equity side of the Circuit Court against the appellant, David Barrow, and one Henry Doggett, for the purpose of setting aside an alleged sale and conveyance by the latter to the former, of all the grantor's real and personal property in Florida, as fraudulent and void as against creditors. The court below made a decree in favor of the complainant, which will be hereafter noticed, from which the defendant, Barrow, has appealed to this court. To a correct understanding of the merits of the present controversy, it seems important to advert to the history of the debt claimed by the respondent here to be due to the estate of his intestate; and also to the facts and circumstances which preceded and attended the sale and conveyance of the property which is complained of. It appears that in January, 1839, Doggett purchased from respondent's intestate a tract of land in Jefferson county containing 1203 acres, for the price of $20,000. payable in January, 1848, the interest on which sum, reserved at the rate of ten per centum per annum, was payable annually, commencing with the 1st of January, 1840, when the first payment of interest fell due. Doggett, however, was to have the privilege of paying said principal sum within the term of credit, provided 12 the sum was so paid in the sum not less than $5000 at any payment. A bond in the penalty of $40,000 was executed and delivered by Doggett to Bellamy, with condition to perform the said agreement; and a bond with like penalty of $40,000 was executed by said Bellamy to Doggett, with condition to convey the lands so contracted for on payment of the purchase money and interest, as stipulated. It further appears that, in the summer of 1843, no part of the principal or interest of said debt having been paid, and while Doggett was absent from the State, Bellamy, in consequence of some apprehension as to the safety of his debt, (arising, it is supposed by one of the witnesses, from some thoughtless language of a nephew of Doggett,) sued out an attachment for the amount then due, which was levied on all Doggett's slaves; and at the fall term of that year, of Jefferson Superior Court, Doggett confessed judgment for the penalty of the bond, and agreed that execution should issue thereon for $15,234.94, which sum included $5000 of the principal debt, and the annual interest on the whole sum up to 1st January, 1843.

The affairs of Doggett, some time in this year, or perhaps prior thereto, became much embarrassed. It seems he had become involved, as security and endorser for other persons, to a considerable extent, and that some sixty or seventy thousand dollars had been coerced from him by this class of creditors, which had consumed all his available cash resources, while his individual creditors had been indulgent, and their claims had now become, by the increase of interest, very formidable and onerous in his view, as they were in point of fact. The service of the attachment, it is said, added greatly to his mental distress. His embarrassments were enhanced by his infirmities, arising from his advanced age and disease, which tended to incapacitate him from giving that attention to his property, from the issues of which only could he expect to extricate himself, if his creditors continue indulgent; and if they could not in justice to themselves, or would not, from any other cause, then only by a sale of the whole or a part of his property, according to the exigency of the case.

Early in the year 1845 John Bellamy died, and administration upon his estate was committed to his son, William Bellamy, who caused the execution awarded on the 8th of November, 1843, in favor of his intestate against Doggett, to be levied on the slaves of the defendant in the county of Leon. Three other executions were also levied on the same property, and the sale thereof was advertised for Monday, the 7th of April, 1845. Doggett, prior to that day, viz: on the 29th day of March, after, as it is said, he had made, for a year previously, various efforts to sell his property, some of which will be noticed more particularly hereafter, concluded an agreement for a sale with the appellant, his brother-in-law, and a resident of the State of Louisiana, and who had been invited by Doggett to Florida, for the purpose of extending relief to him, or of purchasing the property. The conveyance bears date on the 3d of April, and was proved and recorded in the office of record for Leon county on the 5th, and in that of Jefferson county, on the 7th of April. By this instrument, Doggett, for a pecuniary consideration specified therein, bargains and sells, and conveys to the appellant, Barrow, his heirs and assigns, &c., "the whole of the property of the said Doggett of ev-"ery kind and description whatsoever, lying, situate and "being within the State of Florida," and then proceeds to particularize under a videlicit, the plantation in Leon county, containing 2000 acres of land, known as the Home Place; sundry detached parcels of land in the same county, containing in the aggregate 480 acres; the plantation 14 in Jefferson county, known as the Partridge Lands, and one additional eighth of land, containing in the aggregate about 712 acres; all the lands of said Doggett situate lying and being in Madison county, and not otherwise or more particularly described, or the quantity in acres specified: together with all the crops of every kind and description whatever, corn, fodder, peas, oats, sugar, cane; potatoes, furniture, &c., both in the counties of Leon and Jefferson, together with all the farming implements, blacksmith and carpenter's tools; also, all the stock, consisting of horses, mules, hogs and cattle; also, one hundred and seventy-eight slaves, specified by name.

Upon the execution of this conveyance, Barrow went into possession of all the property specified therein except one servant, Hillyer, who was retained by Doggett, and, with the consent of Barrow, carried to North Carolina, where he remains in the possession of the vendor. It is this sale and conveyance which has given rise to the present controversy; but before the court proceeds to the consideration of the question arising thereon, it is deemed proper first to dispose of the last point made in the argument of the appellant's counsel.

It is contended on behalf of appellant that the respondent, Bailey, is not in a position to claim the aid of a court of equity. The general rule of equity undoubtedly is, that if a creditor seeks the aid of the court against the real estate of his debtor, he must show a judgment at law creating a lien upon such estate; and if he seeks aid in regard to personal property, he must show an execution sued out and pursued to every available extent. Brinkerhof vs. Brown, 4 John's Ch. R., 676; Shirley vs. Watts, 3 Atk. R., 200. And if respondent, Bailey, does not occupy the position of a judgment and execution creditor, he cannot have the relief he asks for, even if otherwise well entitled thereto. It will be recollected that, in 1843, judgment was 15 rendered against Henry Doggett in favor of the respondent's intestate, for $40,000, the penalty of the bond he had executed to secure the price of the land purchased, on which, by consent of parties, execution was then awarded for part of the principal debt, and the arrears of interest due up to the first of January, 1843, which was paid, as will be hereafter noticed; the judgment standing, according to the provisions of the statute 8 and 9 Will. 3, c. 11, § 8, as a security for future breaches of the condition of the obligation.

In 1848, the residue of the principal sum falling due, ($15,000,) and the installments of interest stipulated to be annually paid, remaining due and unpaid since the 1st of January, 1843, the respondent, Bailey, to whom administration de bonis non of John Bellamy had been committed, sued out a scire facias to revive the judgment of 1843, suggesting a further breach in the non-payment of the aforesaid sums, and praying an award of execution therefor, according to the directions of the statute before mentioned; which writ was returned nihil; a second or alias writ, sued out upon the return of the first, was also returned nihil, and thereupon, the two returns of nihil. being considered equivalent to a return of scire feci, judgment of execution was awarded for the sum of $23,859, on which the Sheriff has returned, "no property found." It is now argued that the respondent has not shown a proper judgment and execution at law—that the fiat on the scire facias was rendered without any actual notice to Doggett, and is therefore simply void.

A scire facias is a writ necessarily founded upon some matter of record, and must issue out of the court where that record remains. Tidd Pr. (8th Ed.,) 1139, Foster, Sci. fa., 1. In some cases, the issuing of the writ is the commencement of an original action, and in which it is in the 16 nature of an original action. Co. Lit., 296, a. Burr. vs. Atwood. 1 Salk. R., 89; as where it is brought on a recognizance, or by the government to repeal letters patent, or to resume the grant of a franchise. Foster, 12. But in other cases, where the writ is founded upon the judgment of a court of record, and it is intended to bring in a new party, or to have execution upon the judgment, it is a judicial writ, to warn the defendant to plead any matter in bar of the execution. In these cases, it is only a quasi continuation of the former suit, brought merely to revive the former judgment, and may be properly called a writ of execution. 2 Tidd Pr. (8th Ed.,) 1140, Phillips vs. Brown, 6 Term R., 284. It is, however, in all cases considered in the nature of an action, because the defendant may plead to it in any matter in bar of the execution upon the original judgment. O'Brien vs. Ram. 3 Mod. R., 189. The scire facias in the present case, was, therefore, a judicial writ to continue the effect of, and have execution of the former judgment, and this is fully illustrated by the form of the judgment rendered thereon. The statute 8 and 9, Will. 3, says Sergt. Williams, does not direct any judgment to be entered for the damages assessed for the further breach, &c.; therefore it should seem there can only be one judgment, namely, the old judgment for the debt, and, 5, s., damages for the intention, and, 40, s., costs, together with the costs of increase. And in Hankins vs. Broomhead, (3 Bos. & Pul. R., 607,) it was so held in the Exchequer Chamber, and a second judgment for the damages assessed upon an inquisition, was reversed as erroneous. I Wm. Saund. R. 580. The form of the judgment upon scire facias, in such a case, on a return of scire feci, where the defendant pleaded thereto in bar of execution, is thus given in Tidd App., 515;

"Therefore it is considered, that the said plaintiff "have his execution against the said defendant of the dam- "ages aforesaid, according to the force, form, &c. And "it is also considered by the court here, that the said "plaintiff do recover against the said defendant for his "costs and charges by him laid out about his suit in this "behalf, on occasion of the said defendant having pleaded "to the said writ of scire facias, by the court here ad- "judged," &c.

It is upon two returns of nihil, then that fact is stated and the default recorded, and execution being awarded, there is no judgment for the costs of the suit and proceedings therein.

Our statute, to which allusion was made upon the argument, provides for the mode and manner of serving original process, that which commences or institutes a suit for the first time; and is silent as to the service of mesne process, such as a scire facias, which is the continuation of a suit already instituted. Resort must, therefore, be had to the common law for the rules to govern the subject; and on examination, all the books of practice inform us that two writs of scire facias, with returns of nihil to each, are deemed equivalent to one writ returned scire feci. See Tidd Prac., 1124, 2 Sellon Pr., 196, citing 2 inst., 472, and Andrews vs. Harper, 8 Mod. R., 227; 2 Arch. Pr., 88, citing Yelv. R., 88-122. And this principle is recognized by the courts of several of the States of the Union. In New York, in Cumming vs. Eden, 1 Cowen R., 70; in Pennsylvania, in Chambers vs. Carson, 2 Whart. R., 9; in Indiana, in Kearns vs. The State, 3 Blackf. R., 334; and in North Carolina, in Woodfork vs. Broomfield, 1 Murph. Rep., 187. In some of the States it is recognized by statute, with some modifications, as Virginia, Ohio and South Carolina. See Lee vs. Chilton, 5 Munf. R., 407
Dunlevy vs. Ross, Wright R., 287, Grimke, Ex., vs. Magrant, 2 Brev. R., 202. Upon this point, the service of the writ of scire facias, Mr. Sellon observes, that although the intent of the sci. fa. is to give the party against whom execution is about to issue, notice or warning thereof, yet by the general practice it is wholly defeated, for the defendant may be summoned or not as the party thinks fit; and indeed the usual way is to revive the judgment without giving the party any notice." 2 Sellon Pr., 199. The allowance of such a course of practice unexplained, would seem to speak a reproach upon that system of law which claims to be founded on reason and natural justice; and the explanation sems to consist in the distinctive difference between the force and effect of an award of an execution upon a return of scire feci, and an award upon two returns of nihil, in other words, without notice to the defendant. In the first case, if the defendant does not appear, but suffers judgment to go by default, he is forever concluded from any plea or defence which he might have urged. Day vs. Guilford, (1 Lev. R., 41.) But if the Sheriff returns nihil, on which an execution is awarded, the defendant shall have an audita querela, in which he may present his defence, for, not being warned, he was not bound to appear. See Fitz. Nat. Brev., 104. According to modern practice, where there has been no scire feci, but only two nihils, the court will often relieve the party upon motion, and not put him to an audita querela. Anon, 1 Salk Rep., 93, Wicker vs. Creamer, 1 Salk. R., 264, Wheaton vs. Richardson, 2 Stra. R., 1075. If any reason exists for thus allowing an award of execution upon two returns of nihil, it is not stated in any case or book to which the court has had access; but it is quite probable that it may have arisen from the respective principle before stated, that the scire facias can only issue out of the court in which the judgment was rendered, and in which the record remains; the application of which might oftentimes defeat a party of his remedy, if personal service was required in cases where the defendant had withdrawn himself and his property from the jurisdiction in which the judgment was rendered, or had secreted himself and his property within the same. At all events, the law has made such provision for permitting the defendant in such case to open the judgment and present his defence by audita querela, or upon motion, that the practice cannot work any injustice.

It might be questioned whether, as the judgment of November, 1843, for $40,000, the penalty of the bond, was a subsisting judgment, standing by force of the statute as a security for further breaches, if the proceedings on scire facias had been irregular, or if the plaintiff had sued out an execution on the judgment endorsed to levy the sum due thereon, without an effort to revive by sci. fa., it would be an irregularity which the appellant here could take advantage of. In Moseley vs. Doe, ex dem. Edwards, (2 Fla. Rep. 429,) where an execution had been issued on a judgment, after the lapse of more than a year and a day, without revival by sci fa., it was ruled by this court, that it was an irregularity only, of which the defendant in execution alone could take advantage. But here it is wholly unnecessary to pass upon the question, as the proceeding on scire facias was strictly regular, according to the rules of law, and consequently the writ of fieri facias awarded thereon, is a legal and valid process, which being returned nulla bona by the proper officer, the respondent in the court below was well entitled to seek the aid of a Court of Equity.

The main question in this case is upon the sale and conveyance before mentioned, which is impeached as fraudulent and void as to creditors.

The existence of any actual fraud, of any meditated or intentional design on the part of the debtor and grantor, Henry Doggett, known to, or participated in by, the appellant, to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, is denied by the answer. Yet, without imputing any moral turpitude to either of the parties to this sale and conveyance, if those facts and circumstances are found to exist, and to have attended the transaction which virtually and indirectly operate the same mischief, and which would, in contemplation of law, be deemed badges of fraud, or presumptions of ill faith, the result is the same; the inference of fraud arises and the law pronounces the transaction, upon principles of public policy, fraudulent and void as to creditors. This is termed legal or constructive fraud. Gibson vs. Love, (4 Fla. R., 264, et seq.,) 1 Story Eq., § 258, 259, 349, 353, et seq. In Hadden vs. Spader, 20 Johns' Rep., 554, Platt, J., says:—"The defendant denies that there is "any fraudulent combination to delay or defraud creditors, "but in the same answer he admits a series of facts from "which both law and equity impute fraud." And so in Hendrick vs. Robinson, 2 John. Chancery R., 301, the Chancellor observes:—"The purchasers and vendors say "that this was an honest and bona fide sale, but do not the "facts which they all admit outweigh the declaration? "And can a mere assertion be compared to the unequivo- 'cal language of the facts and the necessary inference of "law?"

Our statute of January 28th, 1823, aginst conveyances "to delay, hinder or defraud creditors," (Thomp. Dig., 215,) is a transcript from the British statute of 13th Elizabeth, c., 5, which latter act has always received a favorable and liberal interpretation in all the courts both of law and of equity, in suppression of the fraud. It declares all fraudulent conveyances to be void; and whether a conveyance

Barrow vs. Bailey—Opinion of Court.

21 be fraudulent or not, is by the statute declared to depend upon its being made "upon good consideration and bona fide." Both requisites must concur, for although the conveyance be upon even a valuable consideration, it is not valid in point of law from that circumstance alone, for if it be made with intent to defraud or defeat creditors, it will be void. Cadogan vs. Kennett, Cowp. R., 432, 1 Story Eq., Jur. § 353, 369. The terms "good consideration," mentioned in the statute, have been held to include those founded upon motives of generosity, affection, or natural duty, as well as those founded upon money, marriage, or the like. Hence, family settlements and advancements to children are, under certain circumstances, good considerations as against creditors, where the settler or parent is not indebted at the time; but as against existing creditors, it is very doubtful if, in any case, any consideration which is not in law deemed valuable, will be allowed to prevail. The eminent jurist, Judge Story, after a full review of the cases upon this point, declines to express his view as to the comparative weight of the judicial opinions in relation thereto. 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 354, 365.

Proceeding to the consideration of this case, the deed of conveyance of the 3d of April, 1845, from Henry Doggett to the defendant, David Barrow, on its face is liable to no impeachment; it conveys the property specified therein absolutely to the bargainee and his heirs, and is sustained by a legal consideration expressed of $45,000, paid to the bargainor, and of an annuity of $500 for his life. If it is justly obnoxious to the charge of fraud, it must be so from those facts and circumstances which preceded and attended the transaction, as disclosed in the answer of the appellant, and established by the proofs in the cause. Let us, then, briefly advert again to those circumstances . Doggett was at the time considerably embarrassed in his af-

22 fairs, and had been in this condition several years. Although not in fact insolvent, as will be hereafter seen, yet he believed such to be his condition—at least, such is the fair conclusions from his acts and declarations. Mr. Branch states that he (Doggett) never recovered from the levy of the attachment by Bellamy in the summer of 1843, but ever afterwards regarded his affairs as irretrievable, and made various open efforts to dispose of his property to relieve himself. The expression of his fears, often repeated, that the payment of his debts would consume all his property, and leave him nothing for his future support, is well established. Executions to the amount of $16,000 had been levied on his slaves in Leon county, and the time appointed for the sale was rapidly approaching. Destitute of cash resources to meet this urgent demand, he summoned the appellant, who is his brother-in-law, and who is represented as a man of wealth residing in Louisiana, to come to his assistance. The first call was ineffectual, for the want of sufficiently precise information as to the extent and character of the relief required. A second letter puts the appellant, according to the admission of the answer, it possession of the extent of the pressing money demand, and of Doggett's desire to sell the whole property to him. These letters are not produced by the appellant, and, in their absence, it must be presumed that they contained a full and detailed exposition of the pecuniary difficulties of the writer, the amount of his liabilities, and the extent of his means, and of his hopes and fears as to his future maintenance and support. It is most natural to suppose, from the affinity between the parties, that Doggett was as full and unreserved in his communications with Barrow as he was with Mr. Branch, and the other witnesses. If it were otherwise, this would have been established by the production of the letters. Such was Doggett's condition, and such the posture of affairs on Barrow's arrival in Flor- 23 ida to negotiate for the purchase of the property.

It is charged in the bill of complaint that the appellant well knew it would be impossible for Doggett to pay his debt to the estate of Bellamy, then due and to become due, after the transwer to him (Barrow) of all the property which Doggett owned in Florida. To this allegation, the answer is as follows:—"It is not true that respondent knew, "at the time of said sale, that said Doggett would be una- "ble to pay all his debts, because said Doggett declared "that he hoped and expected that he would be able to do "so, as he owned a large estate in North Carolina, consist- "ing of lands and slaves, &c., which he declared it was "his purpose to sell to the best advantage, so soon as prac- "ticable after he should arrive in said State." It is claimed on behalf of appellant that the answer, in this particular, is not only strictly responsive to the bill, but is an unequivocal denial of the allegation. We cannot think so; we cannot regard it but as a qualified denial, and at best but imperfect as such. The rule with regard to the sufficiency of an answer to the allegations of a bill in equity, as stated by Ch. Kent, in Woods vs. Merrill, 1 Johns. Ch. R., 107, and recognized by this court in Hunter vs. Bradford, 3 Fla. R., 285, is as follows:—"The general rule is, that to so "much of the bill as is material and necessary for the de- "fendant to answer, he must speak directly, without eva- "sion, and not by way of negative pregnant. He must not "answer the charge merely literally, but he must confess, "or traverse the substance of each charge positively and "with certainty; and particular precise charges must be "answered particularly and precisely, and not in a gener- "al manner, even though a general answer may amount to "a full denial of the charges." See also Cowp. Eq. Pl. 313, 314, Mitf. Eq. Pl., 309, 316, Story Eq. Pl. §852. Now, it is very evident here, that the appellant's denial is 24 qualified and explained by the alleged declarations of Doggett as to "his large estate, consisting of land and slaves, in North Carolina," from the sale of which he hoped and expected to be able to pay all his debts. Conceding the fact that Doggett did make the declaration to appellant which is imputed to him, as to this ownership of property in North Carolina, (and that he did so is most likely, as it is proved that he made a similar statement to Gov. Moseley,) was it known to the appellant to be true? or, if he had no personal knowledge on the subject, did he believe it to be true? And, if so, what were the grounds of his belief?—and did he act upon it, believing it to be true? The answer is silent on these points. If he had such knowledge, or entertained such belief, and acted upon it, he should have stated it, so as to avoid the inference, which seems irresistible, that he must have seen such a result was the necessary consequence of his purchase. The purchase was of all Doggett's known property; the price agreed to be paid therefor was less than the sum of all his debts, by the amount of this debt due Bellamy's estate; from Doggett's advanced age, and infirmities from disease; there was no prospect of his becoming able, from future exertion; then how was the debt to be provided for and paid? It would seem as if the appellant felt the full force of these facts and circumstances, when he prepared his answer, and sought to escape from the conclusion by relying on the simple declaration of Doggett. Should not Barrow, as a man of ordinary prudence, have reasoned thus:—If Doggett's assertion as to other property is true, and if his hopes and expectations thereon are well founded, why should he manifest so much anxiety to secure the settlement of the small annuity of $500 for his future support? Why should the extraordinary provision be inserted, that this annuity was to be payable to him or his order, and to no other person whatsoever? Whence the necessity of withdrawing $5000 from the sale of the Florida property, for the purpose of paying debts in North Carolina? And why should Doggett require to retain possession of the slave, Hillyard, after the sale? And if his services were necessary, in consequence of Doggett's infirmities, why not except him from the sale? The inconsistency of these things, compared with the truth of the fact asserted, must have been apparent. Was it true? If so, it was susceptible of truth; and yet, up to the time of the publication of the evidence in this cause, it rests on no stronger foundation than the unsupported declarations of Doggett. That the appellant knew of the existence of this debt due to Bellamy's estate, and that its payment was not fully provided for, is clearly admitted. He admits that it was not at all provided for in the appropriation of the proceeds of the sale; and he further admits that the land, of which the Bellamy estate still held the legal title, was an insufficient security, for he alleges, in his answer, offers to purchase it from the administrator of Bellamy's estate for a less price than the sum due; and says that it was not worth that price, but he was willing to give it because of its contiguity to the lands purchased of Doggett. The answer is insufficient to repel the inference of knowledge, from the surrounding facts and circumstances, and it must be taken that the allegation of the bill is sustained in this particular, and Barrow's purchase viewed as if he had full knowledge of the fact. But whether the appellant knew the fact or not, or whether he should have suspected and believed it to be so, is not, standing alone, of any importance; its materiality depends on other considerations; for one in failing circumstances, or even insolvent, has a right to sell or assign his property, except as against existing liens, for the purpose of paying his debts; and if he has the right to sell, of course any one has the corresponding right to purchase. The only limitation upon the exercise of these rights is, that the sale and purchase be in good faith, and for a valuable and adequate consideration. If the appellant's purchase falls within this rule—if he purchased from Doggett in good faith and for a fair price, it is perfectly immaterial whether the vendor was embarrassed, or insolvent, or otherwise; or whether this condition of his affairs was or was not known to him; and so it is, also, wholly immaterial whether, by reason of preferences given by the debtor to some creditors over others, the sale and conveyance shall operate to the prejudice of a particular creditor, for, as was ruled by this court in Gassett vs. Brown, (3 Fla. Rep., 260,) a debtor is entitled to distinguish between the claims of his creditors, and to prefer some to the entire exclusion of others. And this brings us to the question of inadequacy of price or consideration, raised by the pleadings in this case.

It is contended, on behalf of the appellant, that inadequacy of price is only objectionable, when so gross as to lead the mind to the conclusion that such a sale was not intended to be bona fide, but only fictitious and colorable. Such is the principle when the inequality is relied upon as the sole ground of objection; and when it is ascertained to be of this gross and manifest character, relief is given upon the ground of actual fraud, the fact being regarded as demonstrative of some gross imposition, or some undue influence. Judge Story states the principle thus:—"Mere inadequacy of price, or other inequality in the bargain, is "not understood as constituting, per se, a ground to avoid a "bargain, in equity; for Courts of equity, as well as Courts "of law, act upon the ground that every person who is "not, from his peculiar condition or circumstances, under "disability, is entitled to dispose of his property in such "manner and upon such terms as he chooses; and whether his bargains are wise or discreet, or profitable or unprofitable, or otherwise, are considerations not for Courts "of Justice, but for the party himself to deliberate upon. "Still, there may be such unconscionableness or inadequacy "in a bargain, as to demonstrate some gross imposition, or "some undue influence; and in such cases, Courts of "Equity ought to interfere, on the satisfactory ground of "fraud. But then, such unconscionableness, or such inadequacy, should be made out as would, (to use an expressive phrase,) shock the conscience, and amount in itself "to conclusive and decisive evidence of fraud. And "when there are other ingredients in the case, of a suspicious nature, or peculiar relations between the parties, "gross inadequacy of price must necessarily furnish the "most vehement presumption of fraud." 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 244, 246. And this, we understand, would be the rule of decision if Doggett was before the court, seeking a rescission of the sale; but here the case is different. It is the case of a creditor, who is seeking satisfaction of his debt, and who complains of the joint act of Doggett and Barrow on the ground that, by the sale and conveyance, the property of the debtor has been improperly and inequitably put beyond the reach of his legal remedies; and the inadequacy of the price paid by the vendee, is presented as one of the marks or badges of fraud. In How. vs. Weldon, it was said by the M. R.:—"By the civil law, if "half the value only of the thing had been paid, the sale "would have been a mere nullity. Our law differs from "that; but though the inadequateness of the value will not "of itself be sufficient to set aside the contract, yet it is a "very material ingredient, and, with other things, will go "a very great way towards it." 2 Vesey, Sr., R., 518 and to the same effect are the following cases; Stillwell vs. Wilkins, Jacob Ch. R., 280; Pope vs. Roots, 6 Bro. P. C., 184; Macormick vs. Malin, 5 Blackf. R., 509; Moore vs. Royal, 12 Vesey, Jr., 373; Boyd vs. Dunlap, 1 John's Ch. R., 478. Most of the cases usually cited on this subject, are those of suits between the parties to the conveyance, which always present stronger considerations to the court to support the transaction for; conveyances purely voluntary are good, between the parties. But as the intent or purpose with which every conveyance is made, which operates prejudicially to creditors, is concealed within the bosoms of the actors, and the court can only infer the motives and intents, from the outward acts of the parties thereto, when creditors complain of the invasion of their rights as such, and the disappointment of their just expectations, the courts have scrutinized the transactions more closely, and have never required proof of the same extraordinary, gross and manifest disparity between the value of the property claimed to be sold, and the price paid as the consideration of the sale, as they have in the former case. In the case of Prosser vs. Henderson, (11 Ala., R., 484,) it is laid down by the court, that, to justify an inference of fraud, from the price given for a slave purchased from an insolvent man, it should be clearly inadequate, evidently below the market price. And in the case of Borland vs. Mayo, (8 Ala. R., 104, 117,) which has been cited by both parties, the court says:—"Inadequacy of "consideration, where the vendor is greatly indebted, is "recognized as a mark of fraud. True, it might not be "sufficient, per se, to authorize a sale to be annulled, unless the disparity between the true value of the property "and the price paid, or agreed to be paid, was so great as "to strike the understanding at once with the conviction "that such a sale could never have been made bona fide.

29 "But it may be a mark of fraud, where the difference is "not so great; and when other circumstances are associa- "ted with it, they may be conclusive." See also Bozeman vs. Draughan, 3 Stew. R., 243; McCaskle vs. Amarine, 12 Ala. R., 181. This ruling is, on its face, consistent with reason and with justice. In Partridge vs. Gopp, 2 Amb. R., 588, Ld. Ch. Northington says:—"I think no man has "such a power over his own property, to dispose of it so "as to defeat his creditors, unless for consideration." The term consideration, must, of course, be intended to mean a fair and adequate price; for if any consideration, which is valuable in its nature, though inadequate compared with the value of the property, be sufficient to sustain a sale by one greatly indebted, and especially when the sale is of all his known or visible property, it must be apparent that little has been accomplished, by statute, or by the adjudications of Courts of Law or Equity, towards the protection of the rights of creditors. ' But understanding the rule to be very correctly laid down in Borland vs. Mayo, as the result of all the authorities upon the point, we proceed to the examination of the fact of inadequacy. It is charged in the bill that the price stated to have been paid by the appellant, as the consideration for the property conveyed to him by Doggett, was and is wholly and entirely inadequate and insufficient; and it is worthy of remark, that the answer of the appellant does not directly assert that the price was full and adequate. On this point, the answer states, that he, the appellant, "did not regard the sale [qu. purchase?] as a profitable one, at the time, situated as he was, and considering the condition of the property;" and after stating matters in depreciation of the value, arising from negligent husbandry and previous ill-treatment of the slaves, he concludes thus:—"It may be true, that "said property, injured and out of repair as it was, might 30 "have been worth more to some person residing upon the "same, and possessed of unemployed means to invest in "its purchase, than the sum which respondent agreed to "pay for the same; but when the uncertain sum to which "an annuity might ultimately amount, during the natural "life of said Doggett, the difficulty and expense of respon- "dent's raising money, and his remote residence from the "property, are properly considered, he contends that it "will appear that he agreed to pay a full, fair and ade- "quate price." This averment, so cautiously qualified, cannot be considered as meeting the allegation of the bill of complaint. Whether, under the circumstances in which he stood, the purchase was advantageous to him or not, he being under no obligation to purchase, is not the question; the gravamen of the complaint is, that the price at which he purchased, compared with the fair market value of the property, was wholly and entirely inadequate and insufficient; and clearly it is no answer to this allegation to say that, placed as he was, he could not, prudently, or advantageously to his interest, afford to pay a larger price than he did pay. The tenor of the answer, in this respect, would seem to imply a doubt on the mind of the appellant himself, whether he occupied, on this point of the case, any very strong position.

In ascertaining the value of the property, as well as the price or consideration paid, the court has reason to complain of the poverty of the proofs. This defect, however, is common to both parties, and but for the admissions of counsel upon the argument, in aid of the data furnished by the record, we would have found no little difficulty in coming to a satisfactory conclusion. Of the property conveyed, there were one hundred and seventy-eight slaves; the value of those on the plantation in Jefferson county, one hundred and sixteen in number, is estimated by one witness, (Teat,) at the average price of $300 each. Another 31 witness, speaking of the general price of slaves, and disclaiming all particular knowledge of those in question, fixes the market price at an average of $275. It is true that Dr. Elliott, who claims to have a personal knowledge of these slaves, speaks in very disparaging terms of them; he describes them as sickly, feeble, &c., the result of ill-treatment, and insufficient feeding and clothing; but the testimony of Teat, who was the overseer of Jefferson County plantation for the years 1843 and 1844, and whose term of service expired just three months before the sale, is in direct and positive contradiction to the statement of Elliott. And Mr. N. Thompson, a near neighbor of Doggett, and who was a frequent visitor at his house, examined by appellant, must be considered as confirming and fortifying the evidence of Teat. He is asked—"Do you or "not, know the condition of the plantation and negroes, "and other property, sold by the defendant, Doggett, to "said Barrow, at the time of the sale? Were the planta- "tions in good repair, or greatly dilapidated Were the "said negroes in good health, or were they sickly, feeble, "badly fed and badly clothed?" And he answers, "that "the general appearance of the plantation, negroes, &c., "was about the same as the neighboring plantations." The testimony of Mr. Branch has been relied on as supporting the testimony of Dr. Elliott; but this evidence is very uncertain and indefinite; he says he had no personal knowledge of the property, or its condition—that Doggett's negroes "were said to be an unusually sorry lot." This is not stated even to have been general reputation; nor does he say from whom he received the information. It may have been from the appellant, or from Dr. Elliott, in which case it would not add to the value of the statement of either. It would rather seem, from the deposition, that he was simply echoing the allegations of Barrow, for he adds, 32 "and Barrow urged these as reasons for not desiring to purchase, except on favorable terms." The court is disposed to take the average given by Gov. Moseley, $275, as the fair average value of Doggett's slaves, especially as it is asserted in the answer that there were but few small children in the gangs. This will give, as the value of the slaves the sum of $48,950

The plantation in Jefferson county is proved by Gov. Moseley to be worth from $6 to $7 per acre; it contained, including the adjacent eighth of land, 712 acres. Taking a price between the two sums given, say $6.50 per acre, the value will be $4,628

The other personal property, consisting of 42 horses and mules; 4000 bushels of corn; 22,000 lbs. of bacon, and other provisions; stocks of cattle and hogs; wagons, and other plantation tools and utensils, &c., &c., taking the valuation of Teat as to that on the Lake plantation, less the excess of 4000 bushels of corn, and estimating that on the Home place on the same basis, it will amount to the sum of $7,178

The aggregate of which amounts to . . $60,756
which are all the values proved by the witnesses.

To the sum so found, may be added the value of the Home place, containing 2000 acres, which is not at all proved, but which counsel for appellant estimate at the price or value of $2.50 per acre, which certainly must be a low estimate for a plantation on which was kept a gang of 62 slaves, and a team of twenty horses and mules for its cultivation; this will amount to the further sum

Barrow vs. Bailey—Opinion of Court.

Adding also the several detached tracts of land in the vicinity of the Home place, described in the deed, and containing, from description, 480 acres, the specific value of which, although not proved, is now estimated at the same price, $2.50 per acre, making $1,200 and the aggregate of these sums, . . . $6,200 added to the former aggregate, will make the value of the whole property, so far as proved and estimated, the sum of $65,756. The court cannot but think that the value of the home place is greatly under-rated in the estimate put upon it; and that if proper care had been exercised in the preparation of the cause for the hearing, the fact would have been demonstrated, and the aggregate of values considerably increased. The deed conveys other lands, by the general description of "all the lands of said Doggett lying and being in the county of Madison;" and the same remissness is found in regard to this property. There is no proof of quantity, quality or value. And so also the answer of the appellant admits that, although he declined to accept from Doggett a transfer of his contract for the purchase of the 1203 acres of land, and states that the same was designedly omitted to be inserted in the conveyance, yet he went into possession of it, under Doggett, and occupied and cultivated 500 acres from the time of the purchase, and at the time of his answer, was still in possession. This use and occupation of 500 acres of land, so acquired in right of Doggett, was of some value, and may be fairly considered, as it is very plain, from the answer, the appellant considered it, an acquisition consequent upon the purchase of the estate, to a part of which it was contiguous.

34 Having thus ascertained the value of the property sold, it now remains to look to the price or consideration paid therefor. Upon the argument, much stress was laid upon the allegation in the answer of the appellant, that he "gave more than any of the creditors would offer;" and upon the fact that the property had been offered for sale to sundry persons, without success. As to the allegation of the answer, it cannot, on any just principle, form the criterion of value. The proofs show that Doggett offered all his property for the consideration of the payment of all his debts, and the settlement upon himself of an annuity of five or six hundred dollars per year, during the term of his natural life. The offer was made to Messrs. Branch and Noah L. Thompson, and John W. Cotten. Did any of them refuse to accept the offer because the property was not worth that price? No such ground of refusal was assigned by either. Mr. Branch states that his brother declined accepting the offer because "they had no money to "pay for it, and were unwilling to incur so large a debt "for an uncertain chance of even a good speculation." Mr. Thompson assigns no reason for the refusal of the offer by himself and John W. Cotten; and if resort is to be had to conjecture, as to what the cause probably was, it may with as much propriety, be supposed that they were deterred by the same prudential consideration, as to suppose they declined because the price demanded exceeded the true value. These offers and refusals are not sufficient to furnish any indication as to the fair market price. And so with the offer said to have been subsequently made by the appellant, Dr. Mitchell, to take the bargain off his hands. There is no doubt but that the offer spoken of by Mr. Branch is the same which is mentioned in the answer of appellant, and reference will be had to the latter, as being the most precise statement of the occurrence. The offer is there stated to be, that he would transfer the pur- 35 chase to any one who would refund to him his expenses, and pay a reasonable remuneration for his labor, time and trouble, in visiting Florida, and making all the arrangements and examinations which were previously recited in the answer. It does not appear what was the amount alluded to as expenses, and reasonable remuneration for labor, time, and trouble; and whether, if stated, any one would concur with the appellant, on the subject of the reasonableness of the amount; nor why Dr. Mitchell rejected the offer. In fine, it proves nothing; not even Dr. Mitchell's opinion as to the value, for it is impossible to say what was the motive of his refusal. It may have been that he foresaw a troublesome litigation in the future, and was not willing to pay a premium for the right to participate in it.

The consideration of the purchase stated on the face of the deed, is the sum of forty-five thousand dollars, paid at or before the execution of the instrument, and an annuity of $500 during the life of the vendor. The original answer, filed on the 20th April, 1849, responding to the discovery prayed for in the bill, states that "the manner and times "of paying the said sum of $45,000, was not set down spe- "cifically in writing, but was verbally agreed upon," as follows, viz: $15,234.94 to be paid to Bellamy's estate, and the sum of $2,395.98 to be paid to Noah Teat, which sums were to be paid in satisfaction of executions then levied, and were so paid; the further sum of $5,000 was to be paid to Doggett, to be applied to the discharge of debts alleged to be due in North Carolina, and was so paid to him; and the residue, amounting to $22,379.78, was to remain in the purchaser's hands, without interest, until the same could be applied, under the direction of Doggett, to the discharge of certain other debts, the amount of which could not then be ascertained, and one of which was in lit- 36

These debts are stated as follows: To Holbrook, Nelson & Co., of New York, about $2,550; to J. & L. Branch, $1,250; to Long & Walker, $1000; to John B. Doggett, about $250; to William D. Moseley, $1,261.24; to the Union Bank, stock bond and mortgages amounting to $16,800; and sundry other debts, amounting to $12,263.87; and to indemnify John W. Cotten, in whole or in part, against a note for about $15,000, due to Dr. Mitchell, and on which Cotten was security for said Doggett. But in no event were the payments made, and to be made, to exceed the sum of $45,000, specified in the deed; and if the obligation could be discharged with a less sum, the appellant was to be entitled to the residue, as a compensation for his trouble and personal expense in superintending the adjustment thereof. But by a supplemental answer, filed on or about the 20th of October, 1850, it is alleged by the appellant that there was a written agreement, exhibiting the terms of the said sale and purchase, and the manner and times of paying the said purchase money, which agreement had been, at the time, left in the custody of Mr. Branch, one of his solicitors, who was absent when the original answer was prepared, and the existence of the paper was utterly forgotten by the appellant, until found by Mr. Branch, and returned to his possession. By this agreement, the sum of $45,000 was to be thus paid: In cash, $20,500; to Dr. J. W. Mitchell, a note on which Cotten is security, for between $15,000 and $16,000; and lastly, to pay a sum not exceeding $10,000, in discharge of the debts due the Union Bank.

The answer also corrected various errors in the payments alleged by the original answer to have been made to creditors. It is certainly extraordinary that the fact of 37 the existence of this paper, which was the only evidence of the appellant's obligation to pay a large sum of money, as well as the mode and manner of payment which is prescribed, should have passed so completely from his memory; for it will be observed, on comparison of the two statements, that there is a material difference between them. But the explanation given in the supplemental answer, amounting for the excess of the cash payment beyond that stipulated for ($26,871 having been paid, instead of $20,500,) presents a still more strange state of the case. It is stated, that "this excess of payment arose from various "causes; in the first place, respondent acted upon the hy- "pothesis that the argument was as is stated in the orig- "inal answer, the written agreement aforesaid, owing "probably, to subsequent verbal conversations and agree- "ments, having been entirely lost sight of." This allegation raises a well founded doubt whether the court is yet in possession of the actual agreement, or that on which the minds of the contracting parties finally settled; a circumstance in itself which tends to negative the good faith of the transaction. It does not appear from the evidence, or any admission in the pleadings, that any one was present during the negotiation between the parties, which resulted in this sale; although the fact that such negotiation was pending, seems to have been known to several of the witnesses who have been examined. Nothing, therefore, can be known of what transpired during their interviews, save what they may think proper to disclose and make public. Nor does there appear to have been any reference to mutual friends or neighbors on the question of value. The advice given by Ld. Coke, grounded on the resolution of the Judges in Twyne's Case, (3 Co. R., 80,) to creditors who are about to accept satisfaction of their demands by a transfer of property from their debtor, to "let it be made

38 in a public manner, and before the neighbors, and not in private," &c.; and "to let the goods and chattels be appraised by good people to the very value, &c.," would seem to be peculiarly appropriate to a case like the present, where the sale of the whole estate of a debtor greatly embarrassed, for the price contemplated, would be likely to produce insolvency. For, besides the ready reference to the witnesses to prove the good faith of the transaction, if impeached, such a course would be well calculated to disarm suspicion, even in the minds of creditors whose claims are prejudiced thereby. We do not wish to be understood as holding that such a course of conduct is necessary, but merely that the adoption or omission of such cautionary measure would not be without influence on the question of fraud or no fraud, in connection with other circumstances.

Proceeding in the examination as to the manner in which this consideration or price was actually paid: it appears that the following sums were in discharge of the executions levied upon the slaves, and which constituted a lien thereon:

To Bellamy's administrator, for principal, interest and costs,	$13,696.84
To Teat, for same,	195.98
To Willis, for same,	1,203.58
To Murphy, for same,	463.51
Making	$15,559.91
And there was paid to Henry Doggett, to be applied to the payment of alleged debts due in North Carolina,	$5,000

Certain other payments are claimed in the original answer to have been made, but at what time is not stated; neither are they stated otherwise than from memory, the vouchers being in the possession of absent agents, and 39 which were to be subsequently produced; but which are not found in the record, nor any evidence in relation thereto, save that found in the testimony of Mr. Branch, who proves the payment to himself and brother of $1,250, and Long and Walker of $750. But as the fact of these payments has not been controverted in the argument, they will be assumed to have been made at or about the same time, viz:

To Messrs. Holbrook, Nelson & Co.,	$2,550.00
To Messrs. J. & L. Branch,	1,250.00
To Messrs. Long & Walker,	1,000.00
To the Sheriff, for John B. Doggett, about	250.00
To William D. Moseley,	1,261.24

And showing the entire cash payment to amount to $26,871.15.

It is contended, on behalf of the respondent, that this sum was all that Barrow really paid for the property; that the estate, being large, must have yielded a large annual income; and having had possession of the property for five years before any other payment was made, the subsequent payments were made out of the issues and profits made by him. The position is certainly plausible; but the payment of the Mitchell debt, as well as the sum to the Union Bank, being secured by the written contract, it is sufficient to give him the character of a purchaser for value to that extent. (Seward vs. Jackson, 8 Cow. R., 454.) In addition to this, the Union Bank debt was due, by mortgage, on a portion of the property conveyed. But the payments so made are not to be computed as of their full amount, in ascertaining the value or amount of the consideration paid. The payment to Mitchell of the sum of $15,955 having been deferred for the period of four years, 11 months and 40 10 days, for the purpose of this investigation, the court must ascertain the value of that sum, so deferred, at the time of the transaction, viz: the 3d of April, 1845. Assuming the value of money to be worth an interest of 8 per cent. per annum, the value of the sum of $15,955, deferred for the time specified, at compound interest, is $10,903.58, and at simple interest, is $11,432.71. Taking the latter sum as the most favorable to the appellant, the aggregate of consideration, as of the 3d of April, 1845, is increased thereby to the sum of $38,303.77.

It was also stated on the argument, by appellant's counsel, that at some period of time, intermediate the filing of the supplemental answer and the hearing of the cause in the Circuit Court, Mr. Barrow had discharged the debt due the Union Bank, by the payment of the sum of $8,500. Assuming this payment to have been made six years after the sale, and computing the value of that sum, so deferred, in the same manner, interest being calculated at 8 per cent. per annum, it will be found to be, at compound interest, $5,356.44, and at simple interest, $5,743.24. Taking the latter sum, and adding it to the former aggregate, it will make the sum of $44,047.01, which is the consideration price paid by Barrow to Doggett for the property conveyed, excluding the annuity, computed as cash, on the 3d of April, 1845.

To ascertain the entire consideration, the annuity is to be added; and here, again, the court must complain of the want of sufficient data on which to form an accurate judgment as to the value.

The only information is that furnished by the answer of the appellant, in which Doggett is described as "diseased, old, infirm, and unable to superintend" his business; and, again, in another paragraph, "as an aged and infirm 41 man." The market value of an annuity, it is true, as ar gued by one of the appellant's counsel, is a matter capable of ascertainment by calculation, and, in older settled communities than this, annuities are a frequent subject of sale and purchase. The calculations of value, however, are all based on the probable duration of life at the various ages of man; to ascertain which, tables have been constructed, founded upon observations made in various parts of the civilized world, as to the decrement of human life. The evidence is deficient here in failing to furnish the court with the age of the annuitant, and also of the nature or character of the disease, so that it might be ascertained if it be one which is considered as tending to shorten or render precarious the probable average duration of his life. The court must make a guess, however, and give the appellant the benefit of it. Assuming that Doggett was sixty-five years of age, an annuity for five hundred dollars for his life, might have been purchased for about the sum of $3,700. This is a liberal calculation; for an annuity for a man of that age, in good health, is not worth more tha. seven or eight years purchase, and Doggett is represented as being exceedingly infirm, from disease. This sum added to the former aggregate, will make the whole price, money and annuity, amount to the sum of $47,747, a sum, less than the value of the property, as proved and estimated, by the sum of $19,009.

Upon the argument on this point, it was urged that, by the terms of the agreement between Doggett and Barrow, the latter was to pay, if necessary, to the Union Bank, a sum exceeding that actually paid of $1,500; and also that Mitchell claimed from Doggett a much larger sum that he recovered, and which Barrow had good reason to believe might have been recovered, and which he would, in such case, have been bound to pay; and therefore, this contin-42 gency should be taken into the account, and these sums being added to those actually paid, the aggregate thereof should be regarded as the true sum agreed to be paid. Concede this, together with the accuracy of the calculation made by the counsel for the appellant, and while it affords no aid to the appellant's case, (Ardglasse vs. Muschamp, 1 Vern. R., 237,) it furnishes proof that the property was in fact worth more than the estimate now put upon it; for no one can suppose, from the evidence in this record, that Barrow even contemplated paying more for the property than he considered it worth; and yet the argument is, that he did agree to pay more than he actually paid, if certain contingencies happened. But as the contingencies did not happen, and no more was paid than has been before stated what is to become of the excess, or overplus? It is claimed, in the original answer, that it is to enure to the benefit of Barrow, as a compensation for his "trouble and personal expense in managing the affairs of the said Doggett, "and superintending the defence of the litigation with "Mitchell, and other suits." There is no proof of any such agreement between Doggett and himself; and if there was, if it did not amount to the offence of champerty, it would savor so strongly of it, that the appellant would not be permitted to set up the agreement in any court.

There is no rule in our law as to what disparity between the real value of the property and the consideration paid, will, in any case, constitute inadequacy of price; but the court must ascertain this from the facts and circumstances of each particular case. We fully appreciate the difficulty of passing upon this question of inadequacy, and feel the force of the remarks of Ld. Ch. Baron Eyre, in Griffith vs. Spratly, (1 Cox R., 383,) that the value of a thing is what it will produce, and admits of no precise standard; that it must be, in its nature, fluctuating and dependent on many and various circumstances; and we 43 would not undertake to pass upon the question, where the sale had been at public outcry, unless the price was such as would shock the conscience, or there was proof of conduct calculated to chill bidders, or other fraudulent intervention; nor in any case, even where the sale was by private contract, would we be disposed to "weigh the comparative values with golden scales." Adverting, however, briefly to the prominent facts and circumstances of the case, we find that the complainant in the court below is a creditor whose debt is secured by a judgment of record, in favor of his intestate, before the sale and conveyance complained of. We find the debtor deeply embarrassed, yet possessing property more than sufficient to satisfy the demands against him, estimating the value at a fair market price; of advanced age and infirm from disease; harrassed by the apprehension that, when his property shall have been applied to the payment of his debts, he will be left in the evening of his life, a pensioner upon the charity of others; expressing anxiety, it is true, to make provision for the payment of his debts, yet evidently more anxious to provide for his future support and maintenance; finally, disposing of his estate to a friend and relative, whom he had summoned from a distance to make the purchase, at a price considerably less than the market value, and less than the sum of all his debts, yet securing an annuity for his future support. Turning to the purchaser, the court finds him fully apprised of the condition of his vendor's pecuniary affairs, and with notice of the existence of the debt due to Bellamy's estate, purchasing the entire estate, real and personal, of his debtor, for a sum in gross considerably below the market value, knowing that this debt was not fully provided for, and having no just reason to believe the debtor to be otherwise able to provide for its liquidation. Couple with these facts the other circumstances, namely: that, al- 44 though it was known that a negotiation was pending between these parties for a sale and purchase of property yet that the conference between them was secret; that there was no appraisement, or estimate of value, by any disinterested third person; the doubt, raised by the supplemental answer of the appellant, whether the court is yet in possession of the last and final understanding and agreement of the parties in relation to the consideration of the sale; the avowal of the design by the purchaser, to prevent the property from being sacrificed by creditors, and the retention of the possession of one of the slaves which the deed professes to sell and convey; and then, if the disparity between the value of the property and the price agreed to be paid therefor, as the consideration of the sale, be insufficient to "shock the conscience," or to furnish, of itself, conclusive evidence of fraud; if it would be wholly insufficient to enable the court to grant relief to the vendor himself, if he were here asking for it, yet the court cannot doubt but that the inequality is gross and manifest enough, combined with the other circumstances mentioned, to make the transaction, as against creditors, fraudulent, by construction of law; nor can we hesitate to declare it so.

It will be recollected that, in the computation of values, by which the disparity of $19,000 was ascertained, there was included, in the calculation of the consideration paid, the value of the annuity settled upon Doggett, amounting to $3,700; and there was also included therein the further sum of $5,000, which was paid to Doggett upon the sale, to be used, as it is said, for the payment of debts in North Carolina, but of the application of which, or even of the existence of any debts in that State, on which a presumption of such application might be founded, there is no evidence. The aggregate of these two sums, added to the deficiency before mentioned, will make $27,700; and the effect of this transaction, as thus shown, was to withdraw that sum from the just claims of creditors, out of an estate of the value of $66,700. This conduct is wholly irreconcilable with that of one who is desirous to pay all his debts, and can only be accounted for upon the hypothesis of a design to hinder and defraud creditors.

From the facts and circumstances before alluded to, the purchaser must be taken to be privy to the intent, and so far as the payment of $5,000, and the payment for the annuity for four years, mentioned in the answer, should be postponed, if necessary, in favor of the complaining creditor. In Hawkins vs. Moffat, (10 B. Monr. R. 81,) where a man greatly embarrassed sold all his interest in an estate, worth $1,169, for the consideration of $465, in discharge of debts, and ten years board, and clothing for five years, to be enjoyed after the sale, it was held to be manifestly fraudulent, and was declared void as against creditors. The transaction, in that respect, presented no stronger marks or badges of fraud than are to be found in this case.

The decree remains to be considered. At law, upon the question of the validity of a deed, or other conveyance, the court can hold no middle course; it must be decided on the single point of validity, and held to be either wholly good or wholly bad. If it is found to be fraudulent, the creditor comes in and avoids it all, without repayment of the consideration money; but in equity such is not the rule, except where actual fraud and covin are found to exist. Boyd vs. Dunlap, 1 John. Ch. R., 478; Sands vs. Codwise, 4 John. Ch. R., 536, 598. In equity, where a security or conveyance is found to be constructively fraudulent, it is upheld in favor of one not guilty of any actual fraud, to 46 the extent of the actual consideration, and is vacated only as to the excess; and so, when the property is of greater value than the consideration, the conveyance may be impeached as being voluntary, to a partial extent, and, if there be no actual fraud, will be sustained to the extent of the consideration, and vacated as to the residue, or the grantee be decreed to be, as to such residue, a trustee for creditors. Wright & Cooke vs. Stanard, 2 Brock. R., 314; McMeckin vs. Edmonds, 1 Hill Ch. R., 294; Boyd vs. Dunlap, 1 John. Ch. R., 478; Wickes vs. Clarke; 8 Paige R., 161, 172; Herne vs. Meeres, 1 Vern. R., 465; Grove vs. Watt, 2 Sch. & Lef. R., 492; How vs. Weldon, 2 Ves. Sr., 516; Sandford vs. Wheeler, 3 Conn. R., 165. Chancellor Kent, in Boyd vs. Dunlap, expresses his approbation of this principle of limited interference, by allowing the deed to stand as a security for any sum really due, or paid by the grantee, and observes that, "Nothing can be more equitable "than this mode of dealing with these conveyances, of "such indecisive and dubious aspect that they cannot either "be entirely suppressed or entirely supported, with satis-"faction and safety."

The decree pronounced in this cause, in the Circuit Court, seems to present an inconsistency in its several clauses. The first clause directs the arrears of the annuity secured to Doggett under the deed of the 3d of April, 1845, to be paid the creditor, William Bailey, to be applied towards the satisfaction of the debt due to the estate of his intestate, which would appear to be a proper direction, upon the assumption of the entire validity of the conveyance; while the second clause declares the same conveyance to be fraudulent and void as against the complaining creditor, and the property specified therein, and conveyed thereby, to be liable to his execution, and directs a sale of the whole or such part thereof, under the writ, as shall be sufficient to satisfy it. It is clearly erro- 47

neous, on the principle heretofore laid down, and must be reversed and set aside, and the proper decree entered in this court.

The following judgment was entered in this cause:

The court having maturely considered the transcript of the records of the proceedings of this cause, and the arguments of counsel, and now being fully advised of his judgment, to be given in the premises, it seems to the court here that the decree of the Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit, sitting as a Court of Equity, in and for the County of Jefferson, rendered in this cause, is erroneous, and should be reversed.

Therefore, it is considered by the court here that the said decree be reversed and set aside.

And the court here, proceeding to render such decree as the court below ought to have rendered, for the reasons, and upon the considerations set forth in the opinion delivered herein, doth think fit and proper, and so orders and decrees, that the said deed of conveyance from Henry Doggett to the appellant, mentioned and specified in the bill of complaint, and other proceedings in this cause, and exhibited therewith, bearing date of the 3d day of April, 1845, is in construction of law deemed, and is hereby declared, fraudulent as to the rights of the complaining creditor, William Bailey, administrator de bonis non of John Bellamy, deceased. And that, as against his claim, the said deed of conveyance be set aside as an absolute conveyance but to be valid as to the extent of all such sums of money as have been in good faith advanced and paid, by the said David Barrow, on account of said purchase, and to stand, remain and enure as a security, to the said David Barrow, 48 for the same.

And the court doth further order, that said David Barrow, as to the property, real and personal, conveyed in and by said deed to him, be, and he is hereby declared a trustee for the benefit of himself and the said William Bailey, administrator as aforesaid; first, to reserve and receive for himself reimbursements for the sums of money advanced and paid by him as aforesaid; and secondly, to pay, satisfy and discharge such sum as may be found due for principal and interest, and costs, upon the execution awarded by the said Circuit Court in Jefferson County, upon scire facias, on the 27th of November, 1848, in favor of said William Bailey, administrator as aforesaid, against Henry Doggett, after applying the nett proceeds of the sale of the land, made under the interlocutory decree of the said Circuit Court, passed in this cause on the 16th October, 1849; and lastly retaining any overplus which may then remain for his own use and benefit.

And the said court doth think it further fit to order and decree, that it shall be at the election of the said David Barrow to pay, or cause to be paid, to the said William Bailey, administrator as aforesaid, or to his solicitor in this cause, the amount of his said debt and claim; principal, interest, and costs, on or before the first day of the next term of the Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit, to be held in and for the County of Jefferson, or to account before the said Circuit Court for the said property, and the issues thereof, as a trustee thereof, for the uses and purposes, and for the trust hereinbefore specified.

And this court doth further order and direct, that if the said Barrow shall not pay or cause to be paid, to the said William Bailey, administrator, or his solicitor, the said debt aforesaid, on or before the expiration of the time limited as aforesaid, then and in that case, he shall be held, deemed and taken, to have elected to account for said property, and the issues thereof, as trustee, before said court. And thereupon the said Circuit Court shall take effectual order by decree, according to the usual course and practice of equity proceedings, that said David Barrow on account as such trustee, and that the said property, real and personal, specified in and conveyed by said deed, be applied to the purposes of said trust, as herein declared. And the said accounting, and said application of the trust fund, be made according to the following principles, to-wit: First, that said David Barrow be charged with the value of the personal property other than the slaves, computing interest thereon from the 3d day of April, 1845; that he be charged with a fair annual rent for the lands, and fair annual hire for the slaves, with interest thereon from the expiration of each and every year. Secondly, that he be credited and allowed for all payments and advancements by him made, for and on account of said purchase, with interest on each item, from the time of advancement and payment thereof as aforesaid. Thirdly, that the said lands and slaves, specified and mentioned in, and conveyed by, said deed of the 3d of April, 1845, with the issue and increase of the female slaves, be sold by and under the direction of the proper officer of said court, at such time and in such manner, and upon such terms, as the said court shall, by its decree, ascertain, direct and appoint; and that the proceeds thereof be thus applied: First, to pay, satisfy and discharge the costs and charges of said sale, and of this cause, to be taxed and allowed according to the usual course of the court. Secondly, to pay, satisfy and discharge the balance, or residue, found due upon the account, to the said David Barrow for his advances and payments on account of said purchase, as aforesaid. And 50 thirdly, to pay, satisfy and discharge, the debt which shall be found due to the said William Bailey, administrator as aforesaid, upon his execution aforesaid, against the said Henry Doggett. And lastly, to render and pay the surplus, if any, to the said David Barrow; Provided, however, That if the proceeds of said sale be found insufficient to pay the said debt or claim of the said William Bailey, administrator as aforesaid, as well as all the balance found due to the said David Barrow, as aforesaid, then and in that case, the payment made by the said David Barrow to the said Henry Doggett, of $5,000, on the 6th of April, 1845, and all payments made by him to said Doggett on account of said annuity, secured in and by said deed, be deferred, and postponed in favor of the debt, or claim of said William Bailey, administrator as aforesaid.

And this court doth further order that this cause be remanded to the said Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit, sitting in and for the County of Jefferson, and that this decree be certified to the said court, and be entered on the record as the decree in this cause, and that such further directions, orders, and decrees, be made by said Circuit Court in this cause, as may be requisite and necessary to carry out and make effectual the decree rendered herein: and also such other and further proceedings be had in this cause as may be consistent with the opinion and decree of this court, and in conformity with the usual course of proceedings in equity.

And this court doth further order and decree, that in this court, each party pay his own costs, to be taxed by the clerk.

SARAH A. LINES, APPELLANT, vs. HENRY D. DARDEN, AND ELOIZA DARDEN, HIS WIFE, APPELLEES. 51

1. In the construction of a will, the intention of the testator, as therein expressed, shall prevail over all other considerations, if consistent with the principles of law. To this first and great rule in the exposition of wills, all others must bend.

2. Courts allow of no rule of construction of mere words to control the intention, but the whole instrument is to be considered, and if possible, effect given to every part of it.

3. The relative situation of the parties, the ties and affections subsisting between them, besides the motives which would naturally influence the mind of the testator, are proper to be considered in expounding the import of doubtful words.

4. The words "will and desire," when addressed to an Executor, are imperative, and it is his duty to carry out the wishes of his testator, if possible and when consistent with the will; but these words are not, in all cases, necessarily addressed to the Executor.

5. Where a testator, by one clause of his will, gives and bequeaths to his "beloved and only daughter," all of his estate, both real and personal, during her natural life, and at her death directs the property to be equally divided between the children of the tenant for life: and by another clause expresses his "will and desire" to be, that should either of his grand-sons arrive at the age of twenty-one, or any of his grand-daughters marry, previous to the time of final distribution, then that such grand-son, or such grand-daughter, shall receive a portion of the estate as a loan, to have the management and receive the benefit of the same until the final distribution shall take place, when the property thus loaned shall return to the estate to be equally divided: HELD, that the will did not create a trust for the benefit of the grand-children, but merely vested a power in the daughter (the tenant for life) to be exercised at her discretion.

6. To constitute a trust, three circumstances must concur: sufficient words to raise it—a definite subject—and a certain and ascertained object. No commendatory terms of a will expressing a "wish," "will," or "desire," &c., are sufficient, unless there be certainty as to the parties who are to take, and what they are to take.

7. Whenever the subject to be administered as trust property, and the objects 52 for whose benefit it is to be administered, are to be found in a will, not expressly creating a trust, the indefinite nature and quantum of the subject, as well as the indefinite character of the objects, are always used by courts as evidence that the mind of the testator was not to create a trust.
8. The words "will and desire," are not necessarily mandatory. They would be sufficient to raise a trust, if not coupled with the words inconsistent with such construction.

9. The statute of distributions affords no rule to determine the extent of a legatee's interest.

10. A Court of Equity will aid a defective execution of a mere power, unless it is inequitable to others; but in its non-execution, it assumes no jurisdiction.

11. A party who seeks the aid of a Court of Equity in executing a power, must show in himself some superior equity to him against whom it is asked. Where the equities are equal, the court will not compel the donee to do that which he will not do for himself, but will remain passive.

12. Equity will not even aid a defective execution of a power to the disinheritance of the heir at law.

13. The soundness of the doctrine of illusory appointments, as connected with discretionary powers, questioned.

This cause was brought up by appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for Gadsden County, sitting in Chancery.

Henry D. Darden and Eloiza Darden, his wife, appellees in this court, and complainants in the court below, filed their bill against Sarah A. Lines, Benjamin S. Hawley, and Elizabeth, his wife, John W. Goldwire, and Sarah Jane, his wife, John W. Poindexter, and Harriet, his wife, J. Lawrence Lines, and Joseph R. Lines, claiming that by the last will and testament of Jonathan Robinson, deceased, a trust was created for their benefit, which the appellant, Sarah A. Lines, failed to execute, and asking the court to compel the execution of the trust thus created. The will, upon the provisions of which this claim is based, is in the following words, viz:

In the name of God, amen. I, Jonathan Robinson, of the County of Gadsden, and Territory of Florida, being of sound mind, but weak and feeble in body, knowing the 53 uncertainty of life, and impressed with the solemn duty which is incumbent upon us, of settling our earthly affairs previous to the great change from time to eternity, do make and ordain this my last will and testament, hereby revoking and annulling all others.

Imprimis.—I desire the whole of my estate, with the exceptions, if any, hereinafter mentioned, to be kept together until all my just debts be paid, out of the proceeds and profits thereof.

Item.—I give and bequeath to my beloved and only daughter, Sarah Ann Lines, all of my estate, both real and personal, during her natural life, with the exceptions and restrictions hereinafter mentioned, and at her death, I hereby direct the same to be equally divided among her children, share and share alike. Provided, however, nevertheless, that if my said daughter, Sarah Ann Lines, shall intermarry, subsequent to my death, then, in that case, I devise all my estate, both real and personal, originally devised to her, with the exceptions and restrictions hereinafter mentioned as aforesaid, unto Joseph Austin, his heirs, &c., in trust and for the use and behoof of my daughter, Sarah Ann Lines, and her heirs, to her own, sole, separate and exclusive use, free from the power and control of her husband, and not liable to his debts, in any manner or form whatsoever.

Item.—Should either of my grand-sons arrive at the age of twenty-one years, or any of my grand-daughters marry previous to the time of final distribution, viz: before the death of my daughter, Sarah Ann Lines, then, in that case, my will and desire is, that such grand-son so arriving at the age of twenty-one years, or such grand-daughter so marrying as aforesaid, shall receive a portion of the estate as a loan, to have the management, and receive the benefit of the same, until the final distribution shall take place, 54 and then to return the same to be equally divided with the rest of my estate.

Item.—I do give and bequeath unto Miss Sarah Lowther the sum of ten thousand dollars, and do hereby authorize my executors to pay over the same to her, or her authorized agent.

Item.—My desire is, that at my death my executors will collect or cause to be collected all my stock of cattle and dispose of the same to the best advantage.

Item.—My will and desire is, that my boy George, the carpenter, shall be allowed to choose his own employer, annually, during his lifetime, such employer, paying the sum of one dollar to my executors.

Item.—I give and bequeath to my grand-daughter, Elizabeth Hills, my negro boy Liberty, about five years old, over and above her share of my estate.

Item.—I do hereby appoint my daughter Sarah Ann Lines, and Joseph Austin, my executrix and executor, of this my last will and testament.

In testimony of all which, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this 19th day of September, Anno Domini 1838.

JONA ROBINSON, [Seal.]

Signed, sealed and published by testator, as his last will and testament, before us who have signed it in his presence, and in the presence of each other.

JOHN W. MALONE,
ARTHUR J. FORMAN,
HEZEKIAH HAWLEY,
S. B. STEVENS.

Eloiza Darden is a daughter of Mrs. Sarah A. Lines, as are also Elizabeth Hawley, Sarah Jane Goldwire, and Harriet Poindexter. J. Lawrence Lines, and Joseph R. Lines are her sons. Goldwire and wife, and Poindexter and wife, in their answers to the bill, insisted upon the 55 construction of the will claimed by Darden and wife. Sarah H. Lines, and the rest of the defendants, denied this construction, and insisted that the testator vested a mere power in Mrs. Lines, to be exercised at her discretion.

The court below, rendered a decree in favor of complainants, from which the appellant appealed.

J. T. Archer, (with whom was John E. Ward Esq., of Savannah, and P. Woodson White,) for appellant.

The devise in question, created, either:

1. A power in Mrs. Lines to loan a portion of the estate of the testator to each of her children during the term of her life, commencing at the time of the happening of the events specified—or,

2. A trust estate in Mrs. Lines, to apportion the estate, or some indefinite portion of it during the term of her life, to those appointed to take the same property in remainder.

I. If it is a mere power in Mrs. Lines, uncoupled with any trust, the non-execution of the power cannot be remedied in this court. Lewis on Trusts, 574. 1 Story Eq. Juris., § 169. Tollet v. Tollet, 2 P. Wms., 489. Brown v. Higgs, 8 Vesey, Jr., 561.

It is contended, however, that equity will relieve against the defective execution of a power; and as Mrs. Lines has given, or rather loaned to each of those in remainder who have arrived at the age of twenty-one, or married, some portion of the personalty, which they contend is not enough, it may be considered as a defective execution of the power, which may be supplied in this court.

But the principle does not apply to such a case as this. The defective execution of a power which the books treat of is—1. When the defect arises from an informal instrument, not within the scope of the power; and, 2. When the defect arises from the improper execution of the appro- 56 priate instrument. Se 1 Story Eq. Juris., Sec. 172, 173, 174, and authorities cited. Cockerill vs. Cholmley, 1 Russ. & M., 418.

Where there is a defect of substance, in the execution of a power, as the want of co-operation of all the proper parties in the act, equity will not aid the defect. 1 Story Eq. Juris., Sec. 175.

So, equity will not supply a surrender, or aid the defective execution of a power to the disinheritance of the heir at law. 1 Story Eq. Juris., Sec. 177.

It will be recollected that Mrs. Lines occupied the position of heir at law, and but for the will would be entitled to the estate in fee.

Nor, if this is a power, does the doctrine of illusory appointments, apply to the case.

All the cases referred to by Story, Hovenden, and other writers, are cases of such gross inequality in the division of an estate, under a power of appointment, as almost amounts to a fraud. See 1 Story Eq. Juris., Sec. 255, and the instances and authorities cited.

There is no pretence here, that the inequality of the different portions loaned to her children by Mrs. Lines, is so grossly unequal in amount as to amount to a fraud, but the complaint is, that under an authority to land "a portion," she has not lent enough; she has not surrendered enough to all.

In Butcher vs. Butcher, an appointment of £200 out of a fund of £18,000, to one of five children, was held not illusory. 9 Vesey, Jr., 381.

In Fronty vs. Fronty, the court in South Carolina objects to the doctrine, and says, that undertaking to say an appointment is illusory, is substituting the discretion of Lines vs. Darden and Wife—Argument of Counsel.

57 the court, for that of the person in whom it is confided. Bailey Eq. R., 530.

Upon a full view of the circumstances, and the relative position of the parties, it is evident that the intention of the testator was, that a discretion should be vested in and exercised by Mrs. Lines, in this particular. And for obvious reasons, it is thus referred. Mrs. Lines, the daughter of the intestate, and the primary object of the bounty intended, is to be supported; she, is therefore, and as a matter of course, to retain so much of the estate given her as will yield an income adequate to that end. Again, in the distribution of the portions, she is to be regulated by the condition of her children, at the time the contingencies happen, upon which she is to lend them "a portion" of the estate. One may marry a wealthy man, and not require any, or so much aid and assistance as another, who may marry a man of inferior property or wealth. One may be unfortunate, and may, from time to time, require more aid, —another may be improvident, &c. Of all these contingencies, she is constituted the judge, and her discretion, the rule.

If the clause under consideration does constitute a power, then it is a general one, and in its exercise, there can be no rule but the discretion of the party to whom it is confided. The discretion of the court is not to be substituted for the discretion of the party. Fronty vs. Fronty, Bailey Eq. R., 529, et seq. Bax. vs. Whitbread, 16 Vesey, Jr., 24. Wollen vs. Tanner 5 Vesey, Jr., 218. Long vs. Long, 5 Vesey, Jr., 445.

II. Does the third clause of the will create a trust which the courts will compel the execution of?

It is not claimed to be a direct trust but an indirect and constructive one, and that by force of the terms "will and desire."

58 While we concede, that at one time the Courts of England had gone great lengths in construing precatory and recommendatory words into creations of trusts, yet it will be perceived from the latter cases, that it is a subject of much regret that the doctrine was ever established; and the tendency of the court at the present day is not only to restrict the application of the doctrine, but to retrace as far as possible, the course of decision. 2 Story Eq. Juris., Sec. 1069-1070.

In Sale vs. Moore, the vice chancellor said, that the first case that construed words of recommendation into a command, made a will for the testator, &c. The current of decision, he adds, has of late years been against converting the legatee into a trustee. 2 Cond. Eng. R., 270.

Precatory words, such as, "I will," "I desire," have sometimes been held to create a trust, but these alone, are not sufficient. To constitute a valid trust, these circumstances must occur: 1. Sufficient words to raise it. 2. A definite subject to be conveyed; and, 3. A certain or ascertained object. Per Sir Wm. Grant, M. R., in the case of Cruwys vs. Coleman, 9 Vesey, Jr., 323. Meredith vs. Heneage, 2 Cond. Eng. Ch., 282. Lewin, on Trusts, 76.

1. Sufficient words to raise the trust.

The words may be imperative, yet are not necessarily so.

The subject matter, the situation of the parties, what was the probable intention, must be considered. Per Lord Loughborough, in the case of Meggison vs. Moore, 2 Vesey, Jr., 633. Malim vs. Keighly, 2 Vesey, Jr., 531.

Where there is a gift of the absolute ownership, a devise over in whatever terms conceived, is void. Malim vs. Keighly, 2 Vesey, Jr., 531.

In Brunson vs. Hunter, Chancellor Johnson says: Although the words, "it is my wish," are frequently held to import a direct devise or bequest, or to create a trust, and would generally so operate where the will contained noth 59 ing inconsistent with it, yet the rule is not so imperative as to compel us to do violence to the general intent in giving them that effect. And in the decision, the other members of the Court concurred. 2 Hill's Chy. R., 490.

And here again we invoke all the circumstances, the respective situation of the parties, the moral duty of the testator toward Mrs. Lines, an "only and beloved daughter," the life estate devised to her,—and we deny that the terms of the 3d clause of the will can be considered as importing a direct devise or bequest to, or as creating a trust in favor of the children of Mrs. Lines, as to the life estate devised to her; or that it was so intended.

The whole taken together, shows the intention of the testator to have been, to confer upon his daughter, Mrs. Lines, a life interest in the residuum of his estate, giving the remainder in fee to her children, combined with the expression of a desire, that in the exercise of a parental discretion, she might, on the happening of certain events, accelerate the enjoyment of the use of such portions of the property by the children respectively, as she might think fit, right, and proper to lend to them. It never could have been the intention of the testator to pass over his "only and beloved daughter," and make her children and the husbands of her daughters, the primary and principal objects of his bounty; giving to his "beloved" daughter but a fleeting interest, a proedia volantia, to subsist and continue, and the estate to be preserved until her sons should attain their majorities, and her daughters marry; then to turn over the property subject to an account for rents, issues, and profits, leaving her from thenceforth, to be a dependent upon her children, and the husbands of her daughters, for the common necessaries of life. It seems to be a libel on human nature to assert it, and yet such is the claim set 60 up in a Court of conscience, by a child against her parent!

But complainant's counsel say they do not ask all—they but seek that the estate shall be divided between the mother and her children, each taking an equal part, with an account from the mother's part of the rents, issues and profits from the marriage of the daughters respectively. And what will probably be left for the mother's portion after the account? In the argument, however, was the first indication of the amount of the share claimed; the bill is as indefinite as the will. But where is the authority for this partition? How are these proportions arrived at? From the opinions of the equity of the case formed by the complainants, or their counsel? Of one thing we are very certain—it is not found in the will of Jonathan Robinson. No rule of division can be predicated upon anything therein contained. If the position be true that she takes but a trust estate under the will of her father, then Mrs. Lines is not entitled to anything; for she is only to hold the legal title, for the use and benefit of her children.

On the contrary, we contend that the testator in the performance of a moral duty, as well as the gratification of his pleasure, to provide for his only child, intended to do so for the full period of her life; and the object of so framing the precatory or recommendatory clause, was to keep her children and the husbands of her daughters always dutiful during her life, by making the portion indefinite, and terming it a loan, to indicate that, if she complied with the wish, the title, which was vested in her for her life, should not be divested, but that she should always be in a position to exercise supervision and control over it. See Ld. Ch. Hardwicke's judgment in the case of Marlborough vs. Godolphin, 2 Vesey, Sen., 73.

The argument for the complainants is that the testator

Lines vs. Darden and Wife—Argument of Counsel.

61 intended to make the children independent of their mother; on the contrary, we think the reverse was the intention of the testator, and that our opinion is the only one fairly and rationally to be deduced from the peculiar provision. In seems as if it was to insure the continuance of a proper respect, that they were made dependent upon the mother's discretion.

2. But such construction of precatory or recommendatory words, (i. e. the creation of a trust,)) will not prevail, where either the objects intended to be benefited are imperfectly described, or the amount of property to which the trust should attach is not sufficiently defined; for the difficulty that would attend the execution of such imperfects trusts, is converted by the Court into an argument that no trust was really intended. Lewin on Trusts, 78. 1 Jarman on Wills, 338. Uncertainty of amount, Lechmere vs. Lavie, 7 Eng., Chy. R., 331. Sale vs. Moore, 2 Eng. Chy. R., 270. Tibbitts vs. Tibbitts, 19 Vesey, 664. Abraham vs. Allman, 1 Russell, 515. Wright vs. Atkins, 11 Eng. Chy. R., 83. Gilbert vs. Chapin, 19 Conn. R., 342-5.

The indefinite nature and quantum of the subject, and the indefinite nature of the objects, are always used by the Court as evidence that the mind of the testator was not to create a trust. Per Lord Eldon. Morice vs. Bp. of Durham, 10 Vesey R., 536. Pope vs. Pope, 10 Simons R., 1.

A wife, having a discretion given her, was held to take an absolute estate for life, without any binding trust in favor of the children. Thorp. vs. Owen, 2 Hare R., 607, cited in 2 Crabb on real property, Sec. 1773.

None of the cases where precatory words were held to be a trust, are like the case before the Court; they are all with respect to some estate to be enjoyed after the death of the person to whom the power is confided. There is not 62 one where a child, who is the heir at law, has been held a trustee for remoter kindred as to the estate devised. None where grand-children who are to take in remainder have been allowed to take a lion's share out of the life estate devised to the heir at law.

The quantum of property to be loaned is indefinite; the provision is, "shall receive a portion." Nothing can be more indefinite and uncertain, and it seems to illustrate most forcibly the principle of equity stated by Lord Eldon. It is evidence of the intention of the testator that he did not intend to create a trust, but confided entirely to the discretion of his daughter.

As to the cases of uncertainty and indefiniteness in the subject matter of a disposition by devise or bequest, see collection of them in 1 Jarman on Wills, 315, et seq. See also Lechmere vs. Lavie, 7 Eng. Chy. R., 331. Stubbs vs. Sargon, 2 Keen's R., 255-274. Ommauney vs. Butcher, 11 Eng. Chy. R., 144. Fowler vs. Garlike, 4 Eng. Chy. R., 403.

In Henry vs. Hancock, there was a devise to a female and if she married a man with less fortune than the property devised, then over to another so far as the deficiency existed. It was held that the devise over was void for uncertainty, 2 Dow's Parlm. Cases, 145-191.

In Peck vs. Halsey, a bequest of "some of my best linen" was held void for uncertainty. 3 P. Wms. R., 387.

In Bull vs. Kingston, a bequest of personal property to a trustee for the use of a married woman, with power to dispose of the same by will, and if no disposition, then as to what should be left over to others; held void for uncertainty. 1 Merivale R. 314.

In Wynne vs. Hawkins, a bequest to the wife of all testator's property, not doubting but that she will dispose of what should be left at her death to two grand-children, held uncertain what property was to be given, and there- 63 fore no trust raised. 1 Brown Ch. C., 179.

In Jubber vs. Jubber, a bequest of "a handsome gratuity" to the executor held void for uncertainty. 9 Simons R., 509. 9 Humphries, 302.

Those cases which were cited by the Counsel for complainant in the argument below, of seemingly very uncertain amounts, or values of property which had been supported as trusts, are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. Here there is not only uncertainty in the description of "a portion," but there is nothing in the will by which it may be rendered certain. There is no rule given to govern the loan, nor is there any state of facts by which the portion is to be or can be measured, and therefore the Court cannot "look with the eyes of trustees," and substitute its judgment for that of the individual.

For instance, in the case of Hewitt vs. Hewitt, cited in Lewin on Trusts, from 2 Eden's R., 332, was upon the subject of a fall of Timber by tenant for life, subject to the approval of certain trustees; there the Court substituted its officer in the place of the trustees, because this matter of cutting timber is, in England, reduced to a certain rule, being held to extend only to timber which was mature, and therefore fit to cut. The interposition of the trustees was to prevent waste by the tenant cutting such as were unfit.

In Maberly vs. Turton, cited from 14 Vesey, 499, the maintenance of the children was the question; a fact which could be ascertained, and therefore was referred to the master, to report upon the propriety of the application.

The principal authority on the subject, is said to be Gower vs. Mainwaring, and is cited in Lewin on Trusts, p. 578, and in which Ld. Hardwicke lays down the rule in these terms:—"Where trustees have power to distribute "generally, according to their discretion, without any 64
"object pointed out, or rule laid down, the court inter- "poses not, unless in case of a charity, which is differ- "ent," &c. In that case, there was a rule given to the trustees; they were to distribute among the settler's relations "where they should see most necessity." &c.

The case of Knight vs. Yarborough, cited from 1 Gilmer's Va. Reports, 27 was a question of illusory appointment, by will, by tenant for life disposing of the fee in the property, under a power, and is wholly inapplicable to the case at bar. So also Hudson vs. Hudson, cited from 6 Munf., 352, 356. A widow holding a life estate, with power of appointment after its determination of the fee among the testator's children, it was held that she could not exclude one of them. Neither is all applicable to the question involved herein.

The only analogous case which we have been able to bring to the notice of the court, is that of Burdett vs. Young. There the testator gave the residuum of his estate to his wife for her life. By a subsequent clause, he gave £1,000 each to two grand-children, on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, or marrying. The grand-children having married, brought their bill to obtain the legacies. Baron Price, who heard the cause, decreed that the legacies were payable only on the death of the tenant for life this decree was reversed by the Lord Chancellor on appeal, but his decree was reversed in the House of Lords, and the decree of Baron Price affirmed. See 3 Brown's Parliament Cases, 45.

W. G. M. Davis for appellees.

1. The language of the third clause of the will is imperative, and is addressed to the executor and executrix as such.

65 The bill of Robinson, the testator, should be construed as the will of the parent, he having put himself in loco parentis to the children. Story Eq., Vol. 2, Sec. 1111 and 1114.

The words used are such as have always been held to create a trust, unless controlled by the general intent. Harding vs. Glynn, 1 Atkins, 469; Eeles et ux. vs. England et ux., 2 Vernon, 466; 5 Iredell (1844) p. 422, 454; 3 Merivale, 437.

Technical words, or others which have received a legal definition, will be taken in the legal sense, unless, from the contents of the will, it plainly appear that the testator intended them in a different sense. Lovelass on Wills, 276.

The court will abide by the prima facie intention, the settled meaning of the words, unless driven out by strong, solid and rational interpretation, and plain inference drawn from the rest of the will. Dean vs. Test, 9, Vesey, Jr., 152, 154; Jones vs. Colbeck, 8 Vesey Jr., 42

The language is addressed to the executor and executrix as an express direction, and not to the legatee or devisee, Sarah A. Lines, and is not within the authorities cited as to bequests. 9 Pick., 395, 401; 10 Smede & Mar., 466; 1 Richardson S. C. Eq. R., 324; Lott vs. Meacham, Flor. R. '51, p. 144; 6 Mass., 37; 2 Story Eq., 976.

2. A totally different rule exists in cases where the testator addresses a direction as to his estate to an Executor, from that which prevails in cases of recommendations, requests &c., addressed to a person to whom a previous absolute estate has been given. Pierson vs. Garnett, 2 Brown C. C., 226; Cloudesly vs. Pelham, 1 Vernon, 411; Nolligan vs. Nolligan, 1 Brown C. Cases, 491; Remarks of Sir William Grant in case 8 Vesey, 22; Ericcson vs. Willard, 1 N. Hamp., 217; Burrough vs. Philcox, cited at page 345, 66 Part 2, Vol. 2, Tudor's Leading Cases; Foley vs. Parry, 2 Mylne & Keene, 299.

In case of a bequest addressed in terms to an executor, nothing short of an impossibility of ascertaining the intention of a testator, will induce a court to declare a bequest void. Pierson vs. Garnett, 2 Brown Ch. C., 38; Liley vs. Key, 23 Eng Ch., 581; 3 Harrison, 41; 5 Vesey Jr., 504; Gower vs. Mainwaring, 2 Vesey, 87; Jarman on Wills, 318, 319; Broad vs. Beavan, 1 Russell, 511; 10 Gill & Johnson, 159; Raikes vs. Ward, 23 Eng. Ch. 445; Thorpe vs. Owen, 24 Eng. Ch., 608; 6 Peters R., 68.

3. But where the relations subsisting between the parties are such as existed here, the courts assume the execution of the trust, notwithstanding the indefinite character of the language, because of the presumed intention that the object of the testator was to provide a benefit. See the opinion in Raikes vs. Ward and Thorpe vs. Owen, 23 E. Ch. R., 447; 5 Iredell, 452.

4. The undivided "portion" in the will, interpreted by the context and situation of the parties, evidently was meant for the share given to each grand-child, and the direction was that such a grand-child should have the use of the share, in marriage or majority, but not as absolute property, and therefore it is loaned.

Words may be inserted or changed to affect the intention, especially when the word in the will is in common use to express the same thing. Jarman on Wills, 441; 6 Peters' Rep., 68.

Insert the word "his" or "her share," in place of the word "portion," and the intent would be plain that the testator meant what I have just declared.

But as the intention of the testator was to give an advancement to the grand-children, on their coming of age or marriage, and is so admitted in the answer, then a rule is furnished by which the extent of the bounty intended 67 can be measured.

5. The ratio of distribution adopted was correct. The court adopted the statute of distributions as a good rule to go by, to prevent the bequest being void for uncertainty. 8 Vesey, 570.

M. A. Long on the same side.

John E. Ward, for appellant, concluded.

SEMMES, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The question presented in the argument on the demurrer, and on that part of the decree granting relief to two of the defendants, Goldwire and Poindexter, it is unnecessary to consider, inasmuch as they will be disposed of by one decision on the merits of the case.

The whole controversy arises out of a construction of the will of Jonathan Robinson, deceased; and in the consideration of this question, it is scarcely possible to travel through the numerous authorities commented on by counsel, and which have been pressed upon this court with great ability.

We must content ourselves with a reference to a few of the leading cases, in support of the conclusions at which we have arrived, after a careful review of them all. The second clause of the will is in the following words:—"I "give and bequeath to my beloved and only daughter, Sarah "Ann Lines, all by estate, both real and personal, during "her natural life, with the exceptions and restrictions here- "inafter mentioned; and at her death, I hereby direct the "same to be equally divided among her children, share "and share alike." Then follows a devise of this estate, in the event his daughter's marrying, unto Joseph Austin, "in trust for her own sole, separate and exclusive use."

The third clause, and under which the complainants 68 claim, is as follows:—"Should either of my grand-sons ar- "rive at the age of twenty-one years, or any of my grand- "daughters marry previous to the time of final distribu- "tion, viz: before the death of my daughter, Sarah Ann "Lines, then, in that case, my will and desire is, that such "grand-son so arriving at the age of twenty-one years, or "such grand-daughter so marrying, as aforesaid, shall re- "ceive a portion of the estate as a loan, to have the man- "agement, and receive the benefit of the same, until the "final distribution shall take place, and then to return the "same to be equally divided with the rest of my estate."

In behalf of the complainant, it is contended that the life estate created by the will in favor of Mrs. Lines, was subject to a trust in favor of the grand-children, to be executed respectively on the daughters marrying or the sons arriving at age; that the language of the will creating this trust is addressed to the executrix, and is imperative, and that complainant, Darden, in right of his wife, by reason of her marriage, is entitled to one-seventh part of said life estate, to be held by him until the final distribution provided for under the will. On the other hand, it is contended that an absolute life estate was created in Mrs. Lines, without restriction, and that the third clause of the will vested in her a mere power, to be exercised at her discretion.

In the construction of the will before us, we can but reaffirm, without adding to the doctrine, recognized by all legal writers, that the intention of the testator, as expressed in his will, shall prevail over all other considerations, if consistent with the principles of law. The intention is every thing; and to this first and great rule, in the exposition of wills, all others must bend. With an anxious desire to secure this leading object, the courts allow no

69 rule of construction of mere words, to control the intention, but the whole instrument is to be considered, and if possible, effect given to every part of it. The relative situation of the parties, the ties and affections subsisting between them, besides the motive which would naturally influence the mind of the testator, are proper to be considered, in expounding the import of doubtful words. 6 Peters, S. C. R., 68.

With these well settled principles to guide us, we have had but little difficulty in arriving at what we conceive to be the true interpretation of this will.

It is too manifest to admit of doubt, that the first and leading object of the testator, was to make ample provision, during life, for his daughter, and who it is reasonable to infer, was his only child.

To accomplish this purpose, and prompted in the discharge of a high moral duty, by the love and confidence which he felt for this his "only and beloved daughter," he bequeathed to her for life, his entire estate, with certain "exceptions and restrictions." And to guard against every contingency which might impair this provision, he secures the property in the event of her marriage, by the intervention of a trustee, for her sole, separate and exclusive use. This accomplished, he next provides for his grand-children, by securing to them, on the death of their mother, an equal share of the same property.

Such being the manifest design, and controlling motive, of the testator, in the testamentary disposition of his property, the power of this court is invoked, so to construe the third clause of the will, as to encumber the life estate with a trust, which must defeat the former, and leave the tenant for life with a bare pittance for her maintenance and support. In other words, we are called upon to execute a supposed trust, which, with but a nominal reservation, will 70 invest the remaindermen with the entire estate, they will be entitled to on the death of the tenant for life. Such could never have been the intention of a father to his child, much less the design of one who clothes his very bequest to her, in language eloquent with feeling and affection. If the intention of the testator was to create a life estate, and by the same instrument, and in the same breath to impair it, as the tenant for life, took the estate cum onere, with the restriction, we would feel bound to carry it out and execute the trust, though a libel on humanity. But we think it is very clear, that in the liberal bequests made to his daughter and her children, the testator never contemplated a preference of the latter, to the detriment and prejudice of the former.

It is contended by counsel, that the words "exceptions" and "restrictions," twice repeated in the second clause of the will, afford evidence from which the court is bound to infer that it was in the contemplation of the testator to impose a limitation or restraint on the life estate; and that this restriction is the trust, in favor of the children. If there was a trust, the argument of counsel, and his construction of the will as to the latter word, would undoubtedly be true. There is, however, some reason for believing that both words, certainly the former, have reference to the special bequests, and the direction of the testator, contained in the subsequent clauses of the will. For, in the first item, all the estate, both real and personal, with the exceptions and restrictions thereinafter mentioned, is given to his daughter, and then follows these words, "at her death, I hereby direct the same," that is, all the estate, with the same exceptions and restrictions, to be equally divided, &c., evidently showing that at the final distribution, the whole estate was still subject to the same exceptions and restrictions as the life interest of Mrs. Lines. We are rather disposed, however, to apply the word "restric- 71 tions," to the third clause of the will; for if the loan therein provided, was a mere power to be exercised or not, at the pleasure of the donee, yet, when exercised, the son or daughter receiving the property, would have the exclusive management, and receive the benefit of it, until the final distribution. And this exclusive use and control, may, without doing any violence in the construction of words, be considered as a restriction on the estate for life. Be all this as it may, it is sufficient, that if there are to be found no other restrictions in fact, upon the life estate, it is not for the court to conjecture a trust, in order to make the application.

We come now to consider the question, whether a trust is in fact created by the will? The words "will and desire," when addressed to an executor, are as contended, imperative, and it is his duty to carry out the wishes of his testator, if possible, and when consistent with the will. The words are not necessarily addressed to the executor. The object to be performed will usually afford a safe guide, in determning to whom they are addressed. And when a trust is raised, either by a declaration of the testator, or by intendment or implication of law, and no trustee is appointed, equity will follow the legal estate, and decree the person in whom it is vested, to execute the trust. 2 Story Eq. §976.

In this case, the legal title is not in Mrs. Lines, as executrix; for, after the payment of the debts, and the special bequests, her duties as the representative of the testator, had been accomplished, and the legal estate vested in her as the tenant for life. The possession of the property, and the legal title being in her, as legatee, the words of the will are addressed to her as such. Still, if a trust is raised, she is bound to execute it: if but a power, she can exercise it 72 at her pleasure.

If there be a trust, she is bound to give to each child an equal share of the estate, for equality would be equity. There is no rule by which she would be entitled, in her own right, to any part of it. The rule to be adopted, must be inflexible in its application, and it is manifest, if she be allowed anything, it would be as a gratuity, not as a right. The very construction of the will, which would allow her anything, would allow her all; and the converse of the rule would be equally true. If we say a trust is created by the will, we are bound to say it is without restriction in favor of the children. There is no possibility of escaping this conviction, for she holds the life estate for her own use, or for the exclusive use of these children.

To constitute a valid trust, three circumstances must concur; Sufficient words to raise it; a definite subject; and a certain and ascertained object. 9 Vesey, 323. No commendatory terms of a will expressing a "wish," "will," "desire," &c., are sufficient to create a trust, unless there be certainty, as to the parties who are to take, and what they are to take. Gilbert vs. Chapin, 19 Conn.. 342; 1 Russ. R., 509; 1 Simons, 542; 9 do., 320.

In the case of Gilbert vs. Chapin, the court adopts the doctrine assumed in 9 Simon's that the proportion which each child was to take, must first be ascertained. And this would seem to follow from the principle, that a trustee has no right, upon his own discretion, to make a distribution.

In Morice vs. the Bishop of Durham, 10 Vesey Ch. R., 520, one of the leading cases, the Lord Chancellor says, if neither the objects nor the subject are certain, then the words of request do not create a trust, and the property being uncertain and indefinite, it may be conceded the Lines vs. Darden and Wife—Opinion of Court.

73 testator meant to leave it entirely to the will and pleasure of the legatee, whether he would take upon himself that which is technically called a trust. Whenever the subject to be administered as trust property, and the objects for whose benefit it is to be administered, are to be found in a will, not expressly creating a trust, the indefinite nature and quantum of the subject, as well as the indefinite nature of the objects, are always used by the court as evidence that the mind of the testator was not to create a trust. And the difficulty that would be imposed upon the court to say what should be so applied, or to what objects, has been the foundation of the argument that no trust was intended.

It is upon the same well recognized principle—that where the intended subject matter of disposition consists of an indefinite part or quantity, the bequest fails for uncertainty—that gifts of a "handsome gratuity," "some of my best linen," "a part of my land," and numerous other gifts of similar import, have been held void. 9 Hump. R. 302; 1 Term., 130; 2 P. W., 874; Jarm. on Wills, 317. The words "will and desire," are not necessarily mandatory, nor does the question turn upon their grammatical construction. They would be sufficient to raise a trust, if they were not coupled with words inconsistent with such construction. Their import and signification depend not so much as to whom they are addressed, as the intention of the party using them, the act to be performed, and the certainty of the subject matter.

If in this case, (the object and the fund being certain,) the portion each grand-child was to take was clearly defined, the court could act on the desire expressed, and then it would be that the words would become imperative on the person to whom they were addressed, or the court whose duty it is to expound the will. But can we supply 74 by conjecture what the testator has failed to indicate in his will? It is true, that mere words of recomendation have been held by the English courts to create a trust in the immediate legatee, and, by some of the earlier decisions, such terms were construed to raise a trust where the persons who were to take and the property devised were doubtful. See 1 Vesey R., 336; 19 do., 29. In these cases, the court lost sight of the rule of construing the will by the instrument itself, and adopted a principle as uncertain in its application as the subject they were dealing with. The effect of these decisions was to substitute the court in the place of the testator; to raise a trust where none was contemplated, and to dispose of the estate without giving effect to the will.

Judge Story says the doctrine of thus construing expressions of recommendation, "wish" and "desire," into positive and peremptory commands, is not a little difficult to be maintained, upon sound principles of interpretation of the actual intention of the testator. It can scarcely be presumed that he should not clearly understand the difference between such expressions and words of positive command, and that in using the one and omitting the other, he should not have had a determinate end in view. 2 Story's Eq. Juris., § 1069.

The first case, it is said, that construed words of recommendation, &c., into a command, made a will for the testator. The current of decisions of late years, has been against coverting the legatee into a trustee; and the English courts have manifested a strong disposition to retrace their steps, and restrict the doctrine of recommendatory trusts by giving to the words of a will their ordinary sense, unless it is clear they were designed to be used as peremptory, (Jarm. on Wills, 338,) in which case, though precatory in form, they become imperative in fact.

There can be no doubt but that words of recommenda- 75
tion will create a trust, provided all the requisites are to be found in the will concurring for that purpose. They are held in many cases to import an imperative devise, and will so operate, if there is nothing in the will inconsistent with such a construction. The true question, in every case, is, whether the intention of the testator is manifest and mandatory in favor of the object of the bounty, or is merely suggestive and advisatory to the first taker? If the testator in this case designed to determine the specific amount which his daughter should loan to her children, why should he not have said so in his will? Why leave a matter of such importance to speculation and inference, and that, too, of the most doubtful character?

By the terms of the will, a portion of the estate is to be loaned the children, but it cannot be ascertained in the will what that interest is. We have no means of defining the extent, and we know of no rule by which it can be estimated. It is insisted that the statute of distributions should be adopted as a rule, by which the specific interest of each grand-child can be ascertained; and this, we understand, is the basis on which the decree of the court below rests, and by which one-seventh of the estate was allotted to each child. If this rule which is invoked be adopted to ascertain the portion a child would take, then dehors the will, Mrs. Lines would be entitled to the whole estate. If we force the application of the rule to the portion the grand-children are to take, then its effect is to disinherit the daughter, the heir at law.

But we believe no case can be found where the statute of distribution has been adopted as a rule to determine the extent of a legatee's interest. In cases which have arisen in the English Courts, where bequests have been made to the testator's family, or relations, the statute has been adopted to determine the object of the bounty, nev- 76 er the extent of the subject matter.

The cases relied on by complainant's counsel, do not support his argument. In the case of Pierson vs. Garnett, 2 Brown C. R., 38, and which created great interest at the time, the difficulty was who were the descendants, and how they were to take, in case of no disposition. Lord Kenyon was of opinion it was a power to distribute in such manner as the party thought fit; likewise a power to give, which the court could not control; but if he did not give at all, the court would give for him, to such descendants as should be entitled. In the case of Brown vs. Higgs, 8 Vesey, 573, the question was, who were the relations of the testator? The court refers with approbation to the cases of Pierson vs. Garnett and Harding vs. Glyn, 1 Atk., 479; and, in adopting the statutes of distribution, says it is a safe rule to go by; and, as equality is a principle of equity, the estate shall go to such of the testator's next of kin as were alive at the death of his wife, who held the trust estate.

The cases referred to in 1 Russ, R., 59, 23 Eng. Ch. R., 445, 34 Eng. Ch., 608, 617, are not in conflict with the doctrines we have adopted. They were cases of maintenance, and the court has ever held that a direction in a will to provide maintenance, support or education for children, created a trust for the objects; and the fund out of which the provison was to come being defined, the extent of the bounty could be easily ascertained, by reference. Certum est quod certum reddi potest. If a reference was made in the case, the master could adopt no rule in aid of his judgment, unless an arbitrary one, and there would be no guide to his discretion.

There is a numerous class of cases where no trust existed, and where there could be no distinction between the Lines vs. Darden and Wife—Opinion of Court.

77 force of peremptory and precatory words, but where the contemplated testamentary benefit was direct, the object certain, and the intention of the testator to give manifest from the will; and yet the bequest failed for want of certainty in the subject matter. One case will serve to illustrate the principle. In Jones and others vs. Hancock, 4 Dow's Parlm. R., 145, an estate was given to a daughter, on conditions, with a devise over. The specific portion or share so giving over not appearing on the face of the will, and there being no means of ascertaining it, the House of Lords, concurring in the unanimous opinion of the Judges, held the devise over void for uncertainty. In that case, the intervention of a trustee would have been unavailing, for, however, mandatory the words, the interest was too indefinite for the operation of a trust.

The authority relied on by one of the counsel for complainant, in the case of Malin vs. Keighby, 2 Vesey, Jr., 334, is clearly misapprehended. The Master of the Rolls says, that to create a trust, the will should point out the object, the property, and the way it should go. Applying this authority to the case before us, it is insisted that the property is clearly pointed out in the will of Robinson. But it is not the property or fund out of which the portion is to be carved, but the extent of the portion itself, to which the court refers; otherwise, it would be at variance with every other authority on the subject.

The fact of leaving the interest indefinite, is strong evidence from which it may reasonably be inferred that the testator designed to leave the extent of the loan, if not the loan itself, to the discretion of his daughter, limiting the exercise of it to the contingencies provided for in the will. The words themselves, independent of the context, imply a mere power, as contradistinguished from a declaration of trust. This construction derives additional weight when 78 the situations of the parties, and the relationship, is considered. She was the mother of these children, and whatever solicitude he may have felt for their welfare, during her life, he could not have entrusted his power in safer hands, or had a more sure guarantee for her good faith and fidelity. To her maternal care was confined the education and maintenance of these children; and it is not to be presumed that their change of position in after life, would sever the ties which subsisted between them. Upon her affection for her own children the testator could safely rely, and in her judgment and discretion he was willing to confide.

We do not feel the force of the argument in reference to the trust estate being in Joseph Austin. It is true, that upon the marriage of Mrs. Lines, the legal title, by the will, passed to him, but in trust for the use of the cestue que trust, and for the purpose of protecting her life interest from the debts of her husband. It is equally true that, upon her divorce from her husband, the temporary purpose of the trust having been accomplished, the estate reverted back to her. 1 Kelly Geo. R., 390. But independent of the divorce, (and that of itself should not affect the merit of the argument,) the trust created in Austin was a limited one, and for a special object, restricted to the exclusive use and enjoyment of the estate by Mrs. Lines. The trust could not affect the construction of the will, or enlarge or modify its terms, by which she became the tenant for life, and during the term the absolute owner, and as a consequence, no change could be created on the life estate by the operation of the trust.

This being a power vested in Mrs. Lines, the question now recurs, how far its exercise can be controlled by this court?

But little need be said upon this subject; for if a mere power, and which seems to result from what we have said, the question gives its own answer, and that answer is con- 79 clusive. There is a clear distinction between aiding a power, and compelling its execution. The one assists, the other controls, the discretion of the donee, and in doing that, overthrows the intention of the party creating the power. In the non-execution of a power, a Court of Equity assumes no jurisdiction and should never interfere. But it will aid a defective execution, unless it be inequitable to other persons. Before the aid of a court can be extended in any case, the party who seeks relief must show, in himself, some superior equity to him against whom it is asked. If the equities are equal, the court will not compel the donee to do that which he will not do for himself, but will remain silent and passive. And for this reason, equity will not even aid a defective execution of a power to the disinheritance of the heir at law. 1 Story's Eq., § 176-7. The utmost limit to which a court can consistently go in its construction of a mere power, is to execute what the donee wished to do, but failed to accomplish. In the case of Brown vs. Higgs, 8 Vesey R., 574, the Lord Chancellor says, that where there is a mere power of disposing, and that power is not exercised, a court cannot interfere. If it be true, as contended, that the testator Robinson, placed himself in loco parentis towards his grand children, no presumption can be drawn from the fact, to the prejudice of his daughter, for there was a higher obligation on his part, and a paramount equity in her favor.

The case of Withers vs. Yeadon, Adm'r., 1 Rich. Eq. R. 325, is relied on as a recent case, in support of the argument for complainant. The opinion of the court, it is true, has some strong expressions in regard to the execution of powers, and if they were intended to apply to powers in general, they are subject to many qualifications. It is to be presumed, however, that their application was designed to be restricted to cases similiar to the one before the court; 80 otherwise there would be no distinction between a mere power of appointment, and a power coupled with a trust. By the will in that case, the testator gave to his son his estate, upon the special trust, for the benefit of his family, &c., and that he would devise the same "to all, or any child, or children of his," &c., as he might see fit. The legatee died without making the appointment. It cannot be doubted, that though there was an express trust, yet the power of selection, as to the objects, was left to the discretion of the legatee, and in the exercise of his undoubted discretion, had he left the estate to one child, the devise would have been good, and no court could have disturbed it. It would have been within the principle recognized in Kemp vs. Kemp, 5 Vesey, 856; Thomas vs. Thomas, 2 Vern., 443; 1 P. Wm., 149; 1 Ttk., 389; 5 My. & Cr., 72. The court, by its decree, distributed the estate equally among the children, upon the principle (it is to be supposed) laid down in the above authorities, that when there appears a general intention in favor of a class, and a particular intention in favor of individuals of a class, to be selected by another person, and the particular intention fails from that selection not being made, the court will carry into effect the general intention in favor of the class. § 2 White & T. Lead Cases, 345. Nothing can be extracted from this case which we have been induced to notice, beyond a mere obitur dictum of the Chancellor, in favor of complainant.

But it is contended by one of the counsel, that the portion of the estate loaned by Mrs. Lines to complainant, is illusory, and that it being an improper execution of the power, the court will control it. The leading cases relied on in support of this position, are Kemp vs. Kemp, 5 Vesey, 556, and Gower vs. Mainwarning, 2 Vesey R., 87. If this estate was given to Mrs. Lines for life, with the power to "devise it to her children as she should think proper," as in the first case, and the question was, as to the exercise of this power, it would present a very different case from the one before us. The devise would be mandatory according to the English Courts, and we might feel bound to consider it a trust, for the benefit of all the children, and a gift to one, and a normal amount, would be illusory. They would be entitled to a substantial, if not an equal share; first, because there would be no counter equity, to repel such a disposition, but a superior equity in favor of it; second, the devise should be executed in good faith, with equity and good conscience, and in that case equity would be equality. It is upon this principle that the execution of powers, when coupled with a trust, as in both the cases referred to, as well as Knight vs. Yarborough, 1 Gilmer's Va. R., 27, have been held by the courts to be illusory. But in all these cases, the execution of the power was suspended by a life estate. While in the case before us, the power to be exercised is to take effect, if at all, during the existence of the life estate, and to its destruction.

It cannot be denied, but that the English courts have assumed jurisdiction even over discretionary powers. And in this view, there is nothing in this doctrine of illusory apopintment, which commends itself to the favorable consideration of this court, and we feel but little disposition to adopt a rule which is never mentioned, but with distrust, as to its soundness, and regret that it ever was established. Butcher & Gooday vs. Butcher, 9 Vese R., 381-391. It is a mistake, that the doctrine flows from a trust, or is connected with it. In the case of discretionary powers, there is no principle to guide a court, in determining when an appointment is illusory, and when it is not. The rule itself is founded upon no principle. It is 82 an arbitrary one, subject to no restraint or limitation. It is going too far, to say that the exercise of the power, which a testator has reposed in the honesty, good faith, and discretion of another, shall be controlled by the court. It is fair to conclude that the testator had no fixed purpose of his own, and to control the judgment of the donee, is to do violence to the intention of the testator, and leave the execution of the power, to the discretion of the court who tries the case; and that of itself, is a sufficient answer to the soundness of the doctrine. See Fronty vs. Fronty, Bai. Eq. R., 517.

The court cannot shut its eyes to the fact, that in the exercise of this power, Mrs. Lines has loaned property to the complainant and wife, and offered to extend to them additional aid. This was declined by the complainant in the first instance, because he did not require it. When he became embarrassed, and the offer was renewed, he refused all assistance less than his full portion, but which he did not define, claiming as a right, what he was entitled to as a favor.

In every aspect of the case, we are satisfied the decree of the court below is erroneous, and that the testator intended to repose in his daughter a discretionary power, as to any advancement to be made to her children—that they are bound by an exercise of that discretion, and that this court cannot control it.

Per curiam. Let the decree of the court below be reversed, and the bill be dismissed.

NOTE—A petition for a rehearing was filed by the appellees in this cause, but because of the incompetency of one of the Judges to sit on the motion, it was continued until the next term.

ELLEN A. BROCKENBROUGH, ADMINISTRATRIX OF WILLIAM 83
H. BROCKENBROUGH, DECEASED, APPELLANT, VS. ANN W. CAMPBELL, ADMINISTRATRIX OF JOHN W. CAMPBELL, DECEASED, APPELLEE.

1. The statute of limitations of five years is not a good plea in bar to an action under the statute 30 Car. 2 c., 7, (explained and made perpetual by the St. 4 Wm. & Ma., c. 24, s. 12,) against the executor, or administrator of an executor or administrator, for a devastavit committed by the latter in the administration of the estate of the first testator or intestate; such actions not being grounded on any contract, or lending; and being founded on the statute aforesaid, which is a specialty.

2. In actions under the statute aforesaid for a devastavit, it is not necessary that a judgment should be previously obtained against the executor or administrator who has committed the waste, ascertaining assets in hand applicable to the plaintiff's debt; and therein such action differs from the action for devastavit at common law against executor or administrator for waste committed by himself.

This cause was brought up by appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Leon county, Hon. J. WAYLES BAKER presiding.

Ann W. Campbell, administratrix of John W. Campbell, deceased, brought an action of debt against Ellen A. Brockenbrough, administratrix of William A. Brockenbrough, deceased, on a judgment recovered in 1840, in the Superior Court of Franklin County, against William H. Brockenbrough, as executor of Samuel Simpson, deceased. The declaration sets forth the judgment, and alleges a devastavit committed by William H. Brockenbrough, as executor of Simpson.

The defendant in the court below pleaded, 1st, Non detinet; 2d, That her intestate had, in his life time, fully administered the assets which were of Samuel Simpson, 84 deceased; 3d, Plene administravit by defendant of the assets of William H. Brockenbrough, deceased; and 4th The statute of limitations. The plaintiff took issue on the first plea, traversed the second and third pleas, and replied to the fourth, that when the cause of action accrued, and until the institution of this suit, her intestate, and she after the death of her intestate, were out of the county and beyond the State, to-wit: in the State of Alabama.

To this replication, the defendant demurred, and the court overruled the demurrer, adjudging the said plea of the statute of limitations to be insufficient. The cause was submitted to a jury, who finding the issues in favor of the plaintiff, judgment was rendered against the defendant, upon the verdict returned by the jury. The Supreme Court was asked to review the judgment of the Circuit Court on the demurrer to the replication to the fourth plea.

Forward & Towle, for appellants.

T. Baltzell and A. L. Woodward, for appellee.

THOMPSON, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

The first point presented for the consideration and decision of the court, is, the propriety of the judgment of the Circuit Court, in overruling the plea of the statute of limitation, of five years, pleaded by the plaintiff in error, in that court.

The provisions of the act of limitations, of Nov. 10, 1828, which is claimed to be applicable to this case, and on which the plea is based, is in the following terms, that "all ac-"tions of assumpsit or debt, grounded upon any lending "or contract without specialty, &c., shall be commenced "and sued within the time and limitation of five years:"

and the present action was brought against the plaintiff in error, for a devastavit, alleged to have been committed by her intestate, in the administration of the estate of one Simpson, of which he was the executor. This provision of our statute is identical with that of the British statute of 21 Jac., 1 c. ib., under which it has been correctly held, that such cases only are within the provision thereof, as are grounded upon a contract in fact, and without specialty. Hodsden vs. Harridge, 2 Wms. Saund. R., 65-67. In the case cited, which was an action of debt upon an award of arbitrators, the court held, that it was not founded upon any lending or contract, but was a debt ex quasi contractu, according to the civilians, for which the law gives an action of debt, although there is no contract between the parties. See also Pearce vs. Howard, 14 Johns. R., 479.

It is urged with some earnestness, that the evidence of a contract is to be found in the oath required by law, of executors, on obtaining letters testamentary, faithfully to administer the estate committed to their charge, and to pay the debts thereof, so far as the assets will extend; and that this is to be considered as having been made with all the creditors of such estate. It must, however, be obvious, that although by this oath, the executor assumes an obligation, under the most solemn sanction, to apply the assets of his testator, in a due course of administration, yet highly artificial must be the reasoning which can deduce this to be a contract, within the letter or spirit of the statute, if, indeed, it be possible to do so, without wresting the language of the statute, from its fair and legitimate meaning. In the case of Hodsden vs. Harridge, before cited, where the parties had by express agreement, each with the other, submitted the matters in difference between them to the award of an arbitrator, yet an action of debt upon the award was not considered within the statute, the debt being simply quasi ex contractu.. The existence of a contract in fact, in the case cited, might have been contended for with much more show of reason than in the case before the court.

The citation of Bathurst's case, 2 Vent. R, 40, and other authorities to the same effect, do not decide that the devastavit is a simple contract debt, in point of fact, but merely that it is in the nature of a simple contract debt; and that in the order of payment of debts of a decedent, its grade or rank is not of any higher dignity. But if it were capable of perfect demonstration, that the action was founded upon a contract in fact, and therefore within the class to which the limintation is to be applied, yet it would not avail the plaintiff in error, unless it was without specialty, for specialties are in terms excepted from the operation of the statute. As in debt for arrearages of rent, if upon a parol demise, it is barred by the limitation of five years; but if it is reserved by deed, which is a specialty, it is not. See 2 Wms. Saund. R., 64; 2 Keb. R., 464.

Conceding that in the present action, the judgment declared on, is but matter of inducement, and that the devastavit alleged, is the foundation of the action, yet the action is grounded on a specialty, viz: statute law. By the rules of the common law, a devastavit committed by an executor or administrator, was a personal tort, and came within the maxim of actio personalis moritur cum persona, and the creditor was without remedy. But by the statute 30 Car., 2 c. 7, explained and made perpetual by the 4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 24, § 12, the executors and administrators, whether rightful, or of their own wrong, who shall waste or convert to their own use, the estate of their testator or intestate, shall be liable and chargeable, in the same manner as their testator or intestate would have been, if they had been living. Thus, this action is grounded upon statute law, which is a specialty, and so excepted by the express terms of the statute of limitations.

This view of the case is in perfect analogy with that of the action of d[illegible] for an escape. At common law, the remedy for an escape out of execution, was an action on the case, in which the creditor recovered such damages as a jury might be inclined to give. But the statutes Westm. 2 c. 11, and 1 Ric. 2, c. 12, gave an action of debt against the sheriff or goaler, to recover at once the sum for which the prisoner was charged in execution. In Jones vs. Pope, 1 Wms. Saund. R., 37, (which was an action of debt for such an escape out of execution, upon the plea of the statute of limitations,) it was held that the statute giving the action was a specialty, upon which the action is grounded, and therefore, clearly out of the words and intention of the statute of limitations.

The same principle of decision was applied by Judge Story to an action of debt against a stockholder of a bank, under the provision of the charter imposing a personal responsibility upon the shareholders for the bills or notes of the corporation, in case they should be dishonored. Upon the plea of the statute of limitations, he held that the New Hampshire act, (which in this respect, like that of Florida, is a transcript of the 21 Jac., 1 c. 16) did not apply as a bar to an action of debt upon such statutable provision; for it is not a lending or contract, and only by the utmost straining, can it be asserted that it is a case arising quasi ex contractu. He further held, that the action was founded on a statute, which the law deems for this purpose a specialty, and for this reason also, the plea was bad. Bullard vs. Bell, 1 Mason's Rep., 288-9.

The only reported case found, after a careful examination, in which the question, whether an executor or administrator can set up the statute of limitations as a defence to an action against him for a devastavit, has been directly presented and decided, is that of Williams vs. Freeman, in 7 Watt & Serg. R., 359. The statute of Pennsylvania, like that of Florida, is in this particular a transcript from the British statute of 21 Jac. 1 c. 16, and in the case cited, it was determined that there was no bar, because the action was not grounded upon any lending or contract, and because it was founded on the judgment, which was a specialty. The action, however, was against the administrator, for his own waste, and upon a judgment against him for assets in his hand.

This court is satisfied that the fourth plea of the plaintiff in error, and the matters and things therein contained, presented no sufficient bar to the action of the plaintiff below, and that the judgment of the Circuit Court thereon was correct.

Upon the question made and argued at the bar, whether the judgment set forth in the declaration, is one ascertaining assets in the hands of the executor of Simpson, or is a judgment for assets in futuro, the court does not in this case, find it necessary to decide. The judgment entry declares that the sum recovered is "to be levied of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of said deceased, that may or have come, into the hands of the said executor to be administered;" and to say the least, is sadly deficient in that certainty and precision which should characterize a common law judgment. It would seem as if it were designed to amalgamate and embody into one judgment, the effect of two distinct legal judgments upon the same cause of action;—to secure the assets in hand, and at the same time to reach over and cover those which may be acquired in futuro. This may be done where the assets in hand are not co-extensive with the debt recovered, the amount in hand, being previously ascertained, and a judgment for that sum awarded, and for the residue quando acciderint; but in this entry there is no precise sum ascertained, and if it is to be regarded as a judgment of assets, it must cover the amount of the debt recovered, while at the same time, and to the same extent, it claims to look to assets thereafter to be received, which it is considered presents an incongruity.

There is a very wide distinction between the legal effect of these two classes of judgements; in the one case, it is conclusive evidence of assets in possession to satisfy the amount of the sum recovered; and in the other case, it is equally conclusive upon the creditor, that the executor or the administrator has, up to the time of the judgment, fully administered the estate in his hands. The parties have, however, by common consent, it seems, considered it as a judgment for future assets; the plaintiff below has substantially, so counted upon it in the declaration, and the defendant pleaded thereto, that her intestate, in his lifetime, had fully administered the estate of Simpson, on which issue was joined, and submitted to the jury; a plea which would have been altogether inadmissible, if the judgment had been one for assets in hand, and so counted upon. 2 Wms, on Ex'rs., 1224, (Phil. Ed., 1832.) Notwitstanding any doubt which might exist in satisfactorily ascertaining the character of this judgment, if the question had been material to the decision of this case, the court would have been strongly inclined to adopt the interpretation put upon it by the parties, as expressed in the pleadings and held it to be a judgment of assets quando acciderint; for, to consider it otherwise, might be productive of great injustice in cutting off the inquiry as to the administration of the assets of the estate of the first testator, and thus tend to fix a devastavit upon the executor conclusively, when it is questionable if the judgment entry was designed to have such effect; and because this action arises ex maleficio, the proof to convict the party should be at least free from doubt.

If the action had been against Mr. Brockenbrough, the executor of Simpson, in his lifetime, for a devastavit committed by himself, then the question of the charter of this judgment would have been most material; the action could not have been sustained, unless the judgment had ascertained assets in his hands; and the cause of action laid in the declaration, would have been fatally defective unless such a judgment should have been alleged. But in an action against the executor, or administrator of an executor or administrator, under the statute of 30 Car., 2 c. 7, as explained and made perpetual by the 4 Wm. & Mary, c. 24, §12, for a devastavit committed by the first executor or administrator, such as this is, such allegation and proof is wholly unnecessary. The distinctions between these two actions are thus summed up by Serg. Williams, in his note (8) to the case of Wheatley vs. Lane, 1 Wms. Saund. R., 219 e: "By what has been said, it appears that there are "these distinctions between an action against the executor "himself upon a judgment suggesting a devastavit by him, "and one against the executor of an executor, suggesting "a devastavit by the former executor. 1. In the former "case, the action is in the debet et detinet, and the judg- "ment is de bonis propriis, but in the other, the action is in "the detinet only, and the judgment is de bonis testatoris. "2. The former action can only be brought upon a judg- "ment previously obtained against the executor de bonis "testatoris, or where he is made a party to a judgment "against a testator by scire facias; but in the other, an "action may be brought in every case, where the execu- "tor, in his lifetime, was in any way guilty of any act "which amounts in law to a devastavit, such as exhausting "the assets by payment of debts of an inferior degree be- "fore those of a superior, or the like. And lastly, in the "former case, the executor cannot plead plene administra- "vit, but in the latter case such plea is proper." See also, opinion of this court, in Gregory vs. Harrison, 4 Florida Rep., 78-79; Sibley vs. Williams, 3 Gill & John. R., 52. In this case, therefore, the character of the judgment was only important as evidence; as a judgment of assets in hand, it was evidence that the executor of Simpson had assets at the time, which could not be contradicted; as a judgment of assets in furturo it was evidence only of the debt due by the estate of Simpson, and that there was then nothing in hand to pay and discharge it. As there was a plea that the executor of Simpson had fully administered that estate in his life time, and an issue thereon submitted to the jury, and no bill of exceptions showing what evidence was offered under such issue, we must presume that the verdict thereon was founded on sufficient and proper evidence.

Another ground of error has been assigned, viz: that the declaration is defective, but as no specific error has been pointed out, and the court, upon examination, has not been able to discover any, we conclude it is sufficient. There is no error in the record of the judgment and proceedings of the Circuit Court, and the judgment therein must be affirmed with costs.

Judgment affirmed.

FARISH CARTER, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, VS. ARCHIBALD T. BENNETT, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

1. The Supreme Court of the United States has, under the laws of Congress appellate jurisdiction over the certain decisions of the State Courts.
2. A writ of error to the Supreme Court of a State has the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a Circuit Court of the United States.

3. A writ of error to a State Court, if sued out within the time and with the formalities required in cases of writs of error to the Circuit Courts of the United States, operates in like manner as a supersedeas, and stay of execution.

This was a rule nisi on the Clerk, to shew cause why he should not be required to issue execution on the judgment rendered in this cause. The answer of the Clerk is embraced in the opinion of the court.

W. G. M. Davis, for the motion.

J. T. Archer, contra.

ANDERSON, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the court.

To a rule to nisi shew cause why said rule should not be made absolute, requiring the clerk to issue execution on the judgment heretofore rendered in this case, the clerk has responded as follows:

In answer to the rule nisi granted in this cause on the 5th day of January, A. D. 1853, requiring the clerk of this court to shew cause why a rule absolute should not be granted commanding him to issue execution in this cause, I, John P. K. Savage, shew as follows:

Carter vs. Bennett- -Opinion of Court.

93 That on the 29th day of January, 1852, and within two days (Sunday exclusive) after the pronouncing of the said judgment in the above entitled case, the said Farish Carter sued out a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the 25th section of the Judiciary act of Congress of 1789, for the purpose of removing said cause to said Supreme Court, on the allegation of certain errors in the judgment and proceedings of this court, and that on the 30th day of the same month of January, and within ten days (Sunday exclusive) after pronouncing said judgment in the court, filed a copy of the said writ of error in my office.

And on the 3d day of February, A. D. 1852, the said Farish Carter tendered to the Hon. Walker Anderson, Chief Justice of this court, his bond, with sureties, in the penalty of fifty thousand dollars, conditioned to prosecute said writ of error to effect, and to answer all damages and costs in case he should fail to make good his plea. Which said bond was on the 5th day of the last mentioned month of February, approved by the Honorable Walker Anderson, Chief Justice, as good and sufficient; who thereupon directed said bond to be filed in this office, and allowed and signed a citation, as provided by law. And this respondent, deeming said proceedings in error to operate as a supersedeas upon the further execution of the judgment of this court, did not issue execution thereon.

JOHN P. K. SAVAGE,
Clerk of the Supreme Court.

Upon this state of facts, the court is required to decide whether the writ of error sued out by the defendant in execution, in the manner stated by the clerk, shall operate as a supersedeas. We do not understand that any doubt is expressed as to the right of the plaintiff in error to have his writ, or that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme 94 Court of the United States over the decisions of the State Court, (restricted as it is to the examination of a few specified questions) extends to the case before us.

It seems to be conceded, that this case involves one of the questions reserved by the Constitution and laws of the United States, for the revisory jurisdiction of its own Supreme Court. But it is contended that the writ of error, though sued out in conformity to the acts of Congress, and accompanied by the circumstances set forth in the answer of the clerk, cannot have the effect of arresting the final process of this court upon its own judgment.

The constitutionality of the 25th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which gives to the Supreme Court of the United States, the right to re-examine the judgments and decrees of the State Courts, in certain specified cases, was at an early day strenuously contested. In Martin vs. Hanan early day strenuously contested. In Martin vs. Hunter, 1 Wheaton, 304, the counsel for defendant in error, contended that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was limited by a true construction of the Constitution to proceedings in the interior national judicatories. But the validity of the law was ably indicated and fully maintained by the Supreme Court. In a subsequent case —that of Cohens vs. the State of Virginia, 6 Wheaton, 264— the decision was amply and explicitly confirmed, and the appellate jurisdiction of the court in this form, has been repeatedly exercised and is now regarded as indefinitely settled.

The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over certain decisions of the State Courts, being thus rightfully derived from the laws of the United States, we must necessarily look exclusively to those laws for the mode of its exercise, as well as its extent. The right to re-examine, necessarily implies authority to regulate the mode in which the right shall be exercised. And to solve the question presented to us, we have, therefore, but to look to the laws 95 of the United States, which regulate the mode in which writs of error shall be sued out, and which define their operation and effect.

The 25th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which gives the writ of error from the State courts, provided that a final judgment or decree in such courts in certain specified cases, "may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a "writ of error, the citation being signed by the Chief Justice, or Judge, or Chancellor of the Court, rendering or "passing the decree or judgment complained of, or by a "Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in "the same manner and under the same regulations, and "the writ of error shall have the same effect, as if the "judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or "passed in a Circuit Court."

If this law is in consistency with the Constitution, as has been repeatedly decided by the Supreme Court, and as is acknowledged by the universal acquiescence of the State Courts, it only remains for us to inquire, what effect a writ of error sued out of a Circuit Court, in the mode, and with the circumstances set forth in the clerk's answer, would have upon the judgment or decree complained of?

The 22d section of the Judiciary Act prescribes the mode in which a writ of error shall be sued out of a Circuit Court, and the 23d section defines its effect. The 22d section requires that there shall be annexed to, and returned with the writ of error, "an authenticated transcript of the record, and assignment of errors, and prayer for reversal, with a citation to the adverse party." The citation which is thus made a necessary part of the writ, shall not be signed by the Judge or Justice until he has taken good and sufficient security that the plaintiff in error shall prosecute his 96 writ.

The 23d section, which defines the effect of a writ of error, enacts "that a writ of error as aforesaid, shall be a "supersedeas and stay of execution, in cases only where "the writ of error is served by a copy thereof being lodged "for the adverse party in the clerk's office where the rec"ord remains, within ten days (Sundays exclusive) after "rendering the judgment or passing the decree com"plained of."

The 25th section declares, that a writ of error from the State Courts, shall have the same effect upon the judgments and decrees of those courts, as it would have upon the judgments and degrees of the Circuit Court, if sued out from that court, and the 23d section declares, that in this latter court, it shall be a supersedeas and stay of execution, if sued out within a certain time and with certain formalities, and therefore, by virtue of the 25th section, the writ, if sued out in like manner from the State Courts, shall be in like manner a supersedeas and stay of execution there. This conclusion is inevitable from the language used in the respective sections of this act. That we have not been led aside from the true intent and purpose of these provisions by an adherence to the literal terms of the act, is apparent from a consideration of the duty imposed upon the Chief Justice of a State Court when he is called upon a sign the citation. As "the same regulations" are prescribed by the act for writs of error from the State Courts, as for those from the Circuit Courts, it follows, that the Chief Justice of the State Court, in signing the citation, must abide by the regulations or rules laid down for the Judges of the National Courts. Now, these latter are required in terms by the act of 1789, upon signing a citation, "to take good and sufficient security, that the plaintiff in 97 "error shall prosecute his writ," &c. A subsequent act, approved December, 1794, enacts, "that the security to be "required and taken, on the signing of a citation on any "writ of error, which shall not be a supersedeas and stay "of execution, shall be only to such an amount, as in the "opinion of the Justice or Judge taking the same, shall be "sufficient to answer all such costs as upon an affirmance "of their judgment or decree, may be judged or decreed "to the respondent in error."

We might justly infer from this provision, that in other cases, the security to be required and taken should be of a larger amount, but we are not left to uncertain conjecture upon this point. The Supreme Court, in adjusting the duty of Judges in this particular, said in an early case, (9 Wheat., 553,) "when the writ of error is sued out and served within ten days (Sundays exclusive) after judgment, so as to make it a supersedeas, the penalty of the bond must be in a sufficient sum to secure the amount depending upon the decision of the Appellate Court."

We learn in this case from the return of the clerk, that the Chief Justice of this Court, adopting, as we have no doubt it was his duty to do under the provisions of the 25th section of the Judiciary Act, the rules and regulations prescribed for the Judges of the National Courts, did require and take from the plaintiff in error, a bond for more than double the amount of the sum for which judgment had been rendered. Why was this required of him, if the writ of error was not to operate as a supersedeas? There can be but one reply to this inquiry, and that is, that as the writ was to be sued out in the two judicatories, in the same manner and under the same regulations, so it was to have the same effect in both.

The conclusions at which we have arrived are so obviously deducible from the terms of the Judiciary Act, and 98 are so well fortified by the reason and purposes for which writs of error are given in all courts, and are so strongly sanctioned by analogies found in the practice of our courts, that we would not have argued them at length, had not this motion been pressed with great zeal by the counsel for the respondent in error, and had not the views which he endeavored to impress upon the court been to some extent sustained by the opinion of an eminent lawyer lately deceased, as expressed in a manuscript letter read to the court.

It was evident, we think, that the opinion thus expressed, was given upon first impressions, without an examination of the question, and at all events our minds have been led irresistibly to an opposite conclusion, in spite of the authority of his great name.

It appearing to the court, from the answer of the clerk, that the plaintiff in error has fully complied with the requirement of the 23d section of the Judiciary Act, to make his writ a supersedeas and stay of execution, it is the judgment of this court, that the motion to make the rule upon the clerk absolute, be denied.

LOWELL HOLBROOK, APPELLANT, vs. T. LANE BETTON, AND 99
JOHN F. HIGGS, APPELLEES

1. A purchaser under an executory contract, in possession of the premises, has an interest, which is the subject of mortgage or sale, and which is devisable and descendible as his real estate.

2. H., a vendor, and L., a vendee, agreed to rescind a contract of sale, the former paying to the latter the value of the property over and above the amount remaining due, and the latter surrendering the contract. L., prior to this agreement, being in possession, executed a mortgage on his equity, to B. which had been duly recorded, and was outstanding at the time; of which however, H. had no actual notice. HELD, that this recision did not affect or impair the rights of B., the mortgagee, and that he was entitled to a foreclosure and a sale of the property in the possession of H. HELD, further, that H. should be considered in the light of a subsequent purchaser, and that as a consequence, the record of the mortgage to B., was sufficient notice to him of its existence.

3. In such a case, where the first note secured by the mortgage to B. was paid by, and assigned to H., it would be fruitless to apply the proceeds of property which he owned, to the satisfaction of the note thus paid, unless the property was inadequate to pay more than this note and the amount due under the contract of purchase at the time of its recision.

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for Leon county, Hon. J. Wayles Baker, presiding.

The appellees, Betton & Higgs, filed their bill in the court below, for the foreclosure of a mortgage given to them by Walter F. Lloyd, on a certain lot and premises in the city of Tallahassee.

In 1843, Walter F. Lloyd entered into a contract with Call & Walker, for the purchase of the lot in question, the latter agreeing to make a good title to the premises when the former should complete the payments of the purchase money.

Prior to this contract, Call and Walker had executed a 100 mortgage on the premises, which was outstanding at the time of the agreement with Lloyd. Early in the year 1844, Holbrook, by an arrangement with Call & Walker, and with the consent of Lloyd, acquired a transfer of the mortgage referred to, and received a conveyance of the equity of redemption from Call & Walker, agreeing to perfect the contract which had been entered into between Call & Walker and Lloyd. At the Spring term, 1844, of the Superior Court for Leon county, Holbrook, on a proceeding instituted against Call & Walker, on the mortgage, obtained, by consent, a decree of strict foreclosure, and on a statement of the account between Call & Walker and Lloyd, then made, there was found to be due by Lloyd, under his contract, aforesaid, the sum of $2,428.31. It was then agreed between Holbrook and Lloyd, that on the payment of this sum, with interest, in three annual installments, on the first days of January of the years 1845, 1846, and 1847, the decree of foreclosure aforesaid, should be transferred to Lloyd, so as to vest in him all the title held by Holbrook. In February, 1846, Lloyd mortgaged the lot to the appellees to secure the payment of two promissory notes, each for the sum of $1,156.95, with interest from date at eight per cent. per annum, one payable eighteen months and the other three years after date. In February, 1847, after the mortgage to appellees had been executed and delivered, and recorded in the office appointed by law for the registration of deeds and mortgages, it being ascertained that Lloyd was in arrear to Holbrook, and owing for principal and interest upon said contract of purchase, the sum of $1150.76, and being unable to pay this balance, it was then agreed between them, that Lloyd should "value on the house of Holbrook in New York," for the value of the lot and improvements, over and above the amount 101 due thereon for the purchase money, and should surrender or cancel his contract of purchase. Accordingly, Lloyd surrendered said contract and drew on Holbrook & Nelson of New York, to the amount of $3143 50, which drafts were honored and paid by Holbrook. In August, following, Higgs, one of the appellees, being in New York, applied to Holbrook to cash the note given by Lloyd, as aforesaid, payable eighteen months after date, and informed him for the first time, that he held the mortgage referred to. Holbrook, after some hesitation, advanced the amount due on the note, and took it with an assignment endorsed thereon to Holbrook, Nelson & Co., without recourse. This, it is alleged, was the first time that Holbrook knew or heard of the mortgage to appellees.

It further appears that the property conveyed in the mortgage to appellees, is described "as all that part of lot "number one hundred and seventy-one in the original plan "of the city of Tallahassee upon which the brick building "occupied by Lloyd is situated, fronting twenty-five feet "on Monroe street, more or less, and running back sixty-"five feet," which description covered by its terms only a portion of the premises included within the terms of the original contract of purchase by Lloyd. The contract of purchase, includes within its terms, twenty-two feet of lot number one hundred and seventy, fronting on Monroe street, and only eight feet of lot one hundred and seventy-one.

The second note due by Lloyd to appellees being unpaid, this proceeding was instituted, and the court below decreed a foreclosure of the mortgage, and directed a sale of the property to pay the amount due. From this decree Holbrook appealed.

102 D. P. Hogue and M. D. Papy, for appellant.

1. The appellant, Holbrook, was the legal owner of the premises in controversy, by obtaining the transfer of the mortgage held by the Union Bank, and a conveyance of the equity of redemption by Call & Walker, the mortgagors.

2. Holbrook was the legal owner by the decree of strict foreclosure in the case instituted by him on the mortgage given to the bank, which decree was entered by consent of the mortgagors, and the property received in full satisfaction of the debt secured by the mortgage. 4 Stewart & Port, 138.

3. The record of a mortgage is no notice to a prior incumbrancer, but only to a subsequent purchaser. Therefore the record of the mortgage from Lloyd to Higgs was no notice to Holbrook. 1 Sanford, 419; 3 ib., 193; 2 Barbour, 151; 7 Cranch, 34.

4. If Higgs desired to influence the action of Holbrook, the holder of the legal title, in his subsequent transactions with Lloyd, by which the contract of purchase was surrendered, he should have given to Holbrook actual notice of the existence of his mortgage. 1 Sanford, 419; 3 ib., 193; 2 Barbour, 151; Law Rep., 445.

5. In the absence of actual notice, the prior incumbrancer or person holding the legal title, is not bound to act in reference to the rights or equities which may exist in favor of a subsequent incumbrancer.

6. Where the answer of a defendant is responsive to the bill, it must be taken as true, unless contradicted or disproved by two witnesses, or one witness with corroborating circumstances. The answer of Holbrook, therefore, in those parts which are responsive to the bill, must be taken as true, because it is uncontradicted by competent 103 and sufficient testimony. 1 Paige, 239; 3 Wend., 532.

7. The testimony of Lloyd is incompetent to disprove the statements in Holbrook's answer. 1. Because he is a party to the suit. 2. Because he is directly interested in the decree to be rendered in this cause. 3 Paige, 368; 2 Wheat., 380; 4 Florida, 481.

8. The mortgage to Higgs only covered eight feet of the ground upon which the store mentioned in the pleadings, stands. It cannot be supposed to include more than its terms import. If Holbrook is considered in the light of a purchaser of Lloyd's equity, which is contrary to the facts, then the registry of Higgs' mortgage is notice to the extent of its contents, and no more. 1 John. Ch. 299; 18 John. Rep., 544.

9. The payment to Higgs by Holbrook, in August, 1847, was the full value of his lien upon so much of the premises as is covered by his mortgage.

10. The assignment of the note to Holbrook carried with it the mortgage given to secure it, and therefore Higgs cannot set up the mortgage in favor of the note still in his hands, until the property embraced in the mortgage is applied to the payment of the note assigned to Holbrook, and then only for such balance as may remain after such application. 2 Florida, 27.

J. T. Archer, for appellees.

SEMMES, J.:

The true point upon which the merits of this case rests, is as to the effect of the rescision of the contract of purchase, and the subsequent payments or advances made by Holbrook to Lloyd, in consequence of that rescision.

The complainants rest their case upon the following state 104 of facts:—In 1843, the defendant, Lloyd, went into the possession of certain real estate in Tallahassee, under a contract of purchase from Call and Walker, they having previously mortgaged the property to Hackley, who assigned it to the Union Bank. The notes given by Lloyd were subsequently assigned to defendant, Holbrook, in exchange for certain securities he held against Walker; and for the purpose of securing to Holbrook the payment of those notes, Call and Walker conveyed to him their equity of redemption, and induced the Union Bank to assign to him the mortgage deed. In 1846, Lloyd being still in the possession of the property, under the contract of purchase, executed the mortgage under which the complainants claim, and which was duly recorded.

Whatever may have been the character or extent of Lloyd's equity, previous to the assignment of Call and Walker's mortgage to Holbrook, it is unnecessary to consider. It is, however, clear that after the assignment, and when Holbrook had united in himself the legal and equitable title, and assumed the execution of the contract of purchase, he became, for all legal purposes, the vendor of Lloyd.

At the time Lloyd executed his mortgage, he was not only in possession of the premises, free of rent, but, under the contract of purchase, had an interest in the land, the subject of mortgage or sale; an interest which was devisable and descendible as his real estate. Craig vs. Leslie, 3 Wheat., 577.

It is insisted that the contract of purchase is to be considered as a simple executory agreement, creating no charge on the land, or attaching to it in any manner as an incident. This is undobtedly true at law, but equity considers the contract in a different and more favorable light, and for many purposes, treats it as specifically executed. The vendee is regarded as the equitable owner of the prop-

Holbrook vs. Betton & Higgs—Opinion of Court.

105 erty, and, as land, it passes by descent to his heirs. 1 Fonbl. Eq., Ch. 6, Sec. 9; 2 Story's Eq. Juris, Sec. 790. Holbrook, as the vendor of Lloyd, was bound to a specific performance of the contract. For his security, he had a paramount claim on the land, by virtue of the vendor's equitable lien, and which would bind the estate, not only in the hands of the vendee, but his heirs, and those claiming under him. From the time that Holbrook became the owner of the legal title, he held the same for the benefit of the purchaser, the trust attaching to the land. Green vs. Smith, 1 Atk. R., 572; 6 John C. R., 402. And it is in view of his character as trustee, that he would be compelled to surrender the title on the payment of the purchase money. Lloyd's right, therefore, to mortgage this property, or convey it in any other mode, cannot be questioned.

Undue importance, we think, has been given by counsel to the decree of strict foreclosure rendered by the Circuit Court, in 1847, against Call and Walker. The relative position of Lloyd and Holbrook, as to their respective rights and liabilities, was not affected by this decree. Lloyd was no party to this proceeding, though the party in interest. In possession, and asserting his claim to the property by virtue of his contract with Holbrook, his equity was paramount to any rights growing out of the mortgage debt, for had Holbrook obtained a decree for the sale of this property, in satisfaction of the debt, a Court of Equity would not have hesitated to enjoin the sale, upon the application of Lloyd. The bill for foreclosure was against Call and Walker alone, and the decree could only vest the title as against the party to the suit; but they had previously conveyed their equity of redemption, and had no longer any interest in the property; and their consent, entered of record, surrendering the property in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, impaired no one's interest, and vested Holbrook 106 with no additional right. The mortgage in the hands of Holbrook was in no manner available, except that it secured to him the legal title to the property. His purpose in procuring, through Walker, an assignment of the mortgage, was not to keep it alive as a security for the debt, or to enforce at any time a collection of that debt, but solely with the view of obtaining the legal title, as a security for the payment of the notes given by Lloyd, under the contract of purchase, and at the same time place himself in a position to perform his part of that contract. By the assignment of the mortgage, and the purchase of mortgagor's equity of redemption, Holbrook became in fact and in law as fully invested with the legal title as he could have derived under any decree of strict foreclosure. Whether by this opinion of the legal and equitable title, the mortgage debt became extinguished, it is of no consequence to consider. It is sufficient that the property in the possession of Lloyd, was not liable for the payment of the debt, or any part of it. As to the agreement entered into between Lloyd and the attorneys of Holbrook, about the time this decree was rendered, it cannot affect the merits of this case in any way. It is not a substitution for the original contract of purchase, but is endorsed on it, and recognizes its validity. It secures to Lloyd, it is true, additional time for the payment of the purchase money, Holbrook agreeing, on his part, to assign the decree on the payment of the notes. It was a mere change in the time of payment by Lloyd, without increasing or diminishing the liability of Holbrook. Up to this time, the relative position and the rights of the parties were in no manner changed; Holbrook, holding the technical legal title in trust for his vendee;—the complainants, the mortgage of Lloyd upon his equity, while he held the naked contract of purchase. Some time after this, the contract of purchase was rescinded, and delivered up to Holbrook, in consideration of his allowing Lloyd to value, 107 on his house in New York, for the said lot and improvements, over and above the sum of $1,150, then due on account of the purchase money. In pursuance of this agreement, Holbrook honored the drafts of Lloyd to the amount of $3,143. It is insisted in argument, that Holbrook, in this transaction, is not to be considered in the character of a purchaser of Lloyd's equity, but that the payments made to Lloyd are to be regarded as advances made by Holbrook as a prior incumbrancer; and unless he had actual notice of the complainants incumbrance, before these advances were made, he should be protected in a court of equity.

As a general rule, it is undoubtedly true that a prior incumbrancer, or person holding the legal title, is not bound to act in reference to the rights or equities which may exist in favor of a subsequent incumbrancer; and if the defendant, Holbrook, stood in reference to this case in the light of a prior incumbrancer, with a mortgage to cover future advances, actual notice of the outstanding equity would be requisite. Shirras vs. Craig, 7 Cranch, 34; 2 Barb. C. R., 297, 303. We do not question the doctrine that a mortgage given to secure future advances, is a protection to the holder for all advances made prior to the receipt of actual notice of the intervening title; for otherwise the mortgage, to the extent of its provisions, would be a fruitless security, and it would be impossible for a prior creditor to protect himself against loss. But the reason of the doctrine shows its want of application to the case before us.

The subsequent advances are commensurate with the terms of the deed—they are based upon the faith of the deed, and are a part of the original transaction. But where these advances are not provided for in the security, they must of necessity rest upon a new agreement between the parties not growing out of the original contract, but independent of it. Aside from these considerations, the mort- 108 gage lien in this case was extinguished, and the mortgage merged in the decree of foreclosure.

We do not question the right or capacity of the parties to rescind the contract of purchase by a surrender and acceptance of the title papers, so far as their interest is involved. Between them the surrender would be good for all purposes. But where the rights of third persons founded on the contract, as in this case, are affected, the surrender whether by delivering up of the contract or a conveyance, would be a fruitless effort to defeat an outstanding equity, the evidence of which had been duly recorded. Otherwise it would be in the power of Lloyd to defeat the lien of his own mortgage by a parol agrement with his vendor. The effect of the surrender was to vest in Holbrook, the equity of Lloyd as effectually as could have been done by a deed of conveyance. It was so designed, for the agreement to pay and the actual payment of the value of the lot and improvements, by Holbrook, so far from being made in relation to any mortgage or title he held, was the consideration of the surrender by which Lloyd's remaining equity passed to Holbrook. It is true, that technically, Holbrook was not a purchaser, for there was no deed of conveyance to him. But none was necessary, for he held the legal estate and the only incumbrance upon it, in Lloyd's hands, was Holbrook's agreement to make titles on the payment of the remaining instalment of $1150.

Under this state of facts, we feel bound to consider the defendant, Holbrook, in the light of a subsequent purchaser, and as a consequence, the record of Lloyd's mortgage sufficient notice to him of that incumbrance.

The only remaining question to be disposed of is, in re-

109 ference to the first note given by Lloyd under his mortgage, amounting to $1156 48.

Holbrook, it appears, in 1847, paid this note and took an assignment of it. And he now claims the benefit of the mortgage security, and insists that the property should first be applied to the satisfaction of this note.

That it has a priority over the mortgage note, in the hands of the complainants, is true. But why apply the proceeds of property of which he is the owner, to the payment of an incumbrance from which he has relieved it? He has all the benefit of the payment by having discharged the mortgage lien to the extent of the note. If the property was inadequate to pay more than this note, and the sum of $1150, originally due from said Lloyd, under the contract of purchase, the question would present a different aspect. As it is, the only incumbrance for which the property should be chargeable, is the remaining note due the complainants.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged, that the decree of the court below be affirmed, except in such particulars as conflict with the opinion of this court. It is further ordered that this cause be remanded to the court below, with instructions to modify its decree in conformity with this opinion.

110 THE SOUTHERN LIFE INSURANCE AND TRUST COMPANY, APPELLANT, VS. AUGUSTUS H. LANIER, APPELLEE.

1. Matters dehors the bill, showing a want of interest in a complainant, cannot be set up by way of demurrer, but may be raised by way of plea. The attempt to set them up in support of a demurrer, is fatal to it.

2. Where a party is made a co-plaintiff, without his privity or consent, the proper motion is, that his name be stricken out, not that the bill be dismissed, even as to him.

3. A demurrer upon the ground of misjoinder of a complainant, must be presented in limine. A party omitting to do so, and going into the merits of a case, waives his demurrer, and the court will not, except in a special case, allow it to prevail at the hearing.

4. Where a party voluntarily receives, as a loan, bank bills which were at a discount, and gave his note for their nominal amount payable in money, he cannot set up as a defence that the amount borrowed was not specie, or its equivalent.

5. Where the charter of incorporation of a Banking Company required that subscribers should, at the time of subscription, pay to the Commissioners appointed to open books for that purpose, ten per cent. on each share of stock subscribed, and directed that, so soon as the stock was taken and the ten per cent. paid, trustees were to be elected, and the company fully organized; and by an amendatory act, passed after its organization, the company was authorized to allow any stockholder to surrender his certificate of stock, and take a certificate of full stock equal to the amount actually paid in by him, which surrendered stock the company was authorized to re-issue: HELD, 1, That the company were not bound to require of the purchaser of this surrendered stock a payment of ten per cent. on each share of stock so purchased; 2. That the term of the original charter has exclusive reference to the subscribers before the corporation was organized; and 3d. That the company and not the Commissioners had the power to re-issue the surrendered stock.

6. Where, by the terms of the charter a Banking Company was authorized to sell surrendered stock for cash, and invest the amount in bonds and mortgages and instead thereof, it received the bond mortgage of an individual directly, as a consideration for the stock issued to him: HELD, That the individual stockholder could not avail himself of this conduct of the Company to avoid his bond so given. 111

7. A party cannot avoid his contract with a corporation, and thereby diminish the fund which was designed as a security for the benefit of the public, upon the pretence that there was some abuse of the corporate powers, or mismanagement on the part of the Board of Directors, in making the contract.

8. A contract with a corporation may be binding on the parties, though it be an abuse of the corporate powers, for which the corporation may be answerable to the government which created it.

9. Where a grant of power is clearly defined, and no mode is prescribed for its exercise, it is for the corporation to adopt such mode as, in its judgment, will secure the purpose contemplated.

10. As a general rule, a grant specifying the mode and manner of exercising powers, is construed as merely directory, unless there are negative words, excluding the right to adopt any other mode.

11. It is the duty of a party, upon discovering a fraud, to take immediate steps for the rescision of his contract. By his ratification of the acts of which he complains, and to which he was a willing party, he is forever estopped from setting up such a defence.

12. When a corporation becomes insolvent, the officers are trustees for creditors, and the same principles of law which would be applicable to a suit in favor of creditors, apply to a suit instituted by a corporation under such circumstances.

This cause was brought up by appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for Gadsden county, sitting in Chancery.

In July, 1839, Augustus H. Lanier executed his bond to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, in the penal sum of twenty thousand dollars, conditioned to pay the sum of ten thousand dollars, on or before the expiration of five years from the date thereof, with interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually. On the same day he also executed a mortgage to said Bank on certain lands and slaves, to secure the payment of said bond.

On the execution and delivery of the bond and mortgage aforesaid, the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company 112 issued to said Lanier a certificate for one hundred shares of stock in said company, which constituted him a stockholder in said institution. Afterwards Lanier, desiring to borrow money from said company, deposited with it his certificate of stock, and procured loans, for which he gave his notes; one dated 1st July, 1842, for $917 17, due six months after date, and one dated 8th February, 1843, for $6,000, payable the first of January thereafter, and agreed that his said certificate of stock should stand pledged as a security for said loans. These notes were renewals of others, the original evidences of the loans.

This bond and mortgage, with others, were, it is alleged, under the charter of the company, deposited with the Governor of the Territory of Florida, and the guaranty of said Territory of certificates for one thousand dollars each, to the amount of the mortgage debts deposited, was obtained, on the faith and pledge of said bond and mortgage. These certificates were afterwards negotiated and sold by the company, with the view of being able to make loans and discounts beyond the amount of the capital paid in by the old stockholders.

The company, in their bill, allege that out of the proceeds of the sale of the certificates guaranteed by the Territory, it made the accommodation loan to said Lanier, amounting to $6,917 17, as evidenced by the two promissory notes mentioned. The bond and mortgage being unpaid, a bill was filed by the company, to which the State of Florida was made a party complaint, to foreclose the mortgage, and for a sale of the property, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of the amount due.

The respondent, Lanier, admitted the execution of the bond and mortgage, but denied that there was any consideration for their execution and delivery. He averred that

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Statement of Case.

113 they were extorted from him by the deception and fraudulent misrepresentations of one Samuel L. Burritt, who, acting as the agent of the said company, procured the said bond and mortgage to be executed by him. He further alleged that said Burritt, in order to induce him to execute said bond and mortgage, represented that said company was a banking institution in perfectly solvent circumstances, and possessed of ample means to do a profitable business, and that the primary, and indeed only objects of the execution of the bond and mortgage were, first, to comply with the form required by the charter of incorporation, and secondly, to afford security for any loans of money which might be made to the stockholders upon a pledge of his stock, and that, under no circumstances, would the obligor be called upon to pay the amount of the bonds; that, as a further inducement held out by said agent to persuade defendant to execute said bond and mortgage, he represented that said banking institution would immediately resume specie payments, and would extend to its stockholders great facilities for the borrowing of money, upon simply a pledge of their certificates of stock. Defendant further alleged, that some short time after he had executed and delivered his bond and mortgage, he learned that all the inducements which had been held out to procure the execution of the said bond and mortgage, were not only groundless fictions, but the most gross and fraudulent misrepresentations; that, instead of being at that time in solvent circumstances, the said association was lately insolvent, and its insolvency was well known to the Directors who managed its business; that said Directors never intended to act in good faith, but resorted to this scheme as a means of saving from ruin those who had previously become stockholders. Defendant, Lanier, denied that he had any knowledge that the object in obtaining said bond and 114 mortgage was to obtain funds for banking purposes, and averred that if such was the object, it was carefully concealed from him, and he insisted that if funds were thus raised, it was, in fraud of the new stockholders, fraudulently misappropriated to the payment of losses which had been sustained by the old stockholders.

Lanier further presented in his answer as a defence, that there was no authority in the charter of oncorporation to secure stock, otherwise than by actual payment of cash, and as he never paid any cash, he insisted that he never was legally a stockholder in the said institution, and that the grant of the certificate of stock to him was in direct fraud of the charter. The answer further sets forth, that the loan promised to defendant at the time his bond and mortgage were executed, was to be in par funds, but that on demanding it, par funds were refused, and he was told that he could get nothing but notes of the Union Bank, which at the time were not worth more than forty or fifty cents in the dollar. He received this money and executed the notes hereinbefore mentioned, but asserted that it was with the understanding that he would be allowed to pay back the amount in funds of the like character. The answer alleges mismanagement and partiality on the part of the directors, in favor of the old stockholders, in fraud of the rights and to the great injury of the new stockholders, and concludes by setting up by way of demurrer to the bill, that the "State of Florida," who is set forth as one of the complainants, has no interest in the subject matter of the bill, either as successor to the liabilities of the late Territory of Florida for the guaranty referred to, or as assignee of defendant's bond and mortgage, or in any other capacity. That the Governor of the State had no authority to institute proceedings without the authority of the Legislature, and that the Territory of Florida had by repeated resolves of its legislative authority, declared all such guar- 115 antees as were given to this institution, to be wholly null and void.

The testimony of several witnesses establishes, that Burritt, the agent of the bank, did make generally, such representations as to the solvency of the bank, the benefits to the stockholders, &c., as are spoken of in the answer and that the mode by which the stock was obtained, was by the applicant for stock executing his bond and mortgage, and receiving a draft on New York, which draft was delivered to the bank in payment for the certificate of stock. There was no proof, however, that these representations were made to defendant. The testimony further establishes, that the funds usually loaned on a pledge of the certificate of stock, were Union Bank bills, which were at the time depreciated, or other money that was under par. Several of the witnesses testified, that the losses sustained by the company, were from engagements entered into prior to 1839, and that as far back as 1841, the company was insolvent. It was further testified that the inducements held out by Burritt, the agent, were that the stockholders would have the right to a loan in specie funds equal to three-fifths of the amount of their stock, and that, the dividends which they would receive would be equal to the interest on their loans, and finally, that the stockholders, by the payment of the amount, would relieve their property from the operation of the mortgage. One of the witnesses, who had been appointed an officer in the bank in November, 1839, testified, that the company paid specie for their notes in St. Augustine, until April or May, 1840. This witness further testified, that at the time the company opened its office in Tallahassee, viz: in the autumn of 1839, it was not embarrassed, but as near as he recollected, the effects of embarrassed circumstances first began to appear in the fall of 1840. The cause of embarrassment, was losses upon sales of land, and 116 failure to sell others, and also inability to collect debts; this cause had its origin, he thinks, subsequent to July, 1839. Another witness, who was appointed cashier, in October, 1839, stated that when the company opened its office in Tallahassee, at which place he acted, "it was not seriously embarrassed; it paid specie for its bills at that time," and that he found it embarrassed in the fall of 1840. He further stated, that the specific cause of the embarrassment was the non-payment by its debtors of demands due to it, but he could not say when the debts were contracted, the failure to pay which caused the embarrassment.

The defendant also introduced as evidence, a bill in chancery, filed by the complainant in 1848, against John H. Prentice and William S. Packer, in which the following allegation is made, viz: "that in or about the month of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty, and for a long time previous thereto, your orator has been and was greatly embarrassed in affairs, for want of money to meet its engagements, and in consequence of such embarrassment, your orator, in the summer immediately preceding said month of October, 1840, had suspended payments in specie, as well at their branch in the city of New York, as at their principal office in the city of Tallahassee, and had entirely or in a great measure, ceased from the transaction of business and from making new engagements."

The defendant also offered in evidence, the following circular, and extract from the minutes of the company:

Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, Branch, Apalachicola, May 13, 1839.

Sir:—The following information is communicated for the benefit of such as wish to subscribe to stock in this company:

Bonds and mortgages will be received upon good pro-

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Statement of Case.

117 ductive plantations, and negroes worked on the same, or upon good soil, with woodlands eligibly located in the Territory of Florida, to the amount of half the appraised cash value of such lands and negroes, and the stock of the company at par will be issued in exchange for such bonds and mortgages.

Preference will be given in case of excess of subscription, to such as offer security on improved productive plantations and negroes.

The mortgages to draw interest to the company at eight per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually on the first days of June and December, and the stock to draw dividends semi-annually to the holder.

The dividends heretofore have been five per cent. semi-annually. In connexion with the arrangements, the company made a loan upon the stock and note of the holder, to the amount of three-fifths (3-5ths) its par value, to run as long as the mortgages and bonds, interest on the same payable semi-annually. The mortgages can be paid in whole, or in part, (not less than five hundred dollars in any one payment,) at any time when an installment of interest shall be due, by giving six months previous notice to the company.

No mortgage will be taken or stock issued for a less sum than one thousand dollars; nor for parts of hundreds of dollars, above that sum. As the company desire to close up the subscription of one million for Middle and West Florida, with as little delay as possible, the first applicants whose property is unincumbered, or who can soonest perfect the title papers will obtain stock; certificates from the county clerks, and clerks of the Superior and county courts will in all cases be required, that the title is perfect in the mortgagor, and that there are no incumbrances on the prop-118 erty of any description prior to the execution and record of the mortgage to the company.

Appraisers for the several counties will be furnished with appraisal blanks, and forms of bond and mortgage will be sent to most of the lawyers in Jackson, Gadsden, and Leon counties, on any of whom the applicants can call to have the paper made out, and with whom they can settle for the same. It is understood, that in all cases, the applicant is to pay the expenses of drawing and recording papers, and also the appraisal fee to the commissioner, which last item, by the charter of the company, is fixed at five dollars. A certificate according to form, from one commissioner, is sufficient in each case. The company will not take mortgages on pine land, except in very moderate quantities, connected with good hard timber, and hammock land, suitable to the growth of cotton; nor generally on negroes, unless they are located on plantations. Samuel L. Burritt, Esq., will remain in Tallahassee during June, July, and August, to attend applications from Jackson, Gadsden, Leon, Jefferson, Madison, and Columbia counties, and those who wish stock are invited to make early application to him, and that place personally, or by letter. In cases where the loan of money is perfected before, it will be made during the coming winter, the stock meanwhile is drawing to the holder, according to the dividends heretofore, two per cent. per annum, more than the mortgages draw interest to the company.

When the cash loan is made on the hypothecation of stock, the stockholder or mortgagers still draw dividends. The names of commissioners to make valuation, will be published in the Tallahassee papers.

The readiest way for applicants to complete the business, is to call on some lawyer in the county, where such applicant resides, who will attend to making out the bonds and mortgages, and forwarding them to Mr. Burritt, with de- 119 ductions of titles, clerk's certificates, &c., and receive the certificate of stock; and such attorneys as intend to aid applicants in obtaining stock, are invited to apply to the undersigned at Apalachicola, or to Mr. Burritt, at Tallahassee, for such further information as they may need.

A relinquishment of dower on the part of the wife, must in all cases accompany the mortgage.

Respectfully your obedient serv't.

State of Florida, Leon county:

I, Oscar A. Myers, Clerk of the Circuit Court for the county aforesaid, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original, on file in my office.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 24th day of August, A. D. 1850, and of the Inde-[L.S.] pendence of the United States the 75th year.

OSCAR A. MYERS, Clerk,
By HUGH ARCHER, D. C.

Extract from the Minutes at St. Augustine.

"At a meeting of the Board February 8th, 1839, present, L. Clark, President, And. Anderson, Thomas Douglass, J. L. Smith, A. M. Reid, it was ordered that the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, having had a portion of their stock surrendered to them, in pursuance of an amendment to their charter, passed in February, 1838, are prepared to receive application for their stock at par, on the pledge of bonds and mortgages upon improved unincumbered real and personal estate, held in severalty, in Florida, to the amount of one million of dollars, at their office at Apalachicola. A loan for as long a period as the mortgage has to run, will be made upon stock, to the amount of 3-5 (three-fifths) its par value. So soon as arrangements can be made, and it can be ascertained what amount is wanted, one half the amount of 1.000,000 will be appropriated to Middle and one half to West Florida. No 120 individual will be allowed to have more than fifteen thousand dollars of stock. Proposals must be accompanied by a certificate of approval from duly appointed Commissioners, and also by evidence of title."

The court below decreed, that the bond and mortgage executed by Lanier were authorized by, and in violation of the charter of the company, and were without any legal or valid consideration, and therefore, null and void; also that the promissory notes mentioned constituted no lien on the property specified in the mortgage, so as to entitle the complainant to a decree of foreclosure, and that the bill of complaint be dismissed.

On petition filed, an order of severance from its co-complainant, for the purpose of an appeal, was granted to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and an appeal was accordingly taken from the decree of the Court below.

James A. Archer opened for the appellant.

Charles H. DuPont for appellee.

I. The first point which we make, is one which is raised in the answer, and which is, under our statute, insisted upon as if it had been raised by demurrer.

"The State of Florida," which is joined as a co-plaintiff with the "Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company," it is clear, from the face of the bill, has no interest in the suit, and the bill should therefore be dismissed.

1. The objection is good on general demurrer. 4 Russell En. Ch. Rep., 225, King of Spain vs. Machado; 4 Russell En. Ch. Rep., 242, Cuff vs. Platell; 4 Russell En. Ch. Rep., 244, Makepeace vs. Haythorne; 2 Simons En. Ch.

Rep., 237, Delondre vs. Shaw; 5 Paige R., 336, Clarkson vs. DePeyster; 4 Paige R., 510, Watertown vs. Cowen. 121

2. Or it may be set up and insisted upon in the answer; and in such case it is a ground for dismissing the bill. Mitf. Ch. Plead., [5 Lond. Ed.,] 400-1, citing 4 Law Journal, (A. S.,) 174, Goodyear vs. Robinson; 4 Paige R., 510, Watertown vs. Cowen.

II. Although the execution and delivery of the bond and mortgage exhibited with complainant's bill is admitted, yet the consideration thereof is impeached for "fraud" and "illegality." "Fraud" in the erroneous and false representations of the condition of the Company and the value of its shares of stock; and "illegality" in that the Company was not authorized by its charter to receive subscriptions to or make sale of shares of stock upon mortgage of property, or in any other mode than by the payment of money, and the transaction is thus illegal and void.

1. The transaction is void for "illegality."

No stock passed by the transaction, even if it were such as it was represented to be. It was in violation of the spirit, true intent and meaning, as well as against the letter of the charter of the incorporation.

"Whenever the consideration which is the ground of the "promise, or the promise which is the effect or conse-"quence of the consideration, is unlawful, the whole con-"tract is void." 2 Caine's R., 147, Belding vs. Pitkin.

How was stock to be acquired, in accordance with the provisions of the charter of this Company?

The 12th section of the charter provides that the stockholders shall, at the time of subscribing, pay "ten dollars on each share by him subscribed;" in six months thereafter ten dollars more, and the residue within three years. Vide Thomp. Dig., 313.

It is true that "specie" is not actually prescribed in terms, but the term "ten dollars" can have no other legal signification. If there were any doubt as to the intention of the Legislature in regard to this point, this doubt is dissipated by reference to the 11th section of the charter, which provides for the appointment by the Governor of a Commissioner, who is to examine into the condition of the Company, to ascertain if $200,000 in "specie," or its "equivalent," has been paid in; to examine the officers, on oath, that it has been paid in, as the first instalment of capital, and for no other purpose, &c., and on his report, the Governor is to issue his proclamation, &c. Vide Thomp. Dig., 313. 122

And section 19 authorizes the issue of bills and notes only to the amount of capital actually paid in. Vide Thomp. Dig., 314.

The 12th section further provides that if any shares of stock be forfeited, they shall be re-issued in the manner prescribed in the 9th section, which authorizes books of subscription to be opened, under the superintendence of Commissioners.

The amendatory act of 1838 provides for the surrender of shares and the consolidation of the amounts paid thereon, on the shares retained by stockholders, and the re-issue of the shares so surrendered, but introduces no "new rule" as to the mode of paying for the shares of stock to be re-issued; consequently, the old rule in regard to original subscriptions, or re-issue of forfeited stock, as prescribed by the 9th section, must prevail.

If the amendment of 1838, has, in its operation abolished the old rule for the security or purchase of stock, then any new rule which may be applied to the security or purchase of the "re-issued shares" must depend for its authority not upon any provision of the charter, but wholly upon the arbitrary and interested will of the corporators.

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Argument of Counsel.

If the amendment of 1838 has impliedly, (for it certainly has not expressly,) abolished the old rule in regard to the mode of paying for stock, why may not the argument apply with equal force to every other provision of the original charter? It is very certain that the application of the new mode of securing stock by bond and mortgage practically removes the restriction upon the amount of bills and notes to be issued, and very unwisely dispenses with the wholesome guaranty for a safe and sound circulating medium, which is provided for in the 11th section. 123

In 1839, the company appointed Samuel L. Burritt, Esq., an agent to proceed to Middle and West Florida, "to obtain mortgages for stock—to fill up stock by receiving bonds, secured by mortgages, upon real and personal property."

Under this agency, the 100 shares of stock were granted to the defendant, Augustus H. Lanier, and the bond and mortgage in question given therefor.

We contend that the corporation was not authorized, by its charter, to receive the bond and mortgage upon such consideration, and no stock or shares of stock, passed to the defendant, A. H. Lanier. 21 Wend. R., 219, Crooker vs. Crane; 5 Sm. & Mar. R., 448. King vs. Elliot; 5 Sm. & Mar. R., 539, Hayne vs. Beauchamp; 15 Maine R., 428, Merrill vs. Ball; 4 Ala. R., (N. S.) 559, Smith vs. Al. Life In. & Trust Co.; 3 Strobhart R., 245, Charlotte & S. C. R. R. Co. vs. Blakely.

Where a corporation relies upon a grant of power from the Legislature to do an act, it is as much restricted to the mode prescribed by the Statute for its exercise as to the thing allowed to be done. 5 Barb. R., 649, Farmer's Loan & Trust Co. vs. Carroll; 2 Strobh. R., 245, Charlotte & S. C. R. R. Co. vs. Blakely; 1 Peter's Con. R., 375, Head vs. In. Co.; 7 Cowan R., 465, Dawson vs North. In. Co.

The transaction contravenes the policy of the statute. 124 The policy of requiring capital to be paid in, is very correctly stated by Ch. J. Sharkey, in 5 Sm. & Mar. R., 444-445. So contravening the policy, it is an imposition on the public—it is iniquitous, therefore void.

Every contract, the consideration of which is tainted with illegality, is void. Illegality exists when the act is either expressly prohibited, or when the prohibition is implied from the nature and object of the statute. Story on Con., 104, §162; Story on Prom. Notes, 204, §189; 1 Story Eq. Ju., §296; 2 Wilson's R. 347.

It will not do to urge that the company did not intend to violate the law. Parties must be presumed to intend the natural and ordinary consequences of their acts. 9 R. & C. R., 643, Haire vs. Wilson; 5 Cowan R., 573, Mackie vs. Cairnes.

Where the fact of an actual contravention of law is established, no innocence of intent, however perfect, can avert the legal penalty. The Hoop, 1 Robs. Abdm., 216.

The law says that where a man does an act to defraud the intention of the legislature, he shall suffer all the inconveniences of his act. 6 Vesey, Jr. R., 747, Curtis vs. Perry.

In Collins vs. Blantern, L. C. J. Wilmot says, the reason why such contracts are void, is for the public good—you shall not stipulate for iniquity. 1 Smith Lead. Cases, 154.

There is something monstrous in the proposition, that a court of law will carry into effect a contract founded upon a breech of law. It is encouraging disobedience and giving to disloyalty its unhallowed fruits. 16 John. R., 486, Griswold vs. Waddington.

See also 2 Peter's R. 527, Bank U. S. vs. Owen.

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, has summed up the law on this subject, with great force and beauty of language. "The consideration," says he, "must not only be "valuable, but it must be a lawful consideration, and not "repugnant to law or sound policy, or good morals; ex "turpi contractu actio non oritur, and no person even so "far back as the feudal ages, was permitted by law to stip- "ulate for iniquity," &c., &c. 2 Kent's Com. 466.

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Argument of Counsel.

And again, "the courts of justice will allow the objec- "tion that the consideration of the contract was immoral "or illegal, to be made, even by the guilty party to the "contract, for the allowance is not for the sake of the par- "ty who raises the objection, but is grounded on general "principles of policy."

"A particeps criminis has been held to be entitled in "equity on his own application, to relief against his own "contract, when the contract was illegal, or against the "policy of the law, and relief became necessary to prevent "injury to others. It was no objection, that the plaintiff "himself was a party to the illegal transaction." Vide 2 Kent's Com., 467, citing numerous cases.

A similar doctrine is sustained by the following authorities: Story on Con., 103, § 159 to 162; ib., 140, §218 to 219; ib., Prom. Notes, 214; 2 Will. R., 347, Collins vs. Blanton; 2 Caines, R., 149; Belden vs. Pitkin; 12 John. R., 1 to 14, Yates vs. Foot.

If it be contended that in this case both parties are implicated, the mortgagor as well as the mortgagee, and both are equally culpable, granted; and then we invoke the maxim "in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis."

NOTE.—It was contended on the trial below, that the defendant had ratified and confirmed and waived the fraud and illegality. As to the waiver of the fraud, there is no evidence in the record, and as to the ratification and confirmation of the illegality, it is not susceptible of ratifica-126 tion or confirmation. Vide Story's Eq. Jur., §306, where the doctrine is fully laid down.

III. As to the fraud and misrepresentation.

Whoever would seek admission into a Court of Equity, must come with clean hands. A Court of Equity will never interfere in opposition to conscience or good faith. 5 How. S. C. R., Creath vs. Sims; Buller's N. P., 235; Greenleaf, §212.

The parties, i. e., the company by its agent, and the defendant, met the first for the purpose of selling shares in the stock of the company; the latter for the purpose of buying said shares. The value of the shares was dependent on the condition of the company as to its solvency, freedom from embarrassment, and prosperous state of its business, and consequently the representations as to these matters were material to the bargain.

The solvency of the company was a material fact, and whether the representation was known to be false to the vendor, or was made without knowing whether it was true or false, is wholly immaterial, for the affirmation of what one does not know to be true, is equally unjustifiable as the affirmation of what is known to be positively false.

Even if a party by mistake misrepresents a material fact, it is equally conclusive; for it operates as a surprise and imposition on the other party. Vide the doctrine fully laid down in 1 Story Eq. Jur., §193 et sequiter; 2 Kent's Com., 482, et seq.; 1 Story's Rep., 260, Daniel vs. Mitchell; 2 ib., 732, Doggett vs. Emmerson; 1 Woodb. & M. R., 92, Warner vs. Daniel; ib., 205, Doggett vs. Emmerson.

The condition of the company, and therefore the value of the stock was not only a material fact, but was a matter in which we are bound to believe the defendant did put a trust and confidence in the representations of the officers and agents of the company. The defendant could presume 127 that the condition of the company was better known to the officers of the company than to any one else. Certainly the defendant had not an equal opportunity with them of knowing the fact—he was bound to rely on their representations. 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 197 et seq.; ib. § 202.

The defendant was misled, and to his prejudice. 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 202-203.

The company cannot say that the agent was unauthorized to make the representations. Even in the absence of evidence of previous express authority, when the company adopt the fruit of their agent's negotiations, to-wit: the bond and mortgage, they are bound to take the same cum onere, with his representations and acts. 13 N. Hamp. R., 149, Hovey vs. Blanchard; 3 Story's R., 700-735-6, Doggett vs. Emmerson.

But there is in the record evidence of previous express authority given to Samuel L. Burritt, the agent. Vide printed circular.

The same circular which purports to have been issued by the company contains representations as to the business of the company, and especially as to the dividends which might be expected, and the advantage of borrowing money as to interest, &c.

These are the representations—what the reality?

The office is opened in Tallahassee in 1840. Almost immediately it is confessedly embarrassed, and finally insolvent.

See the bill filed by the company under its corporate seal against Packer, Prentiss & Co.

If the company was solvent and doing a prosperous business in 1839, whence this irremediable insolvency and ruin which so rapidly supervened?

This fact throws such suspicion on the truth and fairness of the representations which were made to the defendant 128 to induce him to execute the bond and mortgage, as to impose upon the company the onus of proving the good faith of the transaction.

We have not had such access to the books and transactions of the company as will enable us to demonstrate what the bank has itself asserted, viz: that in the year 1840 its stock "was not worth $20 per share in the market, if intrinsically so much." Vide Bill vs. Packer, Prentiss & Co.

A reference to the master with the books and the machinery which a Court of Equity possesses for eliciting the truth, would enable us satisfactorily to demonstrate the problem of the value of the stock of this company at the date of the execution of the bond and mortgage, set forth in complainant's bill of complaint.,

It may be referred to as a matter of history, that this company was one which owed its birth to the unsound and inflated condition of trade and monetary concerns at the time of its creation. The period of 1836-6-7, in the Northern cities and in Europe, and which in our unfortunate Territory continued to a later period, say 1840, will long be remembered.

The company had for its first shareholders citizens and residents of the Northern States, principally of New York. Its first president and cashier, indeed the successive presidents and cashiers and other officers, until its hopeless insolvency was firmly established by assignments of the entire assets, were from the Northern States.

IV. The company commenced operations in 1835 or 1836 at St. Augustine, in East Florida, with, it is presumed, the 10 per cent. required by the charter, paid in. At the session of the legislature in 1836, they apply to have the next instalment postponed one year, which is allowed. Vide Thomp. Dig., 316.

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Argument of Counsel.

In 1837, they apply for and are allowed a further postponement of two years. This is the period of the general commercial crash. Ibid.

In 1838 they apply for and are allowed to "consolidate" their stock, that is to say, the shareholders are permitted to "surrender" nine shares in every ten, and retain one as paid in full. Vide Thomp. Dig., 317.

Was there a reason for this desire to "surrender" stock, other than the very generous wish to permit the citizens of Middle and West Florida to participate in the "semi-annual dividends of five per cent.," referred to in the printed circular? It requires no very great astuteness of intellect to penetrate the real motive of these Wall street speculators.

By the charter, the shareholders having subscribed for a certain number of shares, they were liable and bound to pay the remaining ninety per cent. if necessary to meet the obligations of the company, and might be coerced so to do by creditors. 3 Mason's C. C. R., 308, Wood vs. Dummer; 19 Johns. R., 474, Slee vs. Bloom; 16 Conn., R., 593, Ward vs. Griswoldville Co.; George R., 486, Hightower vs. Thornton; Angell & Ames on Corp.

At that period of bank insolvencies and other commercial derangements, the possession of the shares was onerous, and it was no doubt thought a brillant idea to escape the responsibility which menaced them, by obtaining the legislative permission to "consolidate" their payment of 10 per cent. upon a few shares, and "surrender" the balance—thus they hoped to wipe out all "responsibility" for any thing beyond the amount paid—they were willing to lose that, but nothing more.

There was probably a doubt about the success of this scheme as it stood, whether it was competent for the legislature thus to deprive the creditors of the bank of a fund which the law had raised for their satisfaction. An invasion of vested rights might have been thus made; but if the bank could re-issue the shares so "surrendered," and obtain either money or mortgages of property from the new stockholders, they would escape responsibility; or at least have assistance in bearing the loss of the previous operations of the company, and in paying the existing creitors.

Do not the circumstances connected with this affair warrant the conclusion above stated, viz: that the only motive which induced the company to ask for permission to surrender and re-issue their capital stock, was to escape the personal responsibility which had been incurred by the original stockholders, by shifting it to the shoulders of the unsuspecting farmers of Middle and West Florida?

The condition of the company at this time is represented as highly prosperous.—the stock yielding a dividend of 10 per cent. per annum, with flattering prospects of increasing prosperity. Nor is it reasonable to expect that holders of stock in a prosperous institution, yielding so large a dividend, shall, without consideration, surrender 9-10ths of their shares, in order that strangers may come in and participate in the profits of the enterprise, after all the trouble and risk consequent upon the organization, shall have been passed.

But it may be asked with some show of plausibility, why did the farmers of Middle Florida permit themselves to be deceived and deluded by such a flimsy exhibition of disinterested generosity? The answer is obvious—it is because they were farmers, and their deceivers the wily stockjobbers of Wall street.

We think that the allegation contained in the answer of defendant is fully sustained by the facts and circumstances connected with the execution and delivery of the bond and mortgage, viz: that the primary object intended to be obtained by the "surrender," "consolidation," and "re-issue," of the shares of the stock, was to entrap the unwary agriculturists of Middle and West Florida into a subscription for the stock proposed to be re-issued, and thereby to shield from pecuniary loss the original stockholders of the said company by saddling their responsibilities upon such citizens as might be thus imposed upon.

This is not the case of a creditor of the bank suing a stockholder for contribution to pay his debt. What assurance or guaranty have the court that the creditors of this bank will be benefitted by the proceeds of a decree in this cause?

M. L. Long, on the same side.

W. G. M. Davis, for appellant.

The bill was dismissed in the court below on the ground assumed in the answer, that the bond was illegal, it being given in violation of the act incorporating the appellant.

The proof in the case shows that the bond was given in consideration of a draft drawn by the Southern Life insurance and Trust Company, on its agents in New York, which draft was afterwards taken by the company in payment of one hundred shares of stock. It is not material to inquire whether any difference exists between a bond given directly for stock, or one given for a draft or note, which is afterwards discounted, and the proceeds applied to the payment for stock, and therefore I do not particularly notice the evidence for the purpose of discussing that question, although the Supreme Court of Mississippi, in the case relied on by the appellee—Hayne vs Beauchamp, 5 Sme. and Marshall, 515—found an important distinction between the two modes of paying for stock, which influenced the decision in that case. If this court, however, should give such weight to the decision, as it received in the court below, then I ask that the facts in the record in relation to the giving the draft for the bond, the subsequent discount by the bank, and the application of the proceeds to pay for the stock, all of which is particularly described in the deposition of Hammond, be compared with the facts in the case of Hayne vs. Beauchamp, to see whether there is the slightest difference in effect between the two transactions. If I could assent to the reasoning of the majority of the court in Hayne vs. Beauchamp, and did I believe that court would yield its assent to the position there taken, I would not hesitate to risk our case upon the entire similarity in point of legal effect, to that, and confine my argument entirely to the facts necessary to establish such identity; but confident as I am, that this court will, as other courts have, deem the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Clayton, in Hayne vs. Beauchamp, more satisfactory, as putting the decision on the true ground, I shall make no argument upon the evidence relating to the discount of the draft, and the check given for the proceeds in payment for the stock.

The first case decided in this country, in which any such doctrine as that put forth by the court below, was ever declared, was that of Jenkins vs. the Union Turnpike Company, decided in the Court of Errors of the State of New York, First Caine's Cases in Error, 85. To this case all subsequent decisions of a similar character have referred for authority. It then becomes material to inquire what were the reasons given for that decision, in order to see whether they apply to this case.

The following passage from the opinion of Chancellor Lansing shows the grounds upon which the Court of Errors rested its judgment:

"The acts to be performed by the Commissioners were

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Argument of Counsel.

133 merely preparatory to its creation. To give effect to their acts, their power must be strictly pursued. They had no discretion or latitude of action—their line of conduct was marked with the utmost precision. They were directed to exact from the persons who were to be admitted members of the corporation, both subscription and payment, as a condition precedent to their admission. If they omitted either to subscribe or pay, they did not come within the terms of admission. If so, the bare act of subscription was wholly nugatory. The subscribers who were to meet, could only constitute themselves such, within the intent of the statute, by a compliance with the terms prescribed by it. When the corporation was organized, the Directors might dispense with the exaction of the first payment."

"The power of the Commissioners was limited to a certain mode of receiving subscriptions. The power was to be strictly pursued, and they could not deviate from the requirements of the statute, and unless the requirements of the statute were pursued, there was no corporation created, and consequently no stock secured. If the contract is sought to be viewed as a promise to pay for the stock by the subscriber, in consideration of a promise to deliver the stock by the corporation, the answer is, that the contract of the subscriber is not binding, because there was no corporation in existence to be bound by the alleged agreement to deliver the stock, and consequently no consideration for the promise to pay for the subscription."

In all the subsequent cases, when similar questions arose in New York, the courts invariably held that the case in 1st Caine, just quoted, was decided upon the ground stated by Lansing, Ch. See the cases of Goshen and Minnisink Turnpike Company vs. Hustin, 9 John. R., 218; Highland Turnpike Company vs. McKean, 10 John R.,

In the first case, the court expressly limit the application of the case in 1 Caine to such subscriptions for stock as are made to corporations not in essee. The same distinction runs through all the New York cases.

The Supreme Court of Mississippi, in the case of Lewis vs. Roberts, in 558 of 13 Smedes and Marshall, in commenting upon the case of Hayne vs. Beauchamp, 5 ibid., 515, expressly confine that case to subscriptions for the first instalment for stock, and hold as they held in King vs. Elliott, 5 Smedes and Marshall, 428, that a note given for stock bought of a corporation in essee, was valid.

Having thus shown that the decisions relied on to support the decree, apply only to subscriptions made to corporations about to be formed, and that the reasons assigned for holding notes given for such subscriptions void, are the want of power, in the officer, to dispense with the requisition of the law, and the consequent want of consideration, &c., it seems to me that I have only to advert to the facts in this case which show a corporation already formed, and a directory, competent to represent it, to convince the court of the inapplicability of the cases I have been commenting upon to the one under discussion.

But I proceed to do more perhaps than is requisite, and to prove that the weight of argument and authority is opposed in toto to the doctrine of those cases, and that they should not receive the approbation of this court, because they are unsound in law, and lead to consequences not to be furthered by courts of justice.

The question now before this court, has been examined and decided in Vermont, in the case of the Central Railroad Company vs. Clayes, 21 Ver. R., 31.

The defence set up was, that the note was void, &c. The Court says: "The note in suit was given for the first five 135 dollars payable on each share, which, by the terms of the charter of incorporation, was to be paid to the commissioners at the time of subscription. This, it is said, cannot constitute a sufficient consideration to sustain the note, but we think otherwise."

By the terms of the charter, each subscriber becomes a stockholder and a member of the company, and the interest thereby acquired is a sufficient consideration to support an action for the amount subscribed against the person subscribing, upon an express promise, &c. The court intimates an opinion that had the corporation been a bank, a different decision might have been made, and the rule in New York might have been adopted—but as this is but an intimation of an opinion it decides nothing—I quote the case to show that the New York doctrine was disapproved.

The same question has arisen in Alabama, and has been before the court in several cases, but was not decided until it came up in Selma and Tennessee Railroad vs. Rountree, 7 Ala. R., 670, where the cases in New York are reviewed. The Supreme Court of Alabama refuses its concurrence with the doctrine of the Court of Errors of New York, as declared in Union T. Company vs. Jenkins, in 1 Caine's Cases, 85, but approves and adopts the decision of the Supreme Court of that State in the same case. The Alabama Supreme Court also indicates an opinion that a difference exists between a monied corporation and a Railroad Company, and refers to the charter of two of their own banks. But an examination of them will show that the payment of the first instalment is made a condition precedent to their existence. In such case, no doubt, were no money paid there would be no corporation.

The same question was raised and decided in Ohio, in the case of Henry, et al. vs. Vamilla, and A. R. R. Com- 136 pany, 17 Ohio, 190. In this case the defence set up was the failure to pay in specie the first instalment, and a contract to pay in goods. The court says: "Although the stockholders were required to pay at the time of subscribing, five dollars on each share subscribed, still in the opinion of the court, the omission to pay that sum does not release them from their liability to pay up their subscription." The case in New York and similar ones in Pennsylvania, were cited by the defendants.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts have also had under their consideration, the question, in the case of Chester Glass Company vs. Dewey, 16 Mass., 94. They held in opposition to the Court of Errors of New York, that a subscription similar to that in Union T. Company vs. Jenkins, was valid.

In Minor vs. Mechanic's Bank of Alexandria, 1 Peters, 46, a defence offered to be set up that the mode in which the stock was allotted was in conflict with the charter, was not deemed sufficient by the court to release the party from his subscription.

I have thus far treated the subject in an abstract point of view, and without any reference to the peculiar features of the charter of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company. I now wish to show that the contract between the subscriber for stock and the company, was a compliance in effect with the spirit of the charter.

By the sixth section of the charter, the company was required to loan its capital on bond and mortgage, but by the amendatory act of 1838, section 4, permission was given to use two-fifths for banking purposes.

It must be observed, that this company was not, in its original creation, purposed to be either wholly or for the most part, a banking concern. The legislature did not

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Argument of Counsel.

137 evince any desire to have the capital stock all paid into the hands of the directors, there to remain, but on the contrary, expressly required the directors not to retain it on hand. Bonds and mortgages, and not specie, was what the legislature designed should constitute the fund or indemnity against loss to which depositors and others must trust. This being made manifest, the policy which the defence sets up and assumes to have been violated, never existed at all under the first charter, but by express enactment—not vague inference—the Legislature forbid the accumulation of the capital in specie, or its representation. Hence, all the cases quoted which hold the subscription for stock in a bank not paid in specie to be void, because of the policy asserted to exist in relation to banks generally, to wit: the payment of specie for stock, did not apply to this company in its original organization. The Supreme Court of Mississippi, in the case of Hayne vs. Beauchamp, and the court below in this case, hold that the legislature, in requiring that specie alone should be paid for stock, manifested an intention to provide that the bank should have its capital paid in and to be in hand in specie, to provide a fund for the redemption of its circulation. If I am correct in the view which I have taken, that the legislature in the creation of this corporation, manifested the opposite intention, then this case differs toto coelo from those relied on by the other side, and the reasons given in those cases, and those advanced by the Judge who decided this case, are inapplicable, and therefore do not support the decision.

Nor does the fact that the Legislature, in the amendatory act of 1838, section 4, gave the power to use two-fifths of their capital for banking, change the legal aspect of the contract. If it had any application which could bring it within the reason of the cases in New York and Mississip-138 pi, it could only do so as to the two-fifths, and no more. But the legislature does not peremptorily repeal the former law and absolutely require two-fifths to be used for banking; it gives the company the privilege of so doing, to be used or not, at the option of the directors—and if they see fit not to do so, they could act in conformity with the former requirements of the charter.

The legislature then, having not only permitted but required the capital paid in to be borrowed on bond and mortgage, having by express provision sanctioned such an investment of it, no act of the stockholders, or of the directors, not conflicting with the law, can be pronounced in valid—but any act which, in its operation and legal effect, secures the end desired to be attained, and effects the intention, is valid for all purposes, upon the most obvious principles of reason and common sense.

One of the fixed rules of construction in relation to corporations, is: "that all acts of incorporation are held to be directory unless they expressly avoid all security taken other than that prescribed, and that although neglect of this kind may be culpable on the part of directors of the company, the security taken may be enforced against him who gave it." Angell & Ames, Corp., 190.

In Little vs. O'Brien, 9 Mass., 423, the case was this—"the charter required the capital should be invested in certain stocks; whereas, instead, the company took the notes of the stockholders with collateral security. It was said by the court, that whether for this misbehavior of the corporation the government might not serve their franchises upon due process, was a question not before them, but that it did not lie in the mouth of a stockholder for this cause to avoid his contract, which, as between him and the company, was made upon a sufficient consideration."

The same principal is maintained in the case of Chester 139
Glass Co. vs. Dewey, before cited.

In the case of the Bank vs. Hammond, 1 Richardson's Law Rep., 288, which was a suit upon a note for a large sum, and secured by a different kind of security than that prescribed by the charter, the Supreme Court say: "It is, however, too strict to insist that a power which is contained in a grant, and which, in various ways, may be pertinent to the purposes of a corporation, may be restricted to a particular form of directions for its exercise in that form."

In Bates vs. Hines, 2 Ala., Rep., 451, in which a question arose as to the validity of a contract made with a bank, and said to have been in violation of certain provisions of its charter—the court say: "Be the rule of construction in this class of cases ever so strict, it must be admitted that in most if not every act of incorporation, while certain rules are prescribed which cannot be transcended, and the observance of which are essential to the validity of its contracts, there are others which are merely directory to the officers of the corporation, and the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of contracts made in reference to them." The following cases are cited by the court to sustain this proposition:

Commissioners, &c., vs. Leckie, 6 S. & R., 166; Bank N. Liberties vs. Cresson, 12 Ibid., 306; Bank U. S. vs. Dandridge, 12 Wheat., 64; Bulkly vs. Fishing Co., 2 Conn., 252.

In the case of Bates vs. Hines, just referred to, the court says: "The reason of the restraint was to guard the Bank against loss." "It was doubtless expected by the legislature that its commands would be obeyed by its agents, but it is impossible to suppose that it was ever contemplated as the result of a regulation intended to protect the public against loss, that it by collusion with the directors (or as 140 was doubtless the fact in this case, an honest mistake on the part of the directors) an individual could succeed in getting, on a bill of exchange, a larger sum than the charter allowed, that the same regulation would protect him against paying it. Whatever may be the liability of the directors in such a case, the borrower must return the money. Any other construction would place the capital of the bank at the mercy of a venal directory and profligate borrower."

To the same effect is the case of Bond vs. Central Bank, 2 Kelly, 92. See also 9 Ala., 853.

By the sixth section of the original charter of the bank, it was required that its capital stock should be invested in bond and mortgage, as before remarked. In the transaction with Lanier, the corporation carried out the intention but not in the particular mode which the defence insistss should have been adopted. It is contended that Lanier should have paid specie for his stock; but of course it is not denied but that had he done so, the bank could have immediately loaned him the very money he paid in, provided he furnished the kind of security the charter stipulated would be obtained. I think the counsel for the defence will find it difficult to prove that taking the bond and mortgage for the stock in the first instance, essentially varied the effect of the transaction, or that such mode of investing the capital militated in any way whatever against the end desired to be secured by the sixth section of the first act of incorporation; as to the mode in which the object was effected, the provisions in the charter are clearly directory in their character, and the failure to pursue the order of proceeding pointed out in the law, no more renders the acts done illegal and void, than the more essential deviations which existed in the cases just cited in Alabama,

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Argument of Counsel.

141 South Carolina, Georgia, Massachusetts, &c. In those cases, the acts done were in contravention of the charter. In this case, the sale of the stock and the security taken, fully realized the intention of the legislature. No law was violated—no policy frustrated, no one was injured.

But independent of the reason which I have adduced to show that the act was valid and in conformity with the spirit of the charter of the corporation, I beg leave further to refer to the acts of incorporation and the amendatory laws, for the purpose of showing, as I think I can do, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the directions in the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th sections of the first act of incorporation do not apply to the sale of the surrendered stock—conceding for the sake of argument, all the conclusions deduced from the provisions of said sections by the defendant's counsel.

The sections referred to, provide for Commissioners to receive subscription—that the book shall be kept open at particular places, and that when the stock is subscribed for, and a certain sum paid in cash, that the Governor shall issue his proclamation, &c. These are the usual restrictions and limitations imposed by the legislature in the creation of a monied corporation. They provide for the mode and manner of the creation, and when these conditions precedent are complied with, and proclamation made, the corporation exists.

It must be admitted that the third section of the act of 1838, in giving to the company the right to re-issue the surrendered stock, is entirely silent as to the mode and manner in which the same shall be done. The grant of the power to accept the surrender of the shares subscribed and to re-issue them, is unlimited and unrestrictive. But the defendant contends that the limitations and restrictions contained in the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th sections of the 142 original act, are by implication, enjoined in the amendment. It is an unusual doctrine, that a grant, in itself free and unfettered, should receive a construction affixing restrictions of any kind, but such position is the more untenable when sought to be sustained by reference to a previous act imposing such restriction—which act is not prospective as to any amendments which may be made, and which by its terms and context evidently was intended to have relation to acts passed and performed, and which restraining act is not referred to in the grant—but particularly when, as in this case, the restrictions and limitations of the first law could not be made to apply to the exercise of granted power, without supposing that the legislature demanded that to be done which would be manifestly absurd as well as inconsistent and impossible.

If any part of the directions contained in the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th sections of the original charter apply to the grant made in the third section of the amended act of incorporation of 1838, and are conditions upon which alone the grant can be enjoyed, then every condition and limitation in the sections cited applies. I know of no rule by which a part can be referred to and the balance rejected. If this be true, I ask the court to consider the absurdities which would result should such reasoning be carried out. It would suppose the legislature to have required that the corporation which was in existence, with a large capital paid in, and in the pursuit of its lawful business, should go through the same initiatory steps which had been provided for its formation, leaving nothing to the discretion of its directors or the judgment of its stockholders, whose interests would be most affected by any false step. Is it within the bounds of reason, that the legislature should have required that new books should be opened, commissioners appointed, and after a certain time, and on the payment of a certain sum, proclamation made by the Gover- 143 nor, &c., &c., before the corporation could sell a share of its stock? Where is any reference to the appointment of such commissioners, or to the proclamation by the Governor? Or what reason is there to suppose that any such requirement was intended? The counsel for defence will say with me, I think, that there is no ground to contend that any such proceedings were enjoined. Where, then, I ask, do they find the rule that is to govern the court in deciding which of the limitations and restrictions in the original charter is applicable, and which is not? The argument used on the other side, if it should prevail, would launch the court into a sea of conjecture, without any fixed rule to govern it. Again—the 12th section of the original act provides that no more than ten per cent. shall be required at the time of subscribing, and that additional instalments may be called for within fixed periods, and that the whole amount shall be paid in a certain time. Now, suppose this to be applicable to the re-issued stock. If such had been the case, the persons subscribing for it would be entitled (by paying ten per cent.,) to enjoy the same rights and privileges, and to the same extent, as the same were had and possessed by the stockholders who had paid for their stock in cash in full. Is it to be supposed that such gross inequality was ever contemplated by the Legislature?

The slightest examination of the two acts referred to will suffice to convince the understanding of any man of common sense that they are inconsistent one with the other, and have no material dependence; and even if the first act had been referred to by the last, no court could have reconciled them—still less will a court find a reference where none can exist, or construe a grant so as to subject it to limitations utterly inapplicable, upon bare surmise of an intention, without any expression in the law making the 144 grant referring to the act containing the limitation. I maintain that no power exists by which such a construction can be made. The mere belief that the Legislature favored such a policy as that contended for, because they had provided certain limitations in the first grant, would not justify the court in imposing similar limitations upon the second, when the Legislature itself had not so provided. To do so, would be to materially alter the contract, and render it less valuable, and amount to a violation of its obligation.

If, then, the provisions of the first act are inapplicable to the sale of the surrendered stock, or even if the whole, or any part, is applicable, yet, if the court should agree with me, that by the amended act giving power to the corporation to accept a surrender, and make sale of the stock, no limitation and no condition are imposed, in either aspect of the case, there is no ground for the defence set up, as to the legality of the sale to rest upon.

But even granting the mode in which the sale of stock was made to be illegal and violative of the policy indicated in the charter, yet I contend that the defendant cannot escape from paying his bond. He has assumed to act and has acted as a stockholder; he has received all the benefits of the contract, and should he be released from liability, he will enjoy the fruits of his illegal act; and the creditors of the corporation, the persons designed to be protected by the Legislature, are saddled with the loss. The observations of the Supreme Court of Alabama, in disposing of a defence similar to that set up in this case, are here peculiarly appropriate, and although before quoted in the argument, I again cite them: "It is impossible to suppose," say the court, "that it was contemplated as the result of a regulation intended to protect the public against loss, 145 that if, by collusion with the directors, &c., an individual could succeed in getting on a bill of exchange a larger sum than the charter allowed, that the same regulation would protect him against paying it." By the decision made in the court below, the regulation said to exist, and alleged to have been "intended to protect the public against loss," is made to produce the very result deprecated, and "the same regulation protects him (Lanier) against paying." This kind of reasoning, which justifies and supports such a decision, is that which disregards the spirit and reason of the law, and adheres to the "letter which killeth." To such judgments the maxim "qui haeret in litera haeret in cortice" be applied.

There is a numerous class of cases of a kindred nature with that before the court, some of which have been cited in another branch of the argument, in all of which it has been held that the defence set up by Lanier is untenable, and the reasons given have been that the party, having obtained the stock and having held himself out to the world as a stockholder, was estopped to deny his character as such, and could not plead his own illegality to avoid the contract. And particularly has this been decided when the corporation had become insolvent, and the suit has been for the benefit of creditors.

The following authorities are to this part of the argument:—5 Alaba. R., 787; 17 Ohio, 190; 19 Ibid, 463; 16 Mass., 94; 9 Ibid, 423; 21 Vermont, 31; 20 Conn., 170; 14 Wendell, 20; 6 Hill, 624; 1 Hall S. C.; 2 Barbour S. C., 294; 7 Alaba., 670.

The complainant is admitted to be insolvent. It has been held, in a variety of cases, that when a corporation becomes insolvent, the officers are trustees for the creditors, and that it is their duty to collect the debts due to the corporation, and pay those due by it. This being the law, 146 the suit before the court can only be viewed as a proceeding instituted for the benefit of creditors, and the decisions last quoted apply with full force to the case. See Wood vs. Dummer, 3 Mason C. C. R., 308. It is all the same as though the suit had been brought by one creditor in behalf of himself and other creditors.

SEMMES, J.:

This was a suit in chancery, commenced in the name of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and the State of Florida, against A. H. Lanier.

The preliminary question made in argument, and raised by the answer of respondent, is that the State of Florida has no interest in the suit, and that, therefore, the bill should be dismissed. The objection is presented by special matter, set up in the answer by way of demurrer, under the provisions of our statute law. Thomp. Dig., 458, § 9.

We do not doubt the correctness of the doctrine, or its application to this case, that, to sustain the character of a plaintiff, it is requisite to show in him an interest, either legal or equitable, in the subject matter of the suit. The principal facts stated in the bill, and relied on in support of the interest of the State, is, that by reason of certain liabilities incurred by the late Territory of Florida for this Company, under the authority of its charter, the bond and mortgage of respondent were deposited with the Governor of the Territory, to indemnify it against loss; and that, upon the filing of the bill, the said bond and mortgage (which had been previously turned over to the Governor of the State,) was held by him in trust, and as a security for the ultimate payment and redemption of the liabilities of said Territory; and that the suit was brought at the instance of said Governor, for and in behalf of said State. It is a misconception of the term to say that these allegations, or any 147 of them, are inferences of law. They are stated and relied on as matters of fact, and are all admitted by the demurrer to be true.

Whether the State of Florida has, in any mode or form, incurred any liability in respect to this matter, is not a question for our consideration; nor do we so decide, or even intimate an opinion. In fact, as far as concerns the question before us, it is not necessary that there should have existed the remotest liability on the part of the State to authorize its being made a party to the suit; for if, upon the organization of the State Government, this bond and mortgage were delivered to the executive, and he as such held them in trust, as a security and means of indemnity for another party, it was both proper and necessary that the State should have been made a complainant. It would seem scarcely necessary to refer to the manifest distinction between the case before us and the cases of the King of Spain vs. Machado, 4 Russ., 225; Cuff vs. Platell, ibid, 242, and other authorities to the same effect. In these cases, the entire want of interest on the part of some of the complainants, appeared on the face of the bill, and the demurrer was of course sustained by the court. In the case of Makepeace vs. Haythorne, 4 Russ., 244, the objection did not appear on the face of the bill, but was raised by plea. In these cases the court, in affirmation of the well settled doctrine on this subject, say that if a party has no interest in the suit, the bill is demurrable, if that fact appears on the bill; but if the fact does not appear on the bill, but is brought forward by plea, it is a good defence to the suit. The principles announced by the court in these authorities, are directly adverse to the argument of respondent's counsel.

But independent of these views, a fatal objection to this demurrer is, that it is a speaking one. 1 Story's Eq. Pl., 148 495. It alleges, in aid of itself, that the Territory of Florida in the first instance was not liable on its guarantee; that the State is not the successor of the Territory as to any liabilities incurred by the latter; that the bond and mortgage were not assigned to the State as a security; and that the Governor had no authority to institute suit without the authority of the General Assembly, who alone had power to enter into agreement recognizing the liability of the State; and that the late Territory, through the Legislature, has, by repeated action, declared said guaranties null and void. All these facts may undoubtedly be true, but it was not the office of the demurrer to set them up in its support. The very attempt to do so is fatal to the demurrer. Being matters dehors the bill, they could only be raised by plea in order to be available. But the argument of counsel in support of his demurrer proves too much; for if it be true, as the answer states, that the State was made a party without due authority, then the rule of practice is of peculiar application, that where a person is made a co-plaintiff improperly, without his privity or consent, the proper motion is that his name be stricken out, not that the bill be dismissed even as to him.

The respondent has, at this stage of the case, no cause of complaint. Our statute, which allows a defendant to set up special matter in his answer, and claim the same benefit he would be entitled to if he had demurred to the bill, is but an affirmance of the rule of Chancery practice, as recognized by the English Courts; and the construction given by those courts to this rule is, that only at the hearing of the cause such benefit can be insisted on, except in the case of multifariousness or misjoinder, in which case, if the defendant does not take the objection in limine, the court, considering the mischief as already incurred, will not, except in a special case, allow it to prevail at the hearing. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., Amer. Ed., 819, and authorities cited. 149

If the respondent, as was his duty, had presented this point in limine, the objection might have been corrected without prejudice to the rights of the company. Omitting to do so, and going into the merits of the case, he waived his demurrer; for it would be against every rule of propriety to allow a defendant to call upon the court for a decree on the merits, and if against him, to fall back upon his demurrer, and invoke the judgment of the court upon that. And to this extent does the argument of counsel lead us. Its effect would be to mislead opposing counsel, and embarrass the court in the discharge of its duty. We feel no hesitancy in saying that a defendant should never be allowed, by such a device, to spring upon his adversary in the appellate tribunal, an objection he did not urge in the court below, but by his course, induced both the Judge and counsel to suppose he had waived the objection. We know of no rule of chancery practice which would authorize such a proceeding, and we feel no disposition to establish one.

We now proceed to the consideration of the merits of this suit; and, in view of the magnitude of the interest at stake, and with an anxious desire of settling correctly the principles involved, we have bestowed all the time at the disposal of the court to the consideration of the subject, aided as we have been by the very able and elaborate investigation made by counsel.

The bank was organized and went into operation in 1835. In 1839, the company re-issued stock, which had been surrendered, under the provisions of the amendatory act of 1838, and the respondent, Lanier, became the purchaser of one hundred shares, for the payment of which he executed his bond and mortgage to secure the sum of $10,000. Some 150 short time thereafter, in right of his being a stockholder, and upon the faith of his shares of stock, he borrowed from the bank the several sums of $6,000 and $917, for which he gave his notes. The bill is brought to foreclose the mortgage and recover the amounts due on the bond and notes.

Upon the part of the respondent, it is contended that the bond and mortgage were given without consideration, and that they are illegal and void.

First.—Because the surrendered stock was issued by the company contrary to the mode prescribed by the charter;

Secondly.—The capital stock of the bank could not be sold for bonds and mortgages;

And thirdly.—The respondent was induced to execute and deliver to the company his bond and mortgage by the fraudulent representations of its agent.

No defence is urged against the payment of the notes for $6,917, further than that the amount borrowed was not specie or its equivalent, but bills of the bank, which it is alleged were at a discount.

The last point does not require consideration, for whether the fact be as stated or not, it cannot affect the liability of Lanier, or the validity of the contract. There was nothing illegal about the transaction. It was a voluntary act upon his part to receive bank bills and execute his notes payable in money.

To sustain the first position, it is insisted that the Commissioner and not the company should have issued the surrendered stock, and that ten per cent. was requisite to be paid on each share, at the time of purchase, to make valid the transfer of stock. We find nothing in the charter, nor are we aware of any rule of construction which would warrant such a conclusion.

First, as to the ten per cent.: The capital stock of the bank consisted of two millions of dollars. The Commis- 151 sioners were directed in the first instance to open books to receive subscriptions to this stock, and it was required that ten per cent. should be paid to the commissioners on each share, at the time of subscribing. So soon as all the capital stock was taken, and $200,000 was paid in, trustees were to be elected, the Governor to be notified of the fact, and upon his proclamation, the company became fully organized, and was authorized to commence business. All this it is conceded was done. Upon the payment of $200,000, which was the first instalment of the capital stock, the sole object of requiring the ten per cent. was fully accomplished, and the company became at once invested with all the acts and powers secured to it by the act of incorporation.

With the view of aiding all subscribers, and relieving them from the penalty of a forfeiture of their stock, imposed by the tenth section of the original act, the Legislature, in 1838, by an amendment of the charter, authorized the company, in its discretion, to allow any stockholder to surrender his certificate of capital stock, and take a certificate of full stock equal to the amount of payment on the stock so surrendered, and the company were to hold or re-issue such overplus stock. Upon what reason or authority can it be contended that the company were compelled to require of the purchasers of this surrendered stock a payment of ten dollars on each share of their purchase? It is not pretended that there is any provision in the act authorizing a surrender and re-issue which requires it. But it is said the terms of the original charter are broad and comprehensive, including all subscribers. This is true; but still it has exclusive reference to the subscribers before the corporation was organized, and before it had existence. The ten per cent. was required to be paid as a condition precedent to its existence, and it was paid by all the sub- 152 scribers, in literal compliance with the charter. There was no discretion in the Commissioners, who were but the agents of the government, clothed with a special trust. Their duty was imperative and well defined, and no subscription could be valid without this pre-requisite. So soon as the $200,000 was paid in, the duties of the Commissioners in reference to the original subscribers ceased, and the special requirements of this part of the charter had been accomplished. The object and reason of the rule ceasing, why revise it, and force its application to the exercise of unrestricted authority, in the company's re-issuing its surrendered stock, when, too, the ten per cent. had been paid upon this identical stock, by the original subscribers, before the surrender, and which was in the vaults of the bank?

The question presented on this branch of the case is not a new one. In the leading case of Jenkins vs. The Union Turnpike Company, 1 Caine's Cas. in Error, 85, Chancellor Lansing places the doctrine, in our opinion, upon the true ground—that the power of the Commissioners was restricted to a certain mode of receiving subscriptions. The acts to be performed by them were preparatory to the creation of the corporation. They had no discretion or latitude of action, and to give effect to their acts, in receiving subscriptions and exacting payments, the mode prescribed must be strictly pursued; otherwise, there would be no contract with the subscribers, because there was no corporation to deliver the stock, and consequently no consideration. But when the corporation was in existence, the directors might dispense with the exaction of the first payment. The same well founded distinction between subscription for stock to Commissioners, preparatory to the organization of the corporation, and to a corporation in esse, is fully recognized

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Opinion of Court.

153 by all the New York decisions. Vide 19 John. R., 218; 10 John. R., 154; 14 John. R., 238. See also, Lewis vs. Roberts, 13 Smede & Mar., 558; King vs. Elliott, 5 Smede & Mar., 428. Even this principle, in many cases, has been considered too rigid in its application, and it has been modified by the decisions of other States. In fact, there would seem to exist no good reason for holding a contract for subscription to stock to be illegal, because the payment in cash of the first instalment was not exacted, unless a cash capital was requisite, as in the case of a banking institution, or where, by the terms of the charter, it is made a condition precedent. See Vt. Central R. R. Co. vs. Clayes, 21 Ver. R., 31; Selma and T. R. R. vs. Rountree, 7 Ala. R., 670; Henry et al. vs. Vamilia and A. R. R. Co., 17 Ohio R., 190; Chester Glass Co. vs. Dewy, 16 Mass. R., 94; Minor vs. Mechanic Bank of A., 1 Peters, 46. The effect of these authorities is sought to be evaded in the argument, by contending that this institution was not authorized to do a banking business until the amendatory act of 1838. If this were true, it would in no aspect of the case affect the merits of the question we are considering. The fourth section of the act authorizes the company to use two-fifths of the capital stock paid in, or which may thereafter be paid in, for ordinary banking purposes. It was an additional grant to the company, not impairing or restricting its previous powers, and it was optionary on the part of the directors to use two-fifths of the capital at that time paid in, for banking purposes, without calling in any further instalments for that purpose, or not avail itself of the right at all, but continue in the full exercise of its original powers, in investing its capital stock in bonds and mortgages. But it is not true that this corporation had not banking powers previous to the act of 1838. By the 19th section of the original act, it had the right to issue bills to 154 the amount of the capital actually paid in. It had the additional right of receiving funds on deposit, and to discount and purchase promissory notes and bills of exchange. These powers constitute all the elements of banking, as understood in this country. See the case of the Bank of Augusta vs. Earl, Peters S. C. R.

It is further insisted that the Commissioners and not the company should have re-issued the surrendered stock. A conclusive answer to this is, that in the case of subscription to stock in the first instance, and in the case of forfeited stock, the Commissioners were required to open books for subscription—in the first case by express terms, and in the latter by implication—while in the case of surrendered stock, the corporation itself was authorized "to hold or re-issue it." The grant of power to the company to accept the surrender and re-issue the stock, is as well-defined and unrestricted as language can make it; and unless it can be shown that the Commissioners and the body corporate are one and the same, there is no foundation for the argument. The question is not, as is supposed, whether there is in fact any distinction in the stock itself when forfeited or surrendered, but whether the charter has not expressly defined the grant, by providing that the Commissioners shall offer the one for subscription, and the company re-issue the other.

If it be true that the forfeited stock could only be subscribed for through the Commissioners, it was a wise provision of the act of 1838 which gave to the company this right of re-issuing its surrendered stock, and it was doubtless designed to remedy the evil of the old law, by providing against any contingency which might prevent the Commissioners from being present at all times to open books for subscription. By the 9th section of the original charter, three persons, by name, were appointed Commissioners. After they had performed the duty assigned them, preparatory to the company's being organized, who were to act 155 for them in case of their death or absence? No provision is made for supplying their place or appointing new ones. Was it in the contemplation of the Legislature that these three persons should, under all the changes of life, be present at all times, to dispose of the surrendered stock, during the fifty years' existence of the corporation? Or does not the new law, in providing the remedy, fully meet the mischief?

The next objection taken by the respondent is, that the surrendered stock could not be sold for bonds and mortgages; and a similar course of reasoning is adopted to sustain this position as the first, but it is equally artificial and untenable.

By the sixth section of the original act, the corporation was required to loan its entire capital of two millions upon bonds and mortgages. One of the leading objects contemplated by the law, was to invest the proceeds of the sale of stock in this kind of security; a fund permanent and secure, yielding interest, and to which the creditors of the bank could look as a security for the ultimate payment of its liabilities. Not only the $200,000 paid in was to be invested in these securities, but all subsequent instalments, so that, if money was paid for stock, it was to be at once converted into bonds and mortgages. After the bank was in esse, it was an unmeaning and idle ceremony to require payments in cash, and then invest the latter in bonds and mortgages. In the absence of all positive inhibition by the law, what objection could be raised to investing the stock in the first instance in this security? The same purpose is effected by one instead of a double operation, and no sensible distinction between them can be conceived. But it is said "that it is not the stock which is to be invested in bonds and mortgages, but the capital." But where 156 exists the distinction? The stock represents the capital, whether in money or bonds and mortgages. The stockholder's certificate of stock is evidence of the interest he has in the capital and nothing more. Whatever amount he has contributed to the general fund, whether in money or bonds and mortgages, his interest in the capital is the same. In investing the stock you invest the capital of the bank.

No mode is pointed out as to re-issuing this surrendered stock. But it belonged to the company, and they could dispose of it in any mode not inconsistent with their general powers. They could sell it at public or private sale, for cash or on credit. They had as much power as to its disposition as though it had been hypothecated to the company, and been forfeited by the terms of the hypothecation.

It is evident that, if the construction given to the act of 1838 is to prevail, then, by some process unknown to us, the entire provisions of the old law became incorporated in the new. For the same rule of construction that would apply one provision must apply all, and the same mode and formalities are to be observed in re-issuing the surrendered stock as before the organization of the company. The Board of Commissioners are to be revived, if they are in life; if not, the stock is to remain fruitless and dead upon the hands of the company. The ten per cent. is to be paid and the residue is to be sold, not on a credit for bonds and mortgages, but to remain payable in instalments, in such amounts and at such times as the trustees may direct. Thus, instead of conferring on the company an additional franchise, and amending the old law, as it purported to do, it but re-enacted (and all by intendment,) its entire provisions.

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Opinion of Court.

There is a manifest difference between the original subscribers and the purchasers of the re-issued stock. The former could surrender their shares and take a certificate for full stock. The latter could not, even with the assent of the directors, have discharged their liability by a surrender, for it would have been a fraud upon the creditors. Nor could the bank have compelled a forfeiture of their stock. Independent of this, in what possible mode were the dividends to be made to the stockholders? The first class hold certificates for full stock, the whole amount paid, while the purchasers of the re-issued stock are to pay but ten per cent. on their purchase. Are the latter entitled to the same dividends as the former? Or are two distinct classes of stockholders to exist in the same company, with distinct rights and privileges, depending upon no fixed rule, but subject to constant change and modification, by the amount of instalments which each may pay on his stock?

The two acts are entirely independent of and inconsistent with each other, and no rule of construction can reconcile them. The first is a restriction as to the mode and manner of disposing of stock, with the object and purpose clearly defined; the latter is an unconditional grant of power, only restrained by the general object and policy of the law. The principle cannot be questioned, that where a grant of power is clearly defined, and no mode is prescribed for its exercise, it is for the corporation to adopt such mode as in its judgment will secure the purpose contemplated. And so well recognized is this doctrine, that as a general rule a grant specifying the mode and manner of exercising powers, is construed as merely directory, unless there are negative words, excluding the right to adopt any other mode; and restrictions upon grants of power, designed for the protection of creditors, are not to be con-158 strued to defeat that purpose. The charter of this bank, by the twenty-sixth section, is to receive from the courts "a favorable construction;" but so far from the one given it being consistent with the object of its creation, it defeats both the reason and the spirit of its provisions, by embarrassing the corporation in the exercise of clear and well-defined powers.

But it is said the respondent was induced to become a stockholder by reason of the fraudulent representations of the bank or its agent; and numerous familiar elementary principles, as to fraud and illegality, have been invoked and zealously pressed upon the court. But their application to this case is entirely misconceived. The matter of fraud, in the first instance, is a mere question of fact, and we have in vain searched the record before us for evidence to sustain it. It is said the bank was insolvent in 1839, when Lanier purchased his stock. The proof is, that, though embarrassed, it was solvent in 1840, and paying specie; and that this embarrassment and final insolvency were mainly occasioned by the want of good faith upon the part of the stockholders, to meet their liabilities. And if Lanier has failed to realize all the advantages which he seems to have expected, on becoming a stockholder, it should be recollected that he has contributed to produce the very state of things of which he now complains. The loose conjectures of witnesses, as to the condition of the bank in 1839, based upon no knowledge of their own, but derived from others who had as little means of information could have but little weight under any circumstances, but especially when contradicted by the then officers of the institution. There is no evidence that the agent ever made to the respondent any representations as to the solvency of the bank, or as to any other matter upon which he rests the question of fraud. But conceding the fact to be as alleged, it was his duty, upon a discovery of the fraud to 159 have taken immediate steps for the rescission of his contract. Story's Eq. Jur. § 190-1-2-3-5.

According to his own statement, he first discovered the alleged fraud when he applied to the bank for the loan of the $6,917 on the pledge of his stock, which he received in bills of the bank, and for aught that is known, used as money. Afterwards we find him renewing his notes for this amount, from time to time, without objection and without complaint; holding himself out as a bona fide stockholder from 1839 until the filing of his answer to this bill; giving faith and credit to the institution as such stockholder, and enjoying all the advantages of such a relation. Were the facts true, his defense has no foundation in law or morals. By his repeated ratification of the acts of which he complains, and to which he was a willing party, he is forever estopped from setting up such a defense, especially when the assets of the bank would thereby be diminished, and the rights of creditors sacrificed. The means devised by the law to protect the public against loss, cannot be invoked to consummate the evil it was designed to avoid, by releasing him from a contract, the fruits of which he has already enjoyed.

There is one other matter to which, in our opinion, undue importance has been given, yet in consequence of its having contributed mainly to a difference of opinion among the members of the court, we feel bound to notice. It is said the fifth section of the amendatory act of 1838, which provides that the company may call in the residue of its capital stock at any time within the period of five years from January, 1839, restrains, by implication, the power of the company from re-issuing any of its surrendered stock, after that time; that, as a consequence, the company, in the sale of this surrendered stock, had no authority to extend the time of payment beyond that period; and 160 that the credit given to Lanier for five years from July, 1839, was in violation of the charter, and the contract of sale and purchase therefore void. By what process of reasoning all this is arrived at, we are at a loss to conceive. Were the premises true, it would be no difficult matter to show, from principle and authority, that the extension of time did not affect the validity of the sale, and that it does not lie in the mouth of Lanier, for this cause, to avoid his contract, which, as between him and the company, was founded upon a good and sufficient consideration. But the positions assumed are not warranted by any fair construction of the charter, and cannot be sustained.

If reference is had to the 12th section of the original act of incorporation, and the amendatory acts of 1836 and 1837, in connection with the 5th scetion of the act of 1838, it is evident that the latter, in authorizing the company to "call in the residue of its capital stock," has exclusive reference to the stock originally subscribed for, and the payments for which were due and then outstanding. To make the whole charter consistent with itself, these several sections, treating of the same subject matter, should be construed in reference to each other. By the 12th section of the original act, the subscribers to stock were required to pay ten per cent. in cash on each share; ten per cent. at the expiration of six months thereafter, and the "whole amount remaining due" was liable to be called in by the Trustees at any time within three years from the date of subscription. The shares of every stockholder omitting to make such payment, within the time prescribed, became forfeited, together with all previous payments made thereon. The amendatory acts of the two following years authorized the company to extend these payments—the second instalment from six months to three years, and the 161 residue from three to five years from the time of subscribing. This gave the stockholders until some time in 1840 to pay up the remaining instalments then due. The act of 1838, authorized the company to extend a further indulgence of five years, from January, 1839. It provides for the calling in, at any time within a limited period, the residue of its capital stock—that is, the amount then remaining due, and which represented the capital stock subscribed for. All the capital stock of the bank had been taken, and the instalments liable, as we have seen, to be called in at any time by the trustees, but who could, in their discretion, postpone the payment to the time designated by the act of 1838. How is it possible to extend the provisions of this act to stock which, after the passage of the law, might be surrendered to and re-issued by the company, under a new grant of power? The re-issued stock is not subscribed for as was required in the sale of stock in the first instance. The latter was payable in instalments, at the pleasure of the trustees, and subject at any moment to forfeiture. But upon the company's accepting a surrender of stock, under the act of 1838, it could hold or re-issue it, in any mode it deemed proper, consistent with the leading objects of the charter. The sale of this stock to Lanier, for his bond and mortgage, was not subject to the payment of instalments, to be called in at the pleasure of the company, but it was absolute and unconditional. The contract of sale and purchase was complete, the purchaser holding a full and perfect title to the stock, subject to no recall, no forfeiture or conditions.

It must result from the argument, which assumes that the contract of sale was illegal, because the credit given to Lanier was more than five years from January, 1839, that had the credit been within five years it would have been legal. Suppose it to have been so, and that Lanier, on pur-162 chasing his shares, had paid in cash the ten per cent., and given his bond and mortgage for the residue, payable in four years. Could the company have recalled in this stock, or, in other words, have enforced the payment of this bond, which represented the stock, before its maturity? If the argument be true, the company could, under the fifth section, exercise its unquestionable power of calling in the stock at any time within five years, by enforcing payment of the bond, at any moment, after it was executed. The very absurdity to which the argument leads us, is a sufficient answer to its soundness.

Again.—Suppose this surrendered stock had been sold to Lanier for cash, and immediately the company had loaned the same to him on his bond and mortgage, for five years, or less time—these securities still represented the identical stock held by Lanier, and the position of the parties would, in legal contemplation, be altogether the same as now. Could the bank call in this stock before the maturity of the bond? Why not, if it has the power claimed for it, under the fifth section? Is its power become suddenly paralized by simply entering into a contract which it is conceded would be a legitimate and legal one, under the provisions of its charter? The entire argument is necessarily based upon the hypothesis that although the bank has ample power to dispose of its surrendered stock, yet, under the same law which clothes it with this power, it can make no contract for its sale which it cannot enforce at any time within five years from January, 1839—thus by one sweeping construction denying to the company the right of investing its capital stock in bonds and mortgages, a right hitherto unquestioned in the company, and made by its charter one of the great and leading objects of the institution.

At the passage of the act of 1838, the first instalment upon all the shares, amounting to $200,000, had been paid in. 163
Now, if the stockholders choose to avoid a forfeiture, by availing themselves, as they doubtless would do, of the privilege of surrendering their unpaid stock, then the effect of the construction given to this act to throw upon the company all of this surrendered stock, without the power to re-issue it for bonds and mortgages, and thus reduce the capital of the bank from two millions to $200,000, when by the very terms of the charter, the company had the power of increasing it to four millions.

If Lanier is to be considered a subscriber to stock from July, 1839, the time of his purchase, then the company were authorized, under the original and amendatory acts of 1836 and 1837, to give him a credit of five years from the date of his subscription. But if the act of 1838 applies to the re-issued stock, then in the case of Lanier, and all others who might purchase stock after January, 1839, the provisions of the act instead of being, as is conceded, an extension of the time of payment before allowed, would be a limitation; and thus by the rule of interpretation adopted, the fifth section would extend the time of payment to the first subscribers, and without any words to that effect, limit it to others, who it is contended could only become stockholders by subscribing in the same mode and under the same rules and restrictions as originally provided. It is a strange rule of construction that would thus construe an express grant, which while on its face it extended the power of a corporation, was to be considered as a restriction on its original powers. And it is something new in the history of corporations that this institution then in prosperous circumstances, with a charter containing most extraordinary grants of power, should be represented but three years after its organization as a suppliant before the Legislature, praying that its privileges be curtailed, and that the power under which it could exercise its corporate 164 franchises for the term of fifty years, should be limited to five years from January, 1839.

The construction which is sought to be given to this act, is at variance with both the letter and spirit of the charter, and would lead to endless embarrassment and difficulty. The fifth section of the act, it is manifest, has reference exclusively to contracts then subsisting and cannot apply to future contracts, in relation to the sale of surrendered stock. The third section of the same act contains a new grant to the corporation, well defined as to power, and unrestricted as to time—a power which the company could legitimately exercise in the sale of its stock, as often as it was surrendered, and within the duration of its charter.

The substance of the entire defence made in this case is based upon the alleged misconduct on the part of the directors of this institution. To say that a party can avoid his contract, and thereby diminish the fund which was designed as a security, for the benefit of the public, upon the pretence that there was some abuse of the corporate powers, or mismanagement on the part of the Board of Directors, in making the contract, is to pervert the well settled principles of law, and, under color of its sanction, to open the door for the consummation of fraud upon individuals and the public. Neither party can escape the obligation created by the sale and purchase of this stock. Admitting the contract to have been made contrary to the letter of the charter, it is not thereby void, and the respondent cannot avail himself of any merely unlawful act by himself and the directors, whether only designed or fully consummated, to perpetuate a greater fraud on the creditors of the bank. See 16 Serg. and Rawl., 144.

In the case of the Bank of South Carolina vs. Hammond, 1 Rich. L. Rep., 288, the defence was, that the contract 165 was in violation of the charter, and void. The court held, that a contract with a corporation may be binding on the parties, though it was an abuse of the corporate powers, and for which the corporation was answerable to the government which created it; and that it was too strict to insist that a power which is contained in a general grant, and which in various forms may be pertinent to the purpose of a corporation, may be restricted to a particular form of direction for its exercise. The same defence was relied on in the case of Little vs. O'Brian, 9 Mass. R., 423, and the court say, whether for this violation of the charter, the government may not seize their franchises, upon due process, is a question not now before us. It is sufficient to say it does not lie in the mouth of a stockholder for this cause, to avoid his contract, which as between him and the company, was made upon a sufficient consideration. In the case of Fleckner vs. Bank U. S., 8 Wheat., 338, the court say, that the defence set up was merely a violation of the charter, for which a remedy may be applied by the government, and conceding the bank to have violated its charter in this particular transaction, it is not easy to perceive how that objection could be available. The act did not say that such a transaction or contract was ipso facto void. It remained to be shown how if the bank had a general right to discount notes, a contract, not made void by the act itself, could on that account be avoided by the party. See also Chester Glass Co. vs. Dewy, 16 Mass. R., 94.

These authorities are based upon this general principle, that all acts of incorporation are held to be directory unless they expressly avoid all security taken other than that prescribed, and that although the transaction may be culpable on the part of the directors, and ground of forfeiture, in a question between the government and corporation, yet 166 the security taken may be enforced against him who gave it. Ang. & Ames, Corp., 190, and Palmer vs. Lawrence, 3 Sanford R., 162; Brower vs. Appleby, 1 ibid. 108.

It is conceded that this institution is insolvent, and it cannot be disputed that when a corporation becomes insolvent, the officers are trustees for creditors, and the same principles of law which would be applicable to a suit in favor of creditors, would apply in all their force to the case before us.

For the reasons contained in this opinion, we are compelled to reverse the opinion of the court below, and the complainant is entitled to a decree of foreclosure, with costs, and for the amount of principle and interest due upon the bond and mortgage.

ANDERSON, C. J., delivered the following dissenting opinion:

I differ with a majority of the court in the conclusions to which it has come; and the importance of the case and the general interest of the questions involved in it, induce me to regard it as my duty to give somewhat at length the reasons which have prompted my dissent.

The respondent, under the privilege given by our statute of 1828, insists in his answer, "by way of demurrer to the "said bill of complaint that the State of Florida, who is "set forth in said bill as one of the complainants, has no "interest in the subject matter of the said bill of com-"plaint."

The judgment of the court upon this demurrer does not seem to have been asked for by either party until the final hearing of the cause.

I differ from the court in their judgment upon this demurrer, and regard it as a sufficient answer to the present bill, notwithstanding the counsel of the respondent expressed a desire to have the case decided upon its substantial 167 merits, and not sent back for a defect that may allow of amendment. Objections not intended to be pressed should not be put upon the record, or if put there inadvertently, should be waived with the same formality. I regard it as our duty to decide upon the record as presented to us.

That the misjoinder of a co-plaintiff is a fatal error when taken advantage of by a demurrer or plea, is a familiar and well settled principle of equity pleading and practice. Story's Eq. Pl., § 544; Mitford Eq. Pl., p. 399; King of Spain vs. Machado, 4 Russ., 228; Cuff vs. Platell, 4 Russ., 242.

To my mind it is apparent on the face of the bill that the State of Florida has no interest in the subject matter of this controversy, for though it is doubtless true as stated by complainant's counsel, that the demurrer admits the facts as set forth in the bill, yet when legal inferences are set forth as facts, though they may be called facts, it is our duty to regard them in their true light as matters of law and not to receive them as true unless they are so. A demurrer confesses matters of fact only and not matters of law. Ld. Raymond, 18.

When, for instance, the complainant speaks of the liability of the State of Florida on the bonds of the company, as a necessary consequence of the guarantee given by the agents of the Federal Government when acting as a Territorial Legislaurte in Florida, this liability, though assumed as a matter of fact, is but a deduction of law, and therefore it is not admitted to be true by the respondent's demurrer. The real facts set forth, such as the guarantee made by the Territorial Government and the deposit of the certain bonds with the Governor of the State, may be true, and are admitted to be so, but they do not warrant the complainant in making a co-complainant of the State of Florida, apart from the legal conclusion which he has assumed as 168 facts.

I do not mean to discuss here the soundness of this legal conclusion. It is enough for my present purpose to distinguish it as a matter of law, rather than a matter of fact, and that as such it is not admitted by the demurrer. Upon the face of the bill then, admitting all the facts there alleged to be true, it does not appear that the State of Florida has any interest in the bond or mortgage or promissory notes of the respondent, and there can be no doubt that on a general demurrer under the authority of the case of the King of Spain vs. Machado, the bill would have to be dismissed. For I do not consider as at all tenable the position assumed by complainant's counsel, that the bill can be defended from the imputed defect under the legal maxim that a mere scintilla juris will justify the joinder of a co-plaintiff.

The maxim is true, but its application in this case is unwarranted. If the State of Florida has any interest in these bonds and mortgages at all, it is far from being a slight one. It is either nothing or of great importance. It can in no correct sense be called a spark. The alleged deposit of the securities with the Governor could scarcely give to the State any interest which it had not otherwise. Such a deposit could only be with the incumbent, as an individual, not as a representative of the State. Though there is no general demurrer in this case, the respondent has insisted in his answer, on the special matter of which I have been speaking; by way of demurrer. The statute of 1828 authorizes him to do so. That statute provides that "the defendant may, in all cases, instead of filing a "formal plea or demurrer, insist on any special matter in "his answer, and have the same benefit thereof as if he had

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Dissenting Opinion.

"pleaded the same matter, or had demurred to the bill." Thomp. Dig., 458. 169

I cannot perceive that the respondent having availed himself of this privilege, stands before us in any different attitude than if he had demurred to the bill.

The fact of this misjoinder seems to be but very faintly denied, but the complainant seeks to evade the consequences of the defect by alleging that a court will not allow an objection of this sort, being in the nature of matter in abatement, to prevail in the last stage of a cause, when justice can be done to all parties. The court was referred to Story's Equity Pleadings, Sec. 237, which says: "It is "not safe in any case to rely upon the mere non-joinder or "misjoinder of parties as an objection at the hearing, for "if the court can make a decree at the hearing which will "do entire justice to all the parties, and not prejudice "their rights, notwithstanding the non-joinder or misjoin-"der, it will not then allow the objection to prevail." The extension of the quotation a line or two more would have shown the true meaning of the Commentator. "An ob-"jection," he continues, "of this sort should be taken by "demurrer, plea or answer." He evidently means to confine his caution to those cases where the defendant seeks to take his adversary by surprise, and starts his objection orally, at the very last moment.

This was not so in the case before us. The objection is made and insisted upon by the respondent in the very opening of his defence, when the complainant, if he had so chosen, might have had leave to amend and thus avoid the consequences of his mistake. He did not choose to do so. The matter of demurrer was set down for hearing, with the answer in which it was rightfully embodied, and the complainant went to the hearing with full notice of the objec-170 tion, and of the purpose of respondent to urge it. I think he should abide the consequences he has braved.

I do not mean to be understood as saying that the Chancellor's decree below was justified by the misjoinder alone. It was sufficient to make him dismiss the bill, but without prejudice to the right of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company to file another bill; or, under the particular circumstances of the case, he might have given leave to amend at the hearing.

The order of dismissal having been a general one, I will proceed to show why I think, in opposition to a majority of the court, that it was fully sanctioned by the other matters in the record.

The respondent, while admitting the execution and delivery of the bond and mortgage, charges that they are null and void, mainly because the complainant had no right to sell to him the stock which was the consideration for his indebtedness—that no consideration, therefore, passed to him, and the contract was illegal.

In regard to his other defences, I concur with a majority of the court, and shall therefore confine myself to the consideration of the one just recited, as it is upon this point that I differ with my brothers.

I take it to be undeniable that "a corporation created "by statute can do those acts and exercise those powers "only which are conferred on it by its charter, or which "are necessary to enable it to perform its functions and "fulfill the purpose of its creation, or which flow by neces-"sary implication from some power granted." 4 Ala. Rep., 562.

"The exercise of the corporate franchise being restrict-"ive of individual rights, cannot be extended beyond the "letter and spirit of the act of incorporation." Beattie vs. Lessee of Knowles, 4 Pet. R., 152.

"A corporation is confined to the sphere of action limit- 171
"ed by the terms and intention of the charter." Angell & Ames on Corp., 68; 12 Wheaton's Rep., 64; 4 ibid, 518; 6 ibid, 593.

These stringent rules of restraint may be legitimately carried yet further, for when a mode is prescribed in the charter for the action of the corporation, that mode must be used, and any other is unlawful. Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Head and Amory vs. the Providence Insurance Company, said, in speaking of the power of corporations: "The act of incorporation is to them an ena-"bling act—it gives to them all the powers they possess; "it enables them to contract, and when it prescribes to "them a mode of contracting, they must observe that "mode, or the instrument no more creates a contract than "if the body never had been incorporated." 1 Pet. Cond. Rep., 375.

These rules are well established, and we may proceed at once to apply them as a test to the contract in question.

Let us inquire, then,

1st. If the contract was such an one as the company, by its act of incorporation, was enabled to make or cause to be made;

2d. Whether the charter of the company prescribed a mode of making such a contract, and, if so, whether it was observed in this instance. An examination of the act of incorporation in reference to these points, will enable us to determine the character of the contract and the sufficiency of the respondent's defence.

I have no difficulty in relation to the first proposed inquiry. There was an express provision in the charter in reference to the particular stock bought by Lanier. The 3d section of the amendatory act of 1838 provides "that "the company may, in their discretion, authorize any of "the stockholders to surrender their certificates of capital 172
"stock, and take an amount of certificates of full stock "equal to the amount of payment on the stock so surren-"dered, and the said company may hold or re-issue such "overplus stock." Thomp. Dig., 317.

The record shows that the stock purchased by Lanier, was stock surrendered under the provisions of this section, and as the authority to re-issue is expressly given, there can be no question of the authority of the company to contract with Lanier for the sale of the stock, if they contracted in the proper mode and through the proper agents. In re-issuing the stock to Lanier, they were only doing what their charter enabled them to do.

Before proceeding to the second inquiry, let us define in precise and accurate terms, what was done by the company in this transaction, and we shall thereby better understand whether any particular mode was prescribed by the charter in which that particular thing should be done.

The thing done was the re-issue of stock which had been surrendered under the license granted in the amendatory act of 1838, and it was done under that clause of the act which allowed the company to hold or re-issue the same stock. It was done directly by the company without the agency or intervention of the commissioners, and the company received from Lanier in payment of this stock, his bond and mortgage. Is there any mode for doing this, prescribed in the charter, different from the one adopted? The affirmative is maintained by the respondent, and it is upon the maintenance of this affirmation that his consent chiefly relies.

The mode may be prescribed directly or indirectly. As nothing is said in the act of 1838 which authorizes the re-issue of the surrendered stock, as to the mode in which the re-issue was to be made, and the surrender and re-issue

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Dissenting Opinion.

173 were not contemplated in the original act, it must be admitted that there are no direct instructions as to the mode in which such stock shall be sold, and we must look into the several acts to see if the mode is prescribed indirectly any where by the legislature. If it be so, those instructions, though indirectly made, are as imperative and obligatory as if made in direct terms.

In the 9th section of the act of incorporation, Lot Clark, Robert Raymond Reid, and Thomas Douglas, are appointed commissioners to open books for subscriptions to the capital stock. The 12th section prescribes that each subscriber, at the time of subscribing, shall pay to the commissioners ten dollars on each share by him subscribed, and that in three years the whole amount shall be paid. The last clause of this section is so material to the argument that I will transcribe it at large. It is in these words: "The shares of every stockholder omitting to make such "payment, shall be forfeited, together with all previous "payments made thereon, and the books shall be again "opened as directed in the 9th section for subscription, "and so from time to time until all shares are subscribed "and paid for."

The last clause of the 9th section prolonged the authority of the commissioners for three years, in case the whole stock should not be taken within that period, and the clause just recited from the 12th section further extends their authority in reference to the forfeited stock till all shares are subscribed and paid for.

It is now important to inquire in what respect, if any, this forfeited stock, whose re-subscription is thus provided for in a mode plainly and directly presented, differs from the surrendered stock spoken of in the 3d section of the amendatory act of 1838. To forfeit is to lose the right to possess, by some neglect or crime—to surrender in the 174 sense here used, is to give up the right to possess, voluntarily, and not as a penalty for neglect. The original charter enforced the surrender of unpaid for stock, as a penalty —the amended charter allowed the surrender without the penalty. The forfeited stock became subject to re-subscription under the charter, as the surrendered stock did to re-issue under the amendatory act. In all respects, except as to relief from the forfeiture of moneys already paid, there was an identity in the forfeited and in the surrendered stock.

Again, what would have become of this surrendered stock if the act of 1838 had not passed? Those who did not duly pay their instalments would haye forfeited it, and the books would have been again opened by the commissioners, and each new subscriber would have been required to pay ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and the whole price within three years. If this surrendered stock then, but for the amendatory act, would have been necessarily forfeited for non-payment, and afterwards disposed of in the mode just mentioned, then if there is any change in the mode of its forfeiture and subsequent re-issue, it must be authorized by that act. The main object of that act is obviously to relieve the stockholders who had made partial payments, from the penalty imposed by the original act, and neither its terms nor its spirit, in any part of it, indicate the intent of the legislature to change the mode in which the surrendered stock should be re-issued. The simplest rules of construction require that in the interpretation of an amendatory act, reference should be constantly had to the act designed to be amended, and the amending act should not be understood as importing a greater change than its obvious intent and meaning indicate. The purpose of the 3d section of the act of 1838 was to relieve the subscribers from a penalty imposed by the original act, and no more. To this purpose, its operation should be 175 confined, since neither its letter nor spirit import anything more.

It will be observed, too, that the change proposed in this section is discretionary, not mandatory—discretionary both with the company and with the stockholder, for both were only permitted, not required, to receive or to make a surrender of stock. It might very well have happened after the passage of that act, that either the company or the stockholder would have declined to exercise the discretion allowed, and in that case, unpaid for stock would have been forfeited and subject to the original conditions of re-subscription. And yet it is supposed that the exercise of the discretionary privilege offered by the amendment, has wrought a radical change in the stock given up, so as to release it from all rules, regulating the mode of re-subscription originally imposed in view of the public policy and interests.

The conclusion to which this reasoning leads us, is sought to be avoided by making an essential distinction in the character and condition of the original stock for which the commissioners were authorized to take subscriptions, and this surrendered stock which "the said company may re-issue." This distinction is based on the assumption that the commissioners were only employed to adopt the initiatory steps for putting the corporation into existence, and that their functions then ceased. Such, I am very clear, was not the design of the legislature.

The 11th section provides that the Governor, after being duly notified of the subscription of the entire stock, the actual payment of $200,000, the appointment of trustees and their readiness to commence business, should make proclamation, and on its publication the company should commence business. At this point, when all the stock had been subscribed, and the company fully organized, if it 176 had been intended to transfer the duties of the commissioners to the company, it would have been appropriate to terminate their official existence, either by express words or by making no further mention of them or their duties. But the 12th section, indicating the anxiety of the legislature, that the whole capital stock should be paid for within three years after subscription, provides for such payment under the penalty of forfeiture, and jealous lest the corporation might not take the new subscriptions for the forfeited stock, in the mode prescribed by law, express provision is made that "the books shall be again opened as "directed in the 9th section for subscription, and so from "time to time until all shares are subscribed and paid for." The 9th section, it will be recollected, provides that the subscriptions shall be taken by the commissioners.

The reason of this caution is sufficiently obvious, and I cannot see why the same salutary care should not have been intended in reference to the surrendered as well as the forfeited stock. All subscriptions to the forfeited stock, though made after the perfect organization of the company, are by express enactment to be made precisely as subscriptions to the original stock, and, what is more pertinent to the argument, the same system is perpetuated until "all shares are paid for." Where is this system which involves the constant agency of the Commissioners, in taking subscriptions till the last share of stock is paid for— where is it abandoned? And what is there in the amendatory act to warrant us in supposing that the Legislature designed to place the surrendered stock beyond the operation of this conservative provision? It is undeniable that the provision which makes the Commissioners the sole agents in receiving subscriptions to stock, and in express terms keeping that agency alive not only until the stock

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Dissenting Opinion.

177 is subscribed for, but until those subscriptions are actually paid up in full—it is undeniable, I say, that this provision embraces all the stock of the company, and therefore the surrendered stock, unless an exception be somewhere made. There is nothing in the amendatory act to indicate such an exception. Its primary object was to relieve the non-paying subscriptions from forfeiting their previous payments, as well as their stock; and to understand it as at the same time changing the mode in which the relinquished stock should be re-issued, is to suppose that the Legislature had abandoned all the guards and restrictions so clearly contemplated and so carefully provided for in the previous enactment. Such an inference is not warranted by the language of the section, nor by any indication of the Legislative will to be anywhere found in the act, and leads to too esential and radical a change in the public policy to be justified by mere implication.

It is said in answer to these suggestions, that authority is expressly given to the company to re-issue the stock after surrender, and it is thence inferred that the stock was held by the company as its own property, for it is said that it belonged to the company, and that it might be disposed of at its pleasure. This might be if the stock, after surrender and before re-issue, was property at all. But there is a fundamental difference between stock after the terms of its purchase have been complied with, and it has become the property of the subscribers, and when it is as property yet in embryo, and only subject to acquisition. Stock may be defined to be a portion of the chartered privileges granted by the act of incorporation. These privileges are granted on certain conditions, and until the conditions are performed, the grant is incomplete, and no property passes out of the grantor. The stock surrendered to the company under the provisions of the act of 1838, could 178 in no sense be regarded as the property of the company, though the company was authorized to hold or to re-issue it. It could in its then condition be the property of no one. It was only the representative of a portion of the chartered rights which the sovereign was ready to bestow upon certain conditions, but which could not pass out of the sovereign till the conditions were complied with. It was therefore not the property of the company, and their right to re-issue and transfer property in it to another, could not be separated from the appointed mode of transfer—a condition imperatively necessary to its very existance as property.

I might perhaps stop here, and conclude that as a mode was prescribed by the charter, in which all forfeited or surrendered stock should be re-issued until the whole was paid for, and as the contract with Lanier for the sale of stock, was made in another mode, it was therefore invalid, but in examining the several acts, I find another injunction of the legislature, which has been palpably violated in this case, and which seems to me of much importance, though not noticed by counsel on either side. It will be perceived that there is apparent throughout all the several acts a determination on the part of the legislature that the stock subscribed for should be paid for before a definite period—that period extended indulgently from time to time, but always made well defined and fixed. The incorporating act of 1835 requires that all the stock shall be paid for within three years, under the penalty of forfeiture —the acts of 1836 and 1837, passed doubtless at the solicitation of the company, extend the period for calling in the instalments, subsequent to the ten per cent. cash instalments, one and two years respectively. In 1838, the company applied for further indulgence, when the provision was made for consolidating the stock. At the same time, the postponement of instalments, which had been the 179 chief purpose of the acts of 1836 and 1837, was fixed upon a permanent though indulgent basis. Modifying the policy of exacting full payment for the stock within three years from 1835, and within one and two years thereafter, the 5th section of the act of 1838, being the final provision on the subject, provides that "the said company may call "in the residue of their capital stock at any time within "the period of five years from and after the 1st day of Jan-"uary, 1839."

The language here, though permissive only, is a qualification of the imperative language of the 12th section of the original charter, and its imports that the application of the imperative requisition of full payment on the stock may be postponed from the time first fixed to the period here indicated. The Legislature clearly intended, as no doubt the public interests demanded, that the stock in this institution should not be merely nominal, but should be paid for in full before a fixed time, and having, from time to time, at the solicitation of the Company, enlarged the term of final payment, their indulgence was at length exhausted, and five years from the first day of January, 1839, was definitely fixed upon as the latest day to which the full payment on the stock should be postponed. That this is the sense in which the word call is used in this section is clear from the relation in which it stands to payment in the act of 1837.

A sale made by the trustees of the stock, by which they contracted that no part of the consideration money should be required until after the full time had elapsed which had been authoritatively fixed at the utmost period to which the last payment should be postponed, is surely without authority from the charter, and if without such authority, is necessarily void, from the utter impotency of the contracting party to make such a contract. Yet such is the 180 contract made with Lanier. He is sold one hundred shares of stock, on the consideration that he will pay for them within five years from the 30th July, 1839, while the utmost ability of the company—all its power being derived from the charter—was to sell its shares of stock for a consideration to be paid in full within five years from the 1st of January of the same year. Here we find two parties contracting with each other upon conditions expressly prohibited by law, and yet one of them comes into a court of Justice and solicits its aid to enforce this contract. One of these parties owes its very existence to the law it is violating, and the subject matter of the contract—that is, the stock—is created by the same law. The former cannot act —the latter cannot exist, without and beyond the act of incorporation—and yet that act nowhere sanctions the contract sought to be enforced. On the contrary, its provisions, clearly forbidding such a contract, are treated with defiance—provisions, too, which are not mere matters of form, involving no principle, but imposing safeguards necessary to the public interests, as a restraint upon the abuse of the large privileges bestowed by the charter. By the sanctions provided in the different parts of the act, to enforce the payments of the subscriptions the stock which is the subject of this contract became forfeit before the time arrived at which payment from Lanier was required ; and yet the offending party comes to a Court of Equity, asking its aid in collecting the money the promise of which was obtained by such an utter violation of law.

The argument that the fifth section is only permissive, and not restrictive, is totally at variance with the assumption by which the sale to Lanier was justified. The disregard in that case of all the modes and terms which had been prescribed for sales of stock, is defended on the ground

So. Life Ins. & Trust Co. vs. Lanier—Dissenting Opinion.

181 that the authority given in the 3d section released the company from all restraints—a conclusion which makes the 5th section utterly absurd and unmeaning.

I have heretofore considered this contract in reference to what seems to me to be the plain requirements of the law, as to the mode prescribed for its execution and the agency by which it was to be executed. A single consideration of the reason and policy of the law suffices to satisfy me that I have not mistaken the design of the Legislature. It is apparent from the purport of the acts of the Legislature of 1836 and 1837, that at the date of the act of 1838, but little if any more than the first cash instalment of ten per cent. had been paid by the subscribers. By the act of 1838, unpaid for stock might be surrendered, and, according to the construction put upon the 3d section, might be re-issued, upon bonds and mortgages, payable in five or fifty years from the date of sale. A capital of four millions might have been raised in this mode, on which unsubstantial capital the company was invested with almost unexampled powers—with banking powers and privileges —with power to insure lives—with capacity to become trustee for the estates of infants, and others, and to secure annuities—its ostensible capital being four millions, its real capital being but the twentieth part of that sum. These four millions, too, of nominal capital, were to be secured, not by the agency of disinterested Commissioners, chosen by the government in view of the magnitude of the trust confided to them, and the peculiarly sacred character of the funds which were to rest for their safety upon these securities, but taken by the company itself, without accountability or supervision of any sort.

It seems to me to be vain to say that there is no difference between selling stock for bonds and mortgages, as was done in this case, and selling it for cash and afterwards
182 lending the same cash upon bonds and mortgages. According to the distinction I have already made between stock paid for, and stock only offered for sale—the re-issued stock when offered for subscription was not property as money would have been, and it might well be, that the company, in disposing of a share of the chartered privileges, of which it is supposed they were the distributors, would not exercise the vigilance which would have attended an investment of actual money; and it might well be, too, as almost the entire stock was to be thus re-issued, that a combination might have been made to sell their chartered privileges for nominal or insufficient securities, and thereby qualify themselves to become the great trustees of the country and the fiduciaries par excellence, of its most sacred interests. It was against possible fraud and evils of this character, that I consider the Legislature to have wisely and carefully guarded, both in requiring the Commissioners to supervise the subscriptions and in providing that the stock should be actually paid for in full before the first of January, 1844; and especially in the emphatic perpetuation of the authority and duty of the Commissioners, not till the company was organized—not till the stock was sold for bonds and mortgages, but till the stock was actually paid for.

I cannot regard as important the suggestion made by counsel, that Lanier being a stockholder, should be held more strictly to the performance of this contract than another person. It is a well settled rule, that a corporation in dealing with a stockholder, deals with him as with a stranger, and as such, Lanier should be regarded in this controversy. Besides, this allegation begs the question, in dispute. I do not consider Lanier to be a stockholder, and the violation of law of which I have been speaking consists in vainly attempting to make him so in face of the prohibitions of the charter. Neither do I feel the force of the 183 argument, that Lanier's subsequent recognition of the contract, by borrowing money on the stock, was a waiver of the fraud and illegality. The authorities referred to speak of fraud between the parties, and it might well be in some cases, that a ratification of the contract after the discovery of the fraud, might amount to a waiver. But the view I have taken of this case shows, that the fraud was perpetrated against the Government, and the act attempted to be done was in violation of the public law. The consent of the parties attempting the fraud could not at any future time, any more than at first, give sanction to such a fraud, or any power to the corporation which its charter withheld.

As this case is presented, it is not necessary to inquire whether the intervention of the rights of creditors would make any change in the liability and responsibilities of Lanier, but as it is urged that the trustees of the company, which is admitted to be insolvent, should be regarded as trustees for the creditors, I think it right to say in reply, that I cannot think that a contract attempted to be made by a party, without authority to make such a contract, and in direct violation of law, can be maintained as a contract for any purpose.

That individuals dealing with a banking company may be defrauded by a collusive arrangement between the company and its ostensible stockholders, is true, but it does not invalidate the principles I have endeavored to establish, nor the soundness of that policy which should prompt all courts to frown upon all violations of law, regardless of any partial or temporary interests which the connivance at wrong might promote. This alleged facility of imposing upon the public, shows the wisdom of the Legislature in requiring, (as I have attempted to show has been done,) the interposition of Commissioners of its own choice in ma- 184 king contracts for the purchase of stock, and furnishes another argument against such a construction of the statute, as throws wide open the door for the admission of the frauds and evils apprehended. Besides, if chartered companies do possess greater facilities for practising frauds than individuals, this facility for doing injustice should prompt the courts to be more stern in confining them rigidly within their chartered privileges, while individuals should learn to be more vigilant in dealing with them, and the Legislature of the State be more faithful to their duties as visitors. And it may be in this case, too, that when the creditors come to look after their rights, they may find responsibilities existing elsewhere, in relation to this same stock which was sought to be sold to Lanier—responsibilities springing from the original subscriptions, and which may not have been released, even by the intervention of legislative action.

LUKE, A SLAVE, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, VS. THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

1. The law of Florida discriminates between free white citizens and persons of color, whether bond or free, in the mode and decree of punishment for the same offences; the first name being amendable to the act of February 10th, 1832, while the latter are provided for in the act of November 21, 1828.

2. The maxim of "legis posteriores priores contrarias abrogant" is not applicable to cases where the precedent act is special or particular, and the subsequent act is general, the rule being that a later general act does not work any repeal of a former particular statute. Hence it follows that the act of November 21, 1828, in relation to crimes and misdemeanors committed by slaves, free negroes and mulattoes is not repealed by the act of February 10. 1832, in relation to crimes and misdemeanors generally.

3. Slaves and free persons of color may be guilty of many of the offenses which may be committed by white persons; in such case, it is an offence at common law, the indictment must be under the act of 1828, because this statute regulates the punishment, and if it is an offence created by the statute of 1832, or any other act a slave or free person of color can commit, the indictment should be under both statutes, that which creates the offence, and the act of 1828, which prescribes the punishment.

Error to the Circuit Court of St. John's county.

This was an indictment found by the Grand Jury of St. John's county against Luke, a slave, for maliciously wounding animals.

The following statement of facts was agreed upon by the solicitor for the State and counsel for the prisoner, viz:

186 "That a negro driver of Joseph M. Hernandez, in search"ing for certain stray mules, the property of his said mas"ter, found one of his said mules dead upon the road lead"ing from his master's plantation to the plantation of "Abraham Dupont, and two others badly injured with "gun shot wounds, of which injuries they subsequently "died. The mule was shot. That witness traced the "mules to the plantation of said Dupont, prisoner's mas"ter, by the blood upon the ground, and meeting with "prisoner, asked him if he knew who had shot said mules?
"Prisoner replied that he had shot them, and was ordered
"so to do by his master—that the mules had come to his,
"prisoner's garden, in an inclosed field, and destroyed it,
"that he had complained to his master thereof, and asked "him what he should do if they came again, and that his "master told him to shoot them, and he had done so.
"Witness further stated that prisoner had told him that "the mules were in the habit of troubling his master's "plantation; and it was also in evidence that his master
"was not present when he shot the mules, and that priso"ner was the head driver of the plantation." Whereupon prisoner's counsel asked the court to charge the jury, that the prisoner had committed no act for which he should be criminally punished—for that the shooting the said mules as charged in the indictment was not done maliciously, or could be by him, he, prisoner, being a slave, and acting under the control and direction of his master—which instruction the Hon. Thomas Douglas, Judge of said court, declined to give, but having held the same under advisement, reserved the question. Thereupon the jury having rendered a verdict, the court suspended the sentence until the following term of said court, and on the 23d day of August, 1852, refused the instructions asked by the prisoner's counsel. Whereupon prisoner's counsel moved an 187 arrest of judgment and for a new trial, and assigned the grounds aforesaid, which motion was overruled by the court, and sentence pronounced—to which rulings prisoner's counsel objects, and excepts and alleges the same as error.

McQueen McIntosh for Appellant.

1. Prisoner was not liable to indictment under the act of 10th February, 1832, for malicious mischief, for the reason that it was evidently intended, in its penal consequences, to apply exclusively to free persons, and not slaves, the exception being in the 8th section of the act. That section distinctly shows that it was never the intention of the Legislature to lay a fine upon slaves. The punishment in all the other sections is in the alternative, and if a prosecution against a slave can be maintained, the jury might, in their discretion, impose a fine upon slaves, which would be an absurdity.

It is a penal statute, and must be construed strictly; and if the Legislature had intended to extend the operation of the 8th section over the whole act, it would have so stated. The very exception in prescribing the manner of punishment in the 8th section, repels the presumption that the act at large had any relation to the commission of the various offenses enumerated in it, by slaves. Thomp. Dig., p. 505-6-7.

The position is further sustained by the fact that in every other criminal offence committed by a slave, the punishment is death or whipping; and, except in the case of murder, the penal code creates the distinction in the manner of punishment between the free man and the slave Thomp. Dig., p. 537, 84, 40, &c.

The Legislature has passed two general acts for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors—the one relating to white persons, and the other relating to offences committed 188 by slaves and free persons of color. Pamp. Laws of 1828, p. 48, 174. And this indicates the fact that slaves were not supposed to fall within the provisions of the act of 1832, which is a modification of the act of 1828, relating to crimes and misdemeanors, unless specially designated, as in section 8.

The Legislature has expressly provided the manner in which slaves shall be punished. Thomp. Dig., p. 541, Sec. 19, 20.

If this be so, the verdict of the jury, for a term of imprisonment, cannot be enforced.

It might be contended that the act under which the prisoner was indicted is general in its terms, when it says "if any person shall maliciously," &c. Yet it would be in contravention of the spirit of the law to apply to slaves such portion of it as relates to bigamy, adultery, &c., wherein the same phraseology is used. Thomp. Dig., p. 499.

The prisoner, acting at the instigation and under the control of his master, was incapable of committing the offence charged in the indictment. There was the absence of will, without which there was no malice, the essence of the crime, and what must be proven. 4 Black. Com., Chap. 2, marg. p. 21, 27, 28; 1 Russ. on Crimes, p. 1, 17.

The slave is a chattel in law, and has no volition to disobey a master. Wheeler, p. 2; 2 Black Com., 92, 93: 9 Ga. Rep., 579, 582, 583, 584.

J. P. Sanderson for the State.

1. The slave Luke cannot be excused or justified upon the grounds stated in the assignment of error, and the court below did not err in refusing the instructions asked.

In the absence of any decisions or rulings governing this 189 class of persons when acting under the direction or command of the master, we must turn to those private relations which approximate the nearest to that which exists between master and slave, and these are those of husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant.

The principal case where constraint of a superior is allowed as an excuse for criminal misconduct proceeds upon the matrimonial subjection of the wife to her husband, for neither a child nor a servant are excused the commission of any crime, whether capital or not capital, by the command or coercion of the parent or master. 1 Russel, [18,] 1 Hale P. C., 44-516; 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 1, § 14.

It is no excuse for an infant that he acted by the command of the father. Humphrey vs. Douglass, 10 Ves. R., 71; cited 5 Law Rep., 50.

This offence was committed when the master was absent and the slave was not acting under the control of the master. For in all cases when the wife offends alone, without the company of her husband, she is responsible for her offences as much as a feme sole. 1 Russ., 20; 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 1, § 12-13.

Nor is it any excuse for the wife, that she committed an offence by her husband's order and procurement, if she committed it in his absence. 1 Russ., 20; 1 Hawk. P. C., 44.

2. The principles of the common law are held to be applicable to the slave—not as a slave—but as a reasonable being; and having many of its safeguards thrown around his person, and protected by it, he must be held subject and amenable to its provisions. State vs. Rua, Wheeler on Slavery, 210; Fields vs. State of Tennessee, ibid., 256.

The position that a slave is a person, and as such, recognized and protected by the laws, is evidenced by the various statutes of this State, as well as of others. Statutes 190 Thom. Dig., 499, § 2; 511, § 21, &c.; 542, § 1; State vs. Hale, Wheeler, 239.

A general statute against unlawful shooting, stabbing, &c., by free persons, was held in N. C. to extend to the protection of slaves. Commonwealth vs. Corm, Wheeler, 254.

The general criminal statutes of this State are applicable to slaves in all cases except those where special statutes have been enacted for them. Thom. Dig., 507, § 8.

This is a part of the general criminal code. Acts 1832, p. 71.

Previous to the Act of 1832, there was a law of force which would have excused Luke from the charge in the indictment, but which was properly repealed by the Act of 1832, sec. 9. Repealed Act, Revised Code, 1828, p. 50, § 8; Act, 1828, page 75, § 105.

3. Humanity—self-preservation—public policy and necessity enforce and demand that the ruling of the court below be sustained.

THOMPSON, J.:

Two questions are presented by this record for the consideration of the court. The appellant, Luke, was indicted under the Act of 1832, for malicious mischief, in killing sundry mules, the property of Joseph M. Hernandez.

The only evidence against the prisoner, as appears by the bill of exceptions, was his own admission, that he had killed the cattle by the direction and command of his master, because of their having trespassed upon the plantation of the latter. Upon this evidence, the counsel for the prisoner prayed the instruction of the court below to the jury —that the prisoner had committed no act for which he could be criminally punished, for that the shooting of said mules as charged in the indictment, was not done maliciously, nor could be so done by him, he, the prisoner, being a slave, 191 and acting under the control and by direction of his master. The refusal of the court to give this instruction, forms the first error assigned here.

The 2d error is upon the judgment rendered in the court below. The jury having found the prisoner guilty, assessed the punishment under the 59th section of the Act of February 10, 1832, (Thomp. Dig.,) at three month's imprisonment, and the court entered judgment upon the verdict that the prisoner be imprisoned in the common jail of St. John's county for the space of three calendar months, according to the verdict of the jury, and pay the costs of suit, and stand committed until the sentence be fully executed.

It is now alleged, that the prisoner could not be tried and punished under the Act of February 10, 1832, but only under the 61st section of the Act of November 21, 1828, Thomp. Dig., 541.

The first error assigned, presents one of the most interesting questions which can arise out of the institution of slavery as known to, and recognized by, our laws; but as the decision of the question so presented is not absolutely necessary to the disposition of the case, we pass it over without expressing or even intimating an opinion thereon, in the hope that if it is ever again presented for adjudication, we may be enabled to give to it that consideration and reflection which its interest and importance demand, and which the present limited term of this court here, will not permit. It is urged by the counsel for appellant, upon the second error assigned, that the Legislature evidently intended to discriminate between white persons, and slaves and free persons of color, as well in the mode as in the degree of punishment, to be inflicted for the infraction of the penal laws. That in 1828, two acts were passed, that of the 22d November, 1828, entitled an act relating to crimes and misdemeanors—and that of the 21st November, 1828, en- 192 titled an act relating to crimes and misdemeanors committed by slaves, free negroes, and mulattoes; the first named designed to embrace the case of free white persons exclusively, and the latter to the class of persons named in the title alone. That the act of 1832, which repealed the Act of November 22, 1828, is but a modification of the repealed act, designed to supply its place alone, and not to disturb the previous distinction, established by the Legislature of 1828, in relation to the different classes of persons amenable to the criminal laws. And on the other hand, it is contended, on behalf of the State, that the act of 1832 embraces within its provisions in terms, all persons—which term, person, must be taken to include slaves and colored freemen as well as white citizens; and that said act being posterior in date, and imposing a milder punishment than that provided for by the Act of November 21, 1828, it operates a repeal of the latter Act, and therefore, the act of 1832 is the only of law of force, and the conviction and sentence was properly founded thereon.

A careful review of the legislation of the State must lead to the conclusion that it was intended to establish and preserve a distinction between the punishments to be inflicted on slaves and free persons of color, and those on white persons for the same violations of the criminal law. The two acts passed in the year 1828, should be taken and construed together as one statute, and as creating the distinction alluded to. Thus the offences of assault, assault and battery, with or without the intent to kill or murder, were, by the Act of November 22, 1828, punished by a fine, at the discretion of the jury, the utmost extent or limit of the mulct being one thousand dollars; while the same offences committed by a slave or colored freeman upon a white person, are punished more severely by the Act of Nov.

21, 1828, a simple assault being punished by the infliction of 39 stripes, and the more aggravated offence of assault with intent to kill is punished by death. So, again, by the first named Act, robbery and burglary were punished by fine, pillory, or stripes, while by the latter Act, if committed by a slave, they are punished by death. And similar distinctions are to be found throughout the Act, those mentioned being sufficient for the purpose of illustration. Now these two Acts were not in conflict with each other; taking them as forming one whole, effect could be given to each and every part of both, because to interpret statutes properly, it is indispensably necessary to have regard to their provisions; to see of what they treat; the quid as well as the quo modo. Dwarris St. 757. Although in the absence of the Act of November 21, 1828, the punishment of that inferior caste of persons who are either slaves or free, might be inflicted under the general laws, yet as the Legislature has provided other and different modes and degrees of punishment for them, the latter must be observed. So careful was the Legislature to carry out this distinction, that by the 61st section of the Act of November 21, 1828, (Thomp. Dig.,) it was provided, that if any negro or mulatto, bond or free, shall commit any other crime or misdemeanor against the laws, it should be lawful for the jury convicting the offender to punish by any number of stripes they may award, not to exceed one hundred; and thus embracing within the generality of its provisions, the punishment for each and every and all offences, and excluding the idea, that in any case, they were to be liable to the penalties specified in and imposed by the Act of November 22, 1828.

This general Act, however, was repealed by the subsequent general statute, entitled An Act relating to crimes and misdemeanors, approved February 10, 1832; and it is 194 now to be seen whether this Act repealed the Act of Nov. 21, 1828, relating to crimes, &c., committed by slaves, free negroes and mulattoes. As a general rule, it is true, that every affirmative statute is a repeal by implication, of a precedent affirmative statute, so far as it is contrary thereto; leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant—but to apply this maxim of the law, it is necessary that the two Acts be in conflict with each other, which is not the case here. The last Act is general, and though it may inflict a milder punishment than the preceding statute for the same offence, yet the Act which is claimed to be repealed by this implication, is special and particular. The Act of November 22, 1828, which was repealed by the Act of 1832, was general in its terms, extending to all persons not excluded from its operation by the force and effect of its provisions; and the Act of February 10, 1832, which repealed it, is equally extensive in its affirmative provisions; but the Act of November 21, 1828, is special and particular, relating to the same crimes and offences committed by an inferior class of persons, slaves and colored freemen, and therefore, applying another rule in the interpretation or construction of statutes, the later general Act does not work any repeal of a former particular Act; thus the stat. 5 Eliz., that no one shall use or trade without being apprenticed, did not take away the 4 and 5 Phil. and Ma., c. 5, that no weaver use, &c. Dwarris Stat., 673, citing 6 Co. Rep., 19, b. That the application of this rule of interpretation does no violence to the intention of the Legislature, is obvious from the particularity of the repealing clauses contained in the 79th and 80th sections of the Act of February 10, 1832. Section 79 simply repeals the Act of 22d November, 1828, and section 80 repeals an Act passed 17th November, 1829, which was in amendment thereto, and there is no sweeping clause of repeal as to all
195 acts coming within the purview or conflicting with the provisions of the repealing statute. From this, the inference is clearly deducible, that the Legislature, in 1832, did not intend to disturb the distinction established in 1828, between the two classes of persons subject to the laws, but to preserve it. We have nothing to do with the question of the policy of establishing and perpetuating such distinctions; but if it were proper to express any opinion thereon, we should unhesitatingly express our approbation of the policy and propriety of such distinctions. The perpetuation of the institution, indeed the common safety of the citizens during its continuance, would seem to require that the superiority of the white or Caucasian race over the African negro, should be ever demonstrated and preserved so far as the dictates of humanity will allow—the degraded caste should be continually reminded of their inferior position, to keep them in a proper degree of subjection to the authority of the free white citizens. And thus there is an obvious propriety in visiting their offences with more degrading punishment than is inflicted on the white citizens, while the humanity of the law is demonstrated by securing to them the same forms of law in making defence—a trial by jury—compulsory process for their witnesses—the aid of counsel—and indeed, as full, fair, and impartial a trial, as can or may be claimed by a white person.

The Act of November 21, 1828, being unaffected by the subsequent Act of February 10, 1832, is in full force and vigor, and slaves, free negroes and mulattoes are to be tried and punished according to its provisions. They may be guilty of many of the infractions of the penal laws of the State, of which the white person may be guilty; and hence, if the general statute creates a new offence, before unknown to the common law, if it is one which a slave or free colored person may commit, the latter may be indict- 196 ed and punished for it. The indictment in such case would be under both statutes, that creating the offence, and also the Act of 21st November, 1828, because the one creates the offence and the other provides the penalty. If the offence is one known to the common law, the indictment must be under the act of November 21, 1828, and the punishment must be assessed according to its provisions. In the case at bar there being no punishment specially providing for malicious mischief when committed by a slave, resort should have been had to the 61st section of the Act of November 21, 1828, as the law governing the case, but this was not done; the punishment was assessed according to the provisions of the 59th section of the Act of February 10, 1832, and in this there was error, for which the judgment must be reversed.

And it is accordingly ordered, that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed, vacated and set aside.

SAMUEL BUFFINGTON, APPELLANT, vs. JOHN QUACKENBOSS, APPELLEE.

1. The statute of the State of Florida confers upon a defendant the right to plead a set-off, upon which he is entitled to judgment against the plaintiff if his demand proved exceeds that of the latter.

2. After plea of set-off pleaded, and issue joined, the plaintiff has a right to discontinue his suit upon payment of costs; and this is imperative whenever an order for discontinuance is entered in the Clerk's office. But it is in the power of the Court to relax the rule upon special affidavit and motion.

3. If the costs are not paid, or if the order had been conditioned on the payment of costs, the only remedy of the defendant would be by motion in the Court below, to set aside the discontinuance, on the refusal of the plaintiff to comply with the terms of the order or the rule of Court.

Appeal from the Circuit Court for Duval county.

197 The point presented in this case will be found in the opinion of the court.

J. P. Sanderson and McQueen McIntosh for appellant.

G. R. Fairbanks for appellee.

SEMMES, J.:

This was an action of assumpsit, founded on a promissory note. The defendant in the court below, filed an account exceeding in amount the plaintiff's demand, and which, under the provision of our statute, he plead as a set-off.

At the trial term, the court, on motion of plaintiff's counsel, ordered the cause to be dismissed, to which the counsel for defendant excepted, and assigned the same as error.

The statute which authorizes proper subjects of set-off to be pleaded, gives the defendant the right to have judgment for the balance which the jury, on the trial of the cause, may find in his favor. Under this statute, it is insisted, that it was not competent in the court below, to dismiss this action at the instance of the plaintiff, without the consent of the defendant. We do not think so. The statute, while it affords a summary mode of adjusting the mutual demands existing between parties to a suit, in no wise, either directly or by implication, impairs the right of a plaintiff to discontinue his suit at any time before trial. According to the English practice, a plaintiff may discontinue his action as a matter of course, at any time before verdict or judgment on demurrer. 1 Salk. 178. Whenever a plaintiff finds he has misconceived his action, or from any other cause, he will not be able to maintain it, he may obtain a rule to discontinue. The judgment on the rule is never, it is true, entered, until the costs are paid; for until paid, 198 the action is not discontinued. 2 Arch. Prac. 233. Our rules are but little at variance with those recognized by the English Courts. By the 13th rule, a plaintiff may become non-suit, at any time before the jury retire. By the 14th rule, he may at any time discontinue his cause in the Clerk's office, by paying costs and entering a written discontinuance. The rules adopted by this court, are not in conflict with any statute of the State, but made in conformity with the law. Whenever an order is entered in the Clerk's office to discontinue an action, it is of no effect, unless the costs are paid. But it is within the power of the court to relax the rule. Cases may occur, as under the English practice, in which, upon a special affidavit and motion, the plaintiff may obtain leave to discontinue, without paying costs, as where a plea of infancy was interposed by defendant, in bar of a recovery for goods sold him. 2 Arch. 898; Van Buren et al. vs Fort et al., 4 Wend. R., 209.

In this case, the judgment of the court in allowing a discontinuance, is absolute, and the presumption is, the costs of the suit were paid. If they are not, or if the order of the court had been conditional, on the payment of costs, the only remedy of the defendant would be by motion in the court below to set aside the discontinuance, on the refusal of the plaintiff to comply with the terms of the order or the rule of court.

The supposed hardship which might result from the defendant's set-off being barred by the statute of limitations, in the event of the plaintiff discontinuing his suit, cannot affect the plaintiff's rights. To plead the set-off is a right conferred by statute which the defendant may or may not avail himself, at his election. And when plead, the defendant may withdraw his set-off at any time before the jury retire. It is very obvious, that to deny a plaintiff the right to discontinue his action, by reason of a set-off being plead, would, in effect, be to rescind the rule and destroy 199

the right altogether, for in any case, it would be in the power of a defendant, by pleading a set-off, whether real or fictitious, to force the plaintiff to a trial.

The case of Branham vs. the Adm'rx. of Brown, 1 Bailey's S. C. Rep., 362, was in every respect, similar to the one before us. It was an action of assumpsit, the defence to which was a discount exceeding the plaintiff's demand. On the trial when the evidence had closed, the plaintiff moved for leave to discontinue, which, on being objected to, was refused by the court, and the case was submitted to the jury, who found for the defendant. Upon a review of this case, the court, by Nott, J., in deciding the motion to set aside the verdict, said, the plaintiff had the right to discontinue his action, or suffer a non-suit, notwithstanding the defendant may have filed his discount. The court should have allowed the plaintiff to discontinue, and he is entitled to do so now, if he desires it. The same rule is recognized as to the defendant's right to withdraw his discount. Vide Dorr vs. Hawks, 3 McCord's Rep., 258.

Let the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

Archibald Barber, Plaintiff in Error, vs. The State of Florida.

After the testimony in a case has been closed, neither party has the right to re-examine a witness, or to introduce any new evidence, but when through the inadvertence of counsel, or other cause, the rigid enforcement of the rule would defeat the ends of justice, it is the duty of the Judge to relax it, whenever it can be done, without injustice to the adverse party.

Per Thompson, J.*—Such relaxation rests on the sound discretion of the Judge, and if he errs in admitting or refusing to admit the testimony offered, this court has jurisdiction to review the judgment and correct the error.

Error to the Circuit Court of Duval County.

This was an indictment against Archibald Barber for an 200 assault and battery.

It appears from the record, that upon the trial of this case in the Circuit Court, the State having closed, and the prisoner having offered no evidence, prisoner's counsel contended in his argument to the jury, that the prosecution had not proved the time when the offence charged in the indictment was committed, and asked the court to charge the jury that in such case the prisoner was entitled to a verdict.

The solicitor for the State insisted that the time had been proved by the witness, Beers, and asked to have the witness recalled to state what he had said as to time; the witness having been recalled could not say whether he had stated the time or not. Whereupon, the solicitor for the State conceded the point in question, and moved the court for leave to introduce the witness, to prove the time, to which prisoner's counsel objected. The court having overruled the objection, the witness was introduced and the time proved. To all of which prisoner's counsel objected and excepted, and assigned the same for error.

McQueen McIntosh for the Plaintiff in Error.

In the trial of a criminal cause, when the solicitor for the State has announced that the prosecution has closed, and counsel for the prisoner has made his argument before the jury, and asked the charge of the court, a witness cannot be recalled to remedy defects in the evidence adduced by the prosecution, and which have been disclosed by prisoner's counsel. Prisoner, in such a case, was entitled to all the benefits arising from the defence made by his counsel, and it was error in the court to permit the defective testimony to be supplied with new evidence. Odronaux vs. Helie, 3 Sand. Ch. R., p. 512; Jones vs. Relf, 10 Miss.,

If the principle advocated is sustained by the cases cited in civil proceedings, it should with greater propriety be considered the rule of conducting the examination of witnesses in criminal trials. 4 Chitty Black., mar. p. 356.

There can be no discretion, where there are general fixed rules to control the manner of proceeding, and that discretion which places it in the arbitrary will and power of Inferior Courts to prejudice the rights of parties before them, should be discountenanced by courts holding their decisions in review. Hawkins vs. The State of Georgia, 11 Geo. Rep., p. 92; Bouvier's Law Dic., 328-329, title, discretion; Jacob's Law Dic., title, discretion; 1 Campbell's Lives of the Lord Chan., pp. 33-34.

J. P. Sanderson for the State.

The examination of witnesses is to be conducted in such a manner as to elicit the truth, without taking any unfair advantage. The court will not close the mouth of a witness because counsel omitted to ask a material question at first—the usual course is to suggest the question to the court, which will exercise its discretion in putting it to the witness. 1 Starkie's Ev., 150, Ed. 1826; Alfred vs. Halliwell, 1 Starkie R., 117, 2 E. C. L. R., 53; 3 Chitty's Genl. Prac., 901-3, cases cited and note.

The court may, at its discretion, allow a witness to be examined by either party, over and over again, at any 202 time during the trial before verdict, and this as well in criminal cases as civil. State vs. Silver, 3 Dev., 332 ; Freleigh vs. State, 8 Miss., 606, cited 5 U. S. D., 985, sections 627-28-29; 1 Phil. Ev. 212, n., 1st Ed.

And even as to new matter. Curren vs. Connery, 5 Binney, 488; 3 U. S. Dig., 709, §544, ibid., 708, §511 ; U. S. vs. Wilson, 1 Bald., 38.

The time and manner of examining witnesses is in the discretion of the court, before which the trial takes place. People vs. Mather, 4 Wend., 229, cited 3 U. S. D., 709, § 543; Law vs. Merrills, 6 Wend., 268, cited 4 N. Y. D., 1316, §469; Duncan vs. McCollough, 4 S. & R., 480, cited 3 U. S. D., 708, §506.

After plaintiff has closed his case, he will be permitted to remedy a defect in his evidence, if such defect arose through the inadvertency of his counsel. 1 Arch. Prac., 194; 1 Starkie R., 117; Giles, Assignee of Hills, vs. Powell, 12 E. C. L., 560; Walls vs. Atchison, ibid, 566.

And even though the counsel for the prosecution has closed his case, and the prisoner's counsel points out a defect in the evidence, the court is at liberty in its discretion, to put what question it pleases to remedy the defect and remove the objection. Rex vs. Remnaut, 1 B. Crown Cases, 136.

Upon a trial for murder of a male child, the counsel for the prosecution concluded his case without asking the sex of the child, and the Judge would not permit him afterwards to call a witness to prove it, and in consequence of the omission, directed the jury to acquit the prisoner. But to the honor of that Judge it ought to be stated, that he declared afterwards in private, his regret for his conduct. This case is well remembered, but it ought never to be cited, but with reprobation. 4 Christian Blk., 356, note.

So, after defendant's counsel had summed up, and while the plaintiff's counsel were summing up, defendant's coun- 203 sel discovered some written evidence, which they wished to submit to the jury, and which the Judge refused. On an application for a new trial, the court said, the evidence was material, that the Judge had a discretion to admit the evidence, and it ought, in sound discretion, to have been received—and a new trial was granted on that ground. Mercer vs. Sayer, 7 J. R., 306.

This is an assignment of error upon the exercise of a discretionary power by the court, which this court will cautiously examine into, on appeal. 1 U. S. D., 169, §§ 111, 112, 113, and 114; People vs. Mather, 4 Wend., 247, cited 4 N. Y. D., 1316, § 247.

ANDERSON, C. J.:

The case is brought up by agreement as upon writ of error from the Circuit Court of Duval county. On the trial of the plaintiff in error on an indictment for assault and battery, the solicitor of the State omitted to prove the time when the offence charged was committed, till the prisoner's counsel, on the solicitor announcing that he had closed, addressing the court in the defence, asked the court to charge the jury, that the prisoner was entitled to a verdict on account of the omission.

The solicitor of the State then moved the court for leave to introduce a witness to prove the time; to which prisoner's counsel objected. The court overruled the objection, the witness was introduced, and the time was proved. The ruling of this court is assigned for error.

It is undoubtedly true, that after the counsel for the prosecution has closed his case, and counsel for the accused has been heard in the defence, the former has not the right to recall a witness or to examine a new one. This is in accordance with well settled rules of practice in relation to the examination of witnesses. But it is incorrect to 204 consider the right of counsel and the duty of a Judge as alike regulated by the same inflexible rules. The province and peculiar office of the latter, is to ascertain and establish the truth, and the policy of the law therefore, wisely confides to him the right so to use the necessary rules of practice, as not to allow the letter to thwart and defeat their spirit.

When the Judge perceives that in consequence of the inadvertence of counsel or other cause, the rigid enforcement of the rules would defeat the great object for which they were established, it is his duty so to relax them (when it can be done without injustice to any) as to make them subserve their true purpose, which is to aid the court and the parties before it in determining and adjusting their respective rights.

The security which we have from any injury growing out of this license, arises from this distinction—that counsel have no right to examine witnesses out of the prescribed order; it is only a permission which may be awarded or refused by the court, as the Judge may perceive that it can or cannot be allowed with justice to all parties.

In the case before us, the solicitor had no right to recall the witness Beers—his rights are regulated by the rule, and according to its terms the witness could not be recalled. But the Judge had the right to recall or to permit the solicitor to recall him when, as in this case, it was obvious no injustice could be done to the other party by the relaxation of the rule. Such we understand to be the practice in all the best regulated courts, and it appears to us that the practice is in accordance with the purposes for which courts of Justice are established. We conclude, therefore, that there was no error in the ruling of the court.

Per curiam. Let the judgment be affirmed.

Barber vs. State of Florida—Opinion of Court.

205 THOMPSON, J.:

Although I concur in the judgment pronounced in this cause, I prefer to state my own reasons therefor, inasmuch as my views do not entirely coincide with those of my brethren.

For the purpose of avoiding confusion and embarrassment, and the surprise of the the parties litigant, rules have been, from time immemorial, established for the orderly proceeding of the litigants in the introduction of evidence, the examination, cross-examination and re-examination of witnesses. The witness, when introduced, is to be examined by the party calling him, after which he may be cross examined by the opposite party; and a re-examination by the party who calls the witness is only allowable, as of right, on those topics on which he has been cross-examined, to give an opportunity of explaining any new facts which have come out upon such cross-examination. But the witness cannot at this stage be again examined in chief —that is, as to any facts unconnected with the cross-examination. If a question as to any material fact has been omitted upon the examination in chief, the usual course is to suggest the question to the court, which will exercise its discretion in putting it to the witness. 1 Stark on Ev., 120, 149.

Such are the rules established in this particular; but they are not inflexible and unyielding; the discretion of the Judge may and should be exercised, in proper cases, to dispense with the rigor of the rule, and to permit the re-examination of a witness as to matters in chief, or to allow a new witness to be called to prove a disputed fact, at any time during the trial of the cause, whenever it is necessary to the advancement of justice, if it can be done without injury or surprise to the adverse party.

206 It is, however, contended on behalf of the State that this is a matter properly belonging to the practice of the subordinate court, and that this court cannot interfere with, or regulate the exercise of this discretion. I cannot admit this as sound doctrine. The discretion is not an arbitrary exercise of the will and pleasure of the Judge, but it is a sound legal discretion, to be exercised according to the exigency of the case, upon a consideration of the attending circumstances, and if he errs in the exercise of this power, either in permitting a re-examination of a witness when he should not have done so, or refuses to waive the rule and allow the evidence to be admitted when he should do so, this court has the power to correct his error. Discretion, says Ld. Coke, is to discern between right and wrong, and therefore, whoever hath power to act at discretion, is bound by the rule of reason and of law. 2 Inst., 56, 298. And though there be a latitude of discretion given to one, yet he is circumscribed that what he does be necessary and convenient, without which no liberty can defend it. Hob. R., 158. And again, it is said that when anything is left to any person, to be done according to his discretion, the law intends it must be done with sound discretion, and according to law; and the court in B. R. hath a power to redress things that are otherwise done, notwithstanding they are left to the discretion of those that do them. 1 Lill. Abr., 477.

And this seems to be the correct rule, for many errors may be committed and much wrong be done if this discretion is not to be reviewed in this court, as a court of error and appeal.

There is always danger that a discretion which may not be controlled by a superior tribunal, however properly it may at first be exercised, will soon degenerate into mere caprice; an arbitrary sic volo sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas. It may be asked why this discretion may not 207 be as safely reposed in the Circuit Courts, as in this court, where it will be ultimately lodged, if this court entertains jurisdiction over the matter? The answer is obvious—the Circuit Court is held by a single Judge; in this court, three Judges must preside, and confer on all questions decided by it, and two of them must concur; the Circuit Court is not required to give the reasons for its judgment; in this court, the reasons for every judgment must not only be given, but must be written out, and read in open court before the judgment is pronounced. The law provides for a more mature deliberation and consideration of every question in this court than could with convenience be given by the Judge of the Circuit Court, and hence there is a very obvious propriety in confiding the ultimate decision of all questions, including even the so-called discretionary powers, to a tribunal constituted as this court is. But it has been said that the Circuit Judges possess, with regard to the exercise of these discretionary powers, better opportunities, indeed in some cases, the only opportunity of making a correct decision on the subject matter. If this be true, the cases, I think, are rare, and are more than countervailed by the considerations before mentioned of more time for deliberation, and the benefit of the united labors of the three Judges. And again, it has been contended, that if this court claims and exercises the power of regulating and controlling the exercise of these discretionary powers, it will have the effect of degrading the Circuit Court Judges, and in fact would materially interfere with the efficient discharge of their duties. I cannot think so. The Circuit Court Judges are well aware that the tribunals in which they preside are with respect to this court, inferior and subordinate; and presuming that the sole and only care of that very meritorious branch of the judicial power of the State is, that justice may be ad- 208 ministered according to the rules of law, they would always rejoice that unintentional errors should be corrected by the court of last resort. But if the argument is well founded, it proves too much; it goes to show that this court can and ought to be dispensed with in order to preserve the dignity and efficiency of the subordinate Judges—it is an argument against all appellate tribunals—for it is impossible to conceive that the Judges of the subordinate courts would not entertain as much pride of opinion upon such questions as it is conceded may now be assigned for error, as upon those questions which are claimed to rest exclusively in the discretion of the Judge.

That this court has the power to entertain the jurisdiction which I contend for, I have no doubt; the citations above made, declare that the Court of King's Bench, in England, hath power to redress things erroneously done, which are confided to the discretion of subordinate tribunals, and the power of this court as a court of revision is as full and ample as that of the English Court. By the Constitution, it is invested not only with full appellate jurisdiction proper, but with a superintending power and control over all other courts. In some of the cases cited upon the argument, while the right to review the exercise of such discretionary powers is denied the appellate court, it is admitted that the court will interfere whenever there is a case presented of gross maladministration of the power. This presents a most glaring inconsistency, for how can an appellate tribunal ascertain that the power of exercising this discretion has been grossly abused except by an examination of the question? And if the appellate court has not the jurisdiction which I claim for it, the answer should be in all cases where the assignment of error is based upon the discretionary power, that the court can-

209 not interfere for want of jurisdiction. These cases proceed upon this idea—we will look into the matter; if the power has been fairly, properly and justly exercised, we will not affirm the judgment, because it is right and just, but will do so on the ground that the court has no power to interfere with it. And if, on the other hand, it shall appear that it has been arbitrarily exercised—if there has been a wanton or gross abuse of the power, the Appellate Court will interfere and apply the proper corrective, because it is not a proper and just exercise of discretion. In fact jurisdiction is and must be assumed, according to these cases, to ascertain whether it is or is not the exercise of judicial discretion; and yet it is said no appeal lies from the exercise of such judicial discretion, because the Supreme Court has not power to review it. The course of reasoning by which such a result is attained, seems to my mind too highly artificial to be sound. I cannot understand how the right to exercise this discretionary power, if free from control, is made to depend on the fact whether it is rightfully or wrongfully used; so also it seems to me, that an uncontrollable discretion which acts materially on the rights of parties litigant, is, according to the principles of the common law, simply an absurdity; and that it justly merits the eloquent denunciation of Ld. Camden, quoted by the counsel for the appellant. "The discretion of a Judge," says that eminent jurist and statesman, "is the law of ty-"rants; it is always unknown, it is different in different "men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper, "and passion. In the best, it is oftentimes caprice; in "the worst, it is every vice, folly and passion to which hu-"man nature is liable."

In the case at bar, although the Circuit Court allowed the witness to be re-examined at a very late stage of the cause, yet I am unable to perceive, from the statement of 210 the bill of exceptions, that the discretion was exercised otherwise than soundly and properly. There was no surprise upon the appellant, and he does not appear to have been prejudiced by the discharge of witnesses, &c., previous thereto. It was a simple isolated fact as to the time when the offence charged was committed, and not as to the guilt of the appellant, whether he had in fact committed the offence or not. I can very well conceive of cases, both on the civil and criminal sides of the court, when the re-examination of witnesses would tend greatly to the prejudice of the adversary party, and present temptations to the witnesses to commit perjury. Witnesses remaining in the court room, and ascertaining from the arguments of counsel before the jury the weak points of the case, if their feelings are strongly enlisted, would be prompted by the bias of their minds, to supply the deficiency, upon a re-examination. So also the new and substantive fact proved by a witness recalled to the stand, or a new witness introduced after the evidence had been closed, might be susceptible of contradiction, and yet the opposite party deprived of this opportunity by the discharge or departure of witnesses who had been in attendance. Other suggestions present themselves, but those stated are sufficient for the purpose of illustration. The discretion is to be exercised with reference to all the surrounding circumstances, and these circumstances in almost every instance, may be made to appear intelligibly to the Appellate Court, by the bill of exceptions, so that if it has been improperly exercised, it may be corrected here. As before remarked, I concur in the judgment of affirmance, because I cannot see that any error has been committed by the court below in the application of a sound legal discretion.

ADEN WATERMAN, APPELLANT, VS. SAMUEL B. MATTAIR, 211
APPELLEE.

1. It is too late after plea to the action, for the defendant to demand a bill of particulars.

2. The statute requiring the plaintiff to file with his declaration, a copy of the cause of action, is merely directory; but still the defendant may refuse to plead until a copy is filed or furnished him. He has a right to his rule on the plaintiff when made at the proper stage of the case, after appearance, but he waives this right, by plea to the action. It is, however, discretionary in the Judge who tries the case to grant the order at any time before the trial.

3. In an action for deceit, the covenant of warranty is not the cause of action, but the inducement to it.

4. The action is not on a breach of the contract, but the fraud or deceit of the defendant in the sale. It is, therefore, not requisite for the plaintiff to set forth the contract, but simply, the fraud or deceit and damages.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Marion county, Hon. Thos. Douglas presiding.

The appellee, Mattair, instituted against the appellant an action on the case for a deceit in the sale of a slave. The declaration is in the usual form, and alleges unsoundness of the slave at the time of sale. The following bill of exceptions, which was made a part of the record, embraces the points submitted to the court below, the rulings of the court thereon, and the facts appearing in the record:

The issue having been made up in this cause, and the same having been called for trial, defendant's counsel demanded a bill of particulars from plaintiff's counsel, which being refused, defendant's counsel moved the court for an order on plaintiff's counsel to file bill of particulars, which motion was refused by the court, to which ruling defend- 212 ant by his counsel, excepted."

"Plaintiff's counsel offered in evidence in said cause a written covenant of warranty, under seal, from defendant to plaintiff, setting forth a warranty by defendant of the soundness of the negro woman slave, the subject of controversy in said cause. Defendant, by his counsel, objected to the admission of said paper writing, on the ground that said covenant was not set out nor described in plaintiff's declaration, either in substance or form. The Court overruled the objection, and defendant, by his counsel, excepted. Defendant, by his counsel, further objected to the admission of said covenant of warranty on the ground that no copy of the same was filed with the declaration. The Court overruled said objection, and the defendant, by his counsel, excepted; whereupon the defendant appeals and prays the Court to sign and seal this his bill of exceptions, and make the same a part of the record in said cause."

No evidence of unsoundness is exhibited in the record. The Jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and appealed.

B. M. Pearson for appellant.

C. A. M. Mitchell for appellee.

SEMMES, J.:

This is an action on the case, for deceit, in the sale of a negro slave, and the points presented to us are purely questions of practice.

The declaration alleges the warranty and fraud, on the part of the defendant, in the sale, and avers that the plaintiff, by reason of the unsoundness of said slave, incurred great expense for medical services, and in feeding and clothing her. No bill of particulars was filed with the declaration, but the defendant, by his attorney, pleaded to the action, and the issues were thereupon made up. After this, and when the cause was called for trial, the defendant moved the court for an order on the plaintiff to file a bill of particulars, which motion was refused, and this is assigned as error on the part of the court below. 213

It is very clear, and cannot admit of argument, that it is too late, after plea to the action, for the defendant to demand a bill of particulars. The only object of it, is to apprise the defendant of the nature and extent of the cause of aciton, in order that he may plead with the greater certainty.

Our statute requiring the plaintiff to file with his declaration a copy of the cause of action, is merely directory; but still, the defendant may refuse to plead, until a copy is filed or furnished him. He has a right to his rule on the plaintiff when made at a proper stage of the case, after appearance, but he waives this right by plea to the action, although it is discretionary with the Judge who tries the case, to grant the order at any time before the trial. 2 Arch. Prac., 222. Circumstances may arise in the progress of a cause, where it would be the exercise of a sound discretion, on the part of the court, to relax the usual rule.

The second ground of error assigned by appellant, is, that the covenant of warranty from him to appellees, was, notwithstanding his objection, admitted by the court below, as evidence on the trial, when in fact it was not set out in the declaration, either in substance or form. The covenant is not incorporated in the bill of exceptions, as it should have been, nor is it to be found in the record before us. If a variance in fact exists between the declaration and the covenant, it is not in the power of this court to ascertain it, with the defective record before us. It is unques- 214 tionably the duty of counsel to see that the record of cases appealed from is complete, and had an application been made to us, it would have been an easy matter to have supplied this omission. We can hardly be expected to review the decisions of the courts below, unless the facts upon which the decisions are based are brought before us.

The third and last error assigned, is, that a copy of the covenant was not filed with the declaration. Had this been necessary, it was waived by the plea. But it was not necessary. The statute requires that all bonds, notes, bills of exchange, covenants and accounts, upon which suit may be brought, or a copy thereof, be filed with the declaration. Thomp. Dig., 331.

But this suit is not brought on the covenant. It is not the cause of action, but the inducement to it. The plaintiff's right to recover, it is true, grows out of the contract of warranty, but the action is not on a breach of the contract, but the fraud or deceit of the defendant, in the sale, of an unsound negro slave—a matter outside of the covenant. The gravamen is the deceit, and not a breach of the warranty. Williamson vs. Allison, 2 East., 246. In an action on the case, upon a warranty, it is necessary to state the whole consideration, the substantial parts of the warranty, and the breach of which the party complains. Miles vs. Sherwood, 8 East, 7. But in the case of Barney vs. Dewey, 13 John. Rep., 224, it was held, that in an action for deceit, it was not requisite for the plaintiff to set forth the contract in his declaration, or any consideration, but simply to state the fraud or deceit and damages. And although it is true, that the contract stated is only matter of inducement, and therefore, the same certainty is not requisite as if the action was on the contract itself, yet, whatever is alleged as inducement, must be proved, and a variance in this respect would be as fatal, though the action is on a collateral matter, as if on the contract. 215

The whole case as presented to us, is too plain to admit of any doubt. A mere statement of the facts, as presented by the bill of exceptions, would seem to afford a conclusive answer to the several grounds of error assigned by appellant.

MARIA DOGGETT, APPELLANT, VS. ISAIAH D. HART AND OTHERS, APPELLEES.

1. Although as a general rule, the plaintiff in ejectment must show a legal title to enable him to maintain the action, yet in particular cases, where ejectment is brought upon the demise of a cestui que trust, the jury will be permitted to presume that the trustee has made a regular surrender of estate, in every case where the purposes of the trust estate have been satisfied, or the beneficial occupation of that estate by the possessor induces a supposition that a conveyance of the legal estate has been made to the party beneficially interested, or where the trust is a plain one, and a Court of Equity would compel the trustee to make a conveyance.

2. To enable a cestui que trust to claim the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity in asserting a legal title, it must be distinctly and positively alleged that the trustee had refused the use of his name to the party beneficially interested in an action at law.

3. A Court of Equity will not entertain jurisdiction on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits, merely because the complainant has a multitude of suits to bring depending upon the same question or the same title, but will entertain such jurisdiction where the bill is in the nature of a bill of peace, as where the party is in possession, and is threatened with numerous actions, and in cases where a Court of Equity having entertained jurisdiction upon a clear ground of equity, as for a discovery, will also give relief, consequent upon discovery.

4. A Court of Equity will not entertain jurisdiction in cases of confusion of boundaries, upon the ground merely that the boundaries are in controversy, but will require that there should be some equity superinduced by the act of the parties, such as fraud, gross negligence, or misconduct on the part of those whose duty it is to preserve and perpetuate such boundaries. 216

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for Duval county.

The appellant, who was complainant in the court below, filed her bill against Isaiah D. Hart and others, setting forth that on the thirteenth day of September, 1816, the Spanish Governor of East Florida granted to one Maria Taylor a certain tract of land, containing two hundred acres, situated on the River St. Johns, and particularly describing it by boundaries; that said Hart, by divers conveyances, became possessed of this tract of land, or such parts as had not been previously conveyed. The bill further alleges that on the thirteenth day of December, 1816, the said Spanish Governor of East Florida granted to one John Masters a certain tract of land, situated on the river St. Johns, supposed to contain one hundred acres; that this last mentioned tract was "bounded and described, "and a plat of the same duly returned and recorded, as "follows: Bounded on the west by the aforesaid 'Maria "Taylor's' grant, on the north and east by Hogan's "Creek, and on the south by the river St. Johns, and con- "taining in reality about seventy-five acres;" that said Hart, on the 4th day of May, 1836, by virtue of diverse conveyances, and especially of a deed of conveyance from one John Bellamy, became seized and possessed of the tract known as the "Masters grant," or to such parts as had not previously been conveyed away by previous owners; that said Hart, on the eighteenth day of December, 1836, for the consideration of $1,100.00. conveyed, with covenant of warranty, all his right, title and interest in and to the tract known as the "Masters grant" to William J. Mills, in trust, for the exclusive use and benefit of the

217 complainant, Maria Doggett, then the wife of John L. Doggett, free from all or any claims of said John L. Doggett, or any other person or persons claiming by, through or under him. The bill further sets forth that the consideration for the transfer from Hart to Mills, in trust as aforesaid, has been fully paid by complainant; that her husband, John L. Doggett, died before the institution of the suit, and that Mills, the trustee, neglected and refused to perform the trust reposed in him. The complainant claims that the "Masters Grant" was bounded on the west by the "Maria Taylor Grant," and alleges that Hart, since the execution of the deed of trust to Mills, claims that the said west boundary line of the "Master's Grant" is distant about forty rods from the east boundary of the "Maria Taylor Grant." The bill alleges that the two grants referred to comprise the territory upon which the town of Jacksonville is now located, and sets forth certain conveyances from Hart to the other defendants, who were purchasers of lots within the disputed boundaries. It also asserts that Hart is and has been in possession of certain other lots within the disputed boundaries, some of which have been yielding rent for a series of years, for which it is claimed he should be held liable. The bill also alleges that certain other lots were conveyed by said Hart after the execution of said deed of trust by him, but before the same was recorded so as to fix the purchasers with notice, and claims that Hart should be held liable therefor under the covenant of warranty contained in the deed of trust aforesaid. It concludes by praying that Hart should be decreed to deliver up the possession of the several lots still held or claimed by him, and that the boundary line between the Maria Taylor Grant and the Masters Grant may be established; that Hart may be decreed to pay the amount, with interest, for which he is chargeable under his covenant of war-
218 ranty; that he may be decreed to render an account of the rents and profits which have come to his hands for and on account of any of the lots claimed to be within the Masters Grant, and pay the same to complainant; and that the other defendants may be decreed to deliver to complainant the several lots of which they are respectively in possession, as stated in the bill.

To this bill Hart for himself, and several of the other defendants jointly demurred, alleging as the causes of demurrer

1. That the complainant has not, by her bill, made such a case as entitles her to any relief against the defendants in a Court of Equity, but that the said complainant has a full, complete and adequate remedy in a Court of Law;

2. That the said bill is multifarious, in that the same is exhibited against the defendant, Hart, for divers separate and distinct matters and causes, and also against the defendants who demur, and divers other defendants, for divers separate and distinct matters and causes, in which they are in no wise jointly interested;

3. That by the said bill it appears that the said complainant hath not any legal or equitable interest in the subject matter of the said suit.

These demurrers were sustained by the court below, and the bill was dismissed with costs. From this decree the complainant appealed.

Philip Fraser (with whom was Felix Livingston,) for appellant.

Of the jurisdiction.—The third general division of the cognizance of equity arises from the establishment of principles, or the possession of powers, of a nature exclusively adapted to the subject matter, but wholly inadmissible at law.

Thus, trusts, equitable mortgages, and equities of re- 219 demption, the equity of a feme covert to a settlement, and to her separate estate, are confined to chancery, because these interests are creatures of that court, owing their existence solely to its principles, and supported exclusively by its powers. Fonb. Eq., 23, note 3.

A trust is a creature of equity, and to be governed by their rules. Fonb. Eq., 227 and 307, note*; Story's Eq. Jur., § 29.

Boundaries.—The court has never entertained bills for establishing boundaries, unless where the soil itself is in question, or where there might have been a multiplicity of suits. 4 Bridg. Eq. Dig., 133; Story's Eq. Jur., 616, 619, 620 and 621; Wake vs. Conyers, 1 Eden, 331; ibid., 2 Cox, 360.

Multifariousness.—A single copyholder is not relievable in equity for an excessive fine, (that being determinable by a jury,) but to avoid multiplicity of suits, several copyholders may join to be relieved against a general fine, that is excessive. 4 Bridg. Eq. Dig., 39 & 90; 3 P. W., 157.

A demurrer for multifariousness will hold only where plaintiff claims several matters of different natures, but when a general right is claimed by the bill, though defendants have separate and distinct rights, a demurrer will not hold. 4 Bridg. Eq. Dig., Tit. Demurrer, 203; ibid., § 71-2-4; Salvidge vs. Hyde, 5 Madd., 138; Exeter Coll. vs. Rowland, 6 Madd., 94; Kay vs. Moore, 1 Sim. & St. 61.

Definition of multifariousness.—1 Daniel Ch. Pr., 383, 384, 393, n.; Story's Eq. Pl., 271.

Bills against persons with distinct interests in the same transaction, or arising under the same instrument, not multifarious. 1 Daniel Ch. Pr., 386, et seq.; ibid., 389, 392, 396

To ascertain boundaries.—Turner vs. Robinson, 1 S. & 220
S., 313.

Impertinence no ground for Demurrer.—1 Daniel Ch. Pr., 401.

G. W. Call for appellee, Hart, (with whom was McQueen McIntosh, for the other appellees.)

1. The bill would be multifarious if Hart were sole defendant, for it prays four distinct matters against him, each of which would be the proper matter of a separate suit.

Multifariousness consists in uniting in one bill several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected, against one defendant. Story's Eq. Pl., § 271, 280, 252-3.

It is not competent where A. is sole plaintiff, and B. sole defendant, to unite in one bill all sorts of matters in which they are mutually concerned. Attorney Genl. vs. Goldsmith's Co., 5 Simons, 670-5; 7 Cond. Eng. Ch. 573.

2. But the case is stronger here where there are many defendants. "What is more familiarly termed multifariousness as applied to a bill, is where a party is able to say he is brought as defendant to a record, with a large part of which and the case made by which he has nothing to do." 1 Daniel Ch. Pr., 385, cites 1 Mad., 89.

If the owner of the equitable title to land in a bill to compel a conveyance of the legal title to him, join the owner of the adjoining land as a defendant to settle a disputed boundary, the bill is multifarious. Hickman vs. Coke, 3 Humph., 640, cited in 2 U. S. Eq. Dig., 426.

This was originally done here, but the bill was, after allowance of the demurrer, so far amended as to strike out that prayer. It is a question whether that amendment can now be considered as made.

In Gaines and Wife vs. Chew, the Supreme Court held a bill multifarious which prayed an account from execu-221 tors with which the other defendants had nothing to do. Gaines et ux. vs. Chew et al., 2 How., 644.

In Whaley vs. Dawson, the Chancellor allowed a demurrer for multifariousness, to a bill praying for the partition of certain lands held in common, and for setting aside a lease granted to plaintiff. Whaley vs. Dawson, 2 Sch. & Lef., 371-2.

See also Salvidge vs. Hyde, Jacobs, 151; Harrison vs. Hogg, 2 Vesey, Jr., 323; Saxton vs. Davis, 18 Vesey, 71; Dunn vs. Dunn, 2 Simons, 329; Maud et al. vs. Ackholm, 2 Sim., 331; 2 White & Tud., part 1, page 318.

And in Boyd vs. Hoyt, after full argument, it was decided that where a joint claim against two defendants is improperly joined in the same bill with a seperate claim against one of the defendants only, either or both may demur for multifariousness. Boyd vs. Hoyt, 5 Paige, 79

II. But this is properly recognizable at law.

Boundaries.—Story on this subject, says: This jurisdiction is one which has been watched with a good deal of jealousy of late years, and there seems no inclination to favor it, unless special grounds are laid to sustain it. The general rule now adopted is not to entertain jurisdiction in cases of confusion of boundaries, upon the ground that the boundaries are in controversy, but to require that there should be some equity superinduced by the act of the parties. 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 615-619.

In the case of the Duke of Leeds vs. Earl of Strafford, the court said, "the bill assumes that the plaintiff knows that these are copyhold lands, but does not know the boundaries, it is the duty of the tenant to keep the boundaries that is the foundation of the bill." Duke of Leeds vs. Earl of Strafford, 4 Vesey, 181.

In Gierson vs. Eyre, the court said, "in all cases upon this head, the court has gone upon this, that the defendant 222 or those under whom he claims, had a duty imposed upon him to keep the subjects distinct. But if there was no such duty, I do not know that any relief could be given." Gierson vs. Eyre, 9 Vesey, 345.

The same point was decided in Speer vs. Crawter, 17 Vesey, 216; Atty. General vs. Fullerton, 2 Ves. & Beames, 263; Loker vs. Rolle, 3 Vesey, 4-6; Metcalf vs. Beckwith, 2 P. Will., 376; St. Luke's vs. St. Leonard's, 1 Brown Ch. Rep., 40; Borwene vs. Prentice, 1 Brown Ch. Rep., 200.

2. It will be answered that this bill avoids a multiplicity of suits; the same may be said of every multifarious bill, and the more multifarious the greater multiplicity of suits is thereby avoided.

In the Mayor of York vs. Pilkington et al., the court allowed a bill on the ground that it would avoid a multiplicity of suits. That case goes further than any before or since, and has been made the subject of animadversion by other Chancellors, and in some of the cases cited, has been substantially overruled. Even in that case, the Chancellor said: "Now it is a rule that a man should not come into a Court of Equity to establish a legal right, unless he has established his title at law, if he can," and he cites two cases where parties in possession brought their bills to be quieted in possession, without first recovering at law, which bills were allowed, "otherwise," says the Chancellor, "if they had been interrupted and dispossessed, for then they had their remedy at law." Mayor of York vs. Pilkington, 1 Atk., 283.

3. But here no multiplicity of suits is to be apprehended; there are but two titles, Hart's and Doggett's, one ejectment may be brought for the whole land in dispute.

Ejectment may be brought against several defendants claiming under different titles, who may defend under their respective titles. White vs. Pickering, 12 S. & R., 435, 223 cited in 2 U. S. Dig., 130, § 253.

Several defendants may be joined in one suit in ejectment, where the plaintiff's title in relation to all is the same, although their possession may be several and not joint. Each defendant may be found guilty separately, for the part of the premises in his possession, and the plaintiffs have judgment against them separately. Jackson vs. Andrews, 7 Wend., 152, cited in 5 U. S. Dig., 131, §287.

Ejectment against several persons occupying different rooms in plaintiff's house is not misjoinder of defendants; each may plead severally as to the room which he occupies and disclaim as to the residue. Marshall vs. Wood, 5 Verm., 250, cited in 2 U. S. Dig., 131, §288.

A plaintiff in an action of ejectment brought against eleven persons in possession of different portions of the premises claimed, holding by separate titles, though all derived from the same source, but without any community of interest, will be compelled on application of the defendants, to enter into a separate consent rule with each. Porter vs. Scoville, 5 Wend., 96, cited in 2 U. S. Dig., 132, § 331.

See also Adams on ejectment, 237, and notes.

4. The intervention of a trustee does not change the case.

In Motteux vs. London Assurance Co., Hardwick, Chancellor, said, "two reasons have been assigned by the plaintiff for coming into this court, first, that the insurance is in the name of a trustee; if the trustee had refused the cestui que trust the use of his name in an action at law, there might have been some pretence, but upon this general ground of a trust, I should at this rate determine all policies without giving the company a chance of a trial." 1 Atk., 547.

See also Mitford Ch. Pl., 125.

In Hopkins vs. Ward, it was decreed that "a cestui que 224 trust may after the purposes of the deed have been satisfied, maintain ejectment in his own name, although the legal estate is in the trustee." Hopkins vs. Ward, 6 Munf., 38, cited in 2 U. S. Dig., 129, § 234.

III. But there is no equity in this bill.

Upon its face, the bill shows one continuous exercise of jurisdiction by defendant Hart, over all the disputed lands, commencing on 26th July, 1826, and continuing to the present day, although on 4th May, 1836, Hart, for the first time, acquired title to the lands now owned by complainant.

The bill then shows that every successive owner of the Masters grant has acquiesced in the boundary as claimed by Hart. Complainant is now estopped from asserting it to be otherwise.

Where a person has stood by and saw a great and costly improvement made upon lands by persons claiming title and interposed no claim or pretensions of title for thirteen years, held that he was thereby estopped. Higginbotham vs. Barnett, 5 John. Ch., 184; Stors vs. Buck, 6 John. C. R., 166.

Declarations made by a person in possession of real estate as to his interest or title to the same, may be given in evidence against those who have subsequently derived title from him. Padgett vs. Lawrence et al., 10 Paige, 170.

ANDERSON, C. J.:

This is an appeal from the Circuit Court for Duval County, sitting in Chancery. The appellant filed in that court her bill against the appellees, praying that the respondents might be decreed to deliver up to her the possession of certain real estate lying in the town of Jacksonville, and for other relief.

Doggett vs. Hart and others—Opinion of Court.

225 We propose to consider whether the complainant applied to the proper tribunal for the recovery of her alleged rights, and the conclusion to which we shall come upon this inquiry will render unnecessary the further examination of the imputed defects and errors in her bill.

"Has the complainant, then," to use the words of the demurrer which was filed by the respondents, "by her bill made such a case as entitles her to any relief against the defendant in a Court of Equity?"

There are three several grounds on which the complainant rests her claim to come into a Court of Equity.

First, That she had no relief at law, in consequence of her interest in the lands in question, being only an equitable interest;

Second, That it was necessary to come into Equity, in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits; and Third, That she had a right to claim the aid of a Court of Equity on account of a confusion of boundaries, which confusion involved the title to the disputed lands.

We shall consider these grounds in the order here persented, with the facts connected with it as we find them in the record.

Mrs. Doggett's interest in the land is derived from a deed executed by I. D. Hart, one of the defendants. By this deed Hart conveyed certain lands, which it is not necessary to our present purpose to describe, to one William J. Mills, "in trust, for the exclusive use and benefit of Maria "Doggett, wife of John L. Doggett, free from all or any "claim or claims of said John L. Doggett, or any other per-"son or persons claiming in or through or by him, for the "sole use of the said Maria, free from all claims or de-"mands of the said John L. Doggett." The boundaries of the land conveyed in this deed are claimed to embrace the lands sued for. The bill shows that John L. Doggett died 226 in 1844, before the commencement of the present suit. It also charges that Mills, the trustee, has neglected and abused his trust by confederating with Hart to deprive the complainant of a large portion of the land conveyed in the deed.

The bill alleges that Hart continues to hold much of this land, and has sold other portions and received payment for the same, and other of the defendants are in possession of portions of the land. From this statement, it appears that Mrs. Doggett's title is that of a cestui que trust under the deed from Hart, and it is obvious that she relies chiefly upon this as her warrant for coming into Equity to enforce her possessory rights. If in her character as developed by the statements of the bill, she could go into a Court of Law, and find there a full and adequate remedy, for her alleged injuries, the door of an Equity Court would be denied to her. Let us inquire into her capacity to sue in a Court of Law.

The general rule doubtless is, that to enable a claimant to support an action of ejectment in a Court of Law, he must be clothed with the legal title to the lands, (Adams on Ejectment, 32,) but the necessity of having exceptions to these general rules, upon the principle of adaptation which is essential to their utility as instruments for administering justice, has prompted the Law Courts to relax this rule in regard to the class of persons to whom the complainant belongs. A cestui que trust, after the purposes of the deed have been satisfied, may maintain ejectment, upon a demise in his own name, although the legal estate is still in the Trustee. Hopkins & Watkins vs. Ward and others, 6 Munford's Reports, 38. Now in this case, the deed of trust was designed, and it is so expressed on its face, to give an absolute property to Mrs. Doggett, free from all claims or demands of her husband, John Doggett. The husband having died several years since, the 227 purposes of the deed in vesting the legal title in a Trustee, have been satisfied, and the cestui may therefore properly sue in ejectment.

In the case of the Town of North Hempstead vs. the Town of Hempstead, (2 Wend. Rep., 109, 134,) it was adjudged by the Court for the correction of Errors, that cestuis que trust, in the case of a resulting trust, may maintain or defend ejectment for the lands which constitute the trust property. Mrs. Doggett alleges in her bill that the consideration money in the trust deed was fully paid by herself; she is therefore entitled to all the benefits allowed in the case just cited to the cestuis que trust of a resulting trust, besides her peculiar privilege as a cestui of a satisfied trust.

These reasonable relaxations of the rule that a legal title can alone prevail in ejectment, seem to be founded upon a presumption in the accepted cases that there has been a conveyance of the legal estate. It is upon this ground that the court in the case of Jackson ex dem. Smith et al. vs. Pierce, 2 J. R., 226, puts the allowance, and we find also that this is the ground upon which Adams in his Treatise on the action of Ejectment, places it. "To obviate," he says, "the inconveniences, which may at times arise, when an ejectment is brought by a cestui que trust, from the operation of the salutary maxim that the legal estate must prevail, as affecting his situation with his Trustees, the jury will in particular cases be permitted to presume that a regular surrender has been made by the Trustees of their estate, thereby clothing the cestui que trust with the legal title, and enabling him to recover in the action. Thus a surrender will be presumed, if the purposes of the trust estate have been so satisfied; or if the beneficial occupation of the estate by the possessors induces a supposition that a conveyance of the legal estate has been made to the 228 party beneficially interested, in whom the trust is a plain one, and a Court of Equity will compel the Trustees to make a conveyance." Tillinghast Adams, 87.

Mrs. Doggett's case belongs to all three of the classes of cases here enumerated, as those in which the presumption of a legal title may be indulged. The trust has been satisfied, inasmuch as her husband, from whose claims and demands the trust was designated to protect the estate, is dead. She is in the beneficial occupation of at least a portion of the estate, for in the charge of confederacy against Hart and her Trustees, she charges that they had conspired to deprive her of the use and benefit of a large portion of the land conveyed in trust, and the trust is so plain a one that a Court of Equity would not hesitate to compel the Trustee to make her a conveyance, upon proof of her allegation as to the death of her husband.

Besides these general considerations, which indicate clearly that Mrs. Doggett would have been admitted into a Court of Law to try and establish the possessory rights claimed by her, it is further apparent upon the face of the bill that it is demurrable for her failure to allege that her Trustee had refused the use of his name in an action at law. This allegation is necessary even to set up a pretence for coming into equity, to use the language of Lord Hardwick in the case of Motteux vs. the London Assurance Company, reported in 1 Atkins, 545.

But it is claimed, in the second place, that the complainant had a right to the aid of a Court of Chancery in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits. It is very clear that the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity cannot be invoked simply on the ground that the party seeking its interposition has a multitude of suits to bring, whether they be against defendants in suits of ejectment or in other actions.

Doggett vs. Hart and others—Opinion of Court.

229 If it were so, all the barriers between Courts of Law or Equity would be broken down in favor of the litigious, and the Equity Courts be overwhelmed with the consideration and adjudication of matters altogether foreign to their peculiar principles and rules of jurisprudence. A merchant in extensive business might bring in all his debtors to answer to a single monster bill, upon the same principle that a plaintiff in ejectment might bring his complaint into a Court of Equity, because there was more than a single trespasser upon the premises which he sought to recover.

In the case of Mayor of York vs. Pilkington and others, reported in 1 Atkins, 282, a precedent beyond which the courts have never gone, there was a bill filed to quiet the plaintiff, who was in possession in a right of fishing against a number of defendants claiming several rights. This possession, or at least the establishment of the right of possession in an action at law, appears to be an indispensable pre-requisite to the interposition of a Court of Chancery. "The bills filed under these circumstances are bills of peace, and are designed to call upon the Equity Courts to extend their protection over parties who are in possession under the sanction of the Courts of Law." In the case last referred to, Lord Hardwicke says: "It is a general rule that a man shall not come into a Court of Equity to establish a legal right until he has tried his title at law, if he can."

So Lord Redesdale says, in Mitford's Equity Pl., 145-146, "In most cases, it is held, that the plaintiff ought to establish his right by a determination of a Court of Law in his favor before he files his bill in equity, and if he has not done so, and the right he claims has not the sanction of long possession, and he has any means of trying the matter at law, a demurrer will hold." The expressions 230 which qualify the expression here used by Lord Redesdale, that this doctrine is held in most cases, do not any of them embrace the case of Mrs. Doggett, and are in fact almost exclusively confined to cases of possession where the party has had no opportunity of trying his right at law.

Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries upon Equity Jurisprudence, in enumerating the various subjects of equity jurisdiction, no where sanctions the bringing of a suit in that court upon the naked allegation that a bill there would avoid a multiplicity of suits in a Court of Law. Where a suitor seeks the aid of Chancery for the purposes of discovery, the court will then, having possession of the case, proceed to adjust the relative rights of the parties in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits which might result from sending them back to a Court of Law.

So in cases of accounts, of agency, of apportionment, of general average, of contribution, of waste and of partnership, where Chancery once entertains a suit upon grounds legitimately cognizable in that court, it will proceed to adjudicate other matters of which it has only incidental cognizance, in order to avoid multiplicity of suits. The cases we have enumerated embrace most of those which induce a Chancery Court to step out of its peculiar domain to intrude upon the province of a Law Court to prevent oppression and expensive litigation. In these, as well as in others which we have not enumerated, it will be found that this species of jurisdiction is consequential rather than original, and is exercised chiefly in regard to matters springing out of subjects belonging appropriately to its own jurisdiction. One of the earlier Chancellors (Lord Nottingham,) betrays by the language in which he claims the jurisdiction, that it may be traced in some degree to the ancient jealousy between the two courts, as well as to the more becoming desire of suppressing useless litigation. "When," said his Lordship, "this court can determine the 231 matter, it shall not be a handmaid to the other courts, nor beget a suit to be ended elsewhere." 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 65.

Mrs. Doggett's case does not belong to this class, for she is not before a Court of Chancery for any purpose belonging properly to its jurisdiction, so as to entitle her to an incidental inquiry into her rights of possession to the land she claims, nor for the reasons which we have already given, can her bill be considered in the nature of a bill of peace. She is therefore not entitled to the aid of a Court of Chancery upon this ground.

Third. We will inquire thirdly, whether she is entitled to its aid because one of the subjects of concurrent jurisdiction belonging to the Chancery Courts arises from the confusion of the boundaries of land. We will first examine the facts as set forth in the bill upon which this alleged confusion of boundaries rests.

The defendant, Hart, is alleged to be rightfully possessed of a grant of land on the St. John's river, known as the "Maria Taylor" grant, bounded and described as follows: "Beginning at a gum tree at the mouth of McCoy's Creek, and running thence north forty chains, to a pine tree, thence east fifty chains, to a pine tree, thence south forty chains to an oak tree on the bank of the said St. John's river, and thence along the river westwardly to the place of beginning."

The deed of trust under which Mrs. Doggett claims, conveys to her trustee "a certain tract of land situated in Jacksonville and bounded as follows: On the south, by St. John's River, on the north and east by Hogan's Creek and on the west by lands granted to the heirs of Purnel Taylor, and now owned by I. D. Hart, which land described as above was formerly granted by the Spanish Government to John Masters." The grant thus referred to is 232 described in the bill and exhibits, as bounded on the west by the aforesaid "Maria Taylor" grant, on the north and east by Hogan's Creek, and on the south by St. John's river.

It thus appears from the bill, that the two tracts abut upon each other, and that the controversy is as to the locality of the co-terminous boundary line. The bill alleges that Hart continued to hold possession of the disputed land after the execution of the trust deed by the connivance of the trustee.

It is to settle this boundary and to restore to complainant the possession of the land which she alleges to be wrongfully withheld from her, that he asks the aid of a Court of Equity.

Treating of the subject of boundaries, Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries, says, "whatever may have been the origin of this branch of jurisdiction, it is one which has been watched with a good deal of jealousy by Courts of Equity of late years; and there seems to be no inclination to favor it, unless special grounds are laid to sustain it. The general rule now adopted, is not to entertain jurisdiction in cases of confusion of boundaries, upon the ground that the boundaries are in controversy, but to require that there should be some equity superinduced by the act of the parties, such as some particular circumstances of fraud, or some confusion where one has ploughed too near another, or some gross negligence, omission or misconduct on the part of persons whose special duty it is to preserve or perpetuate the boundaries." I Story's Com., § 615.

None of these equities belong to the case before us.

Again, "when there is an ordinary legal remedy," continues the Commissioner, "there is certainly no ground for the interference of Courts of Equity, unless some peculiar 233 equity supervenes which a Court of Common Law cannot take notice of or protect. §616.

In this case we see no obstacle to the exercise of an ordinary legal remedy, nor do we recognize any peculiar equity which a Court of Common Law cannot protect.

Again, "the existence of a controverted boundary by no means constitutes a sufficient ground for the interposition of Courts of Equity. Between independent proprietors, such cases would be left to the proper redress at law." §619.

These principles are fully sustained by the case of Wake Conyers; indeed the language of the Commentator is the same as that of the Lord Keeper Henly who decided the case, 2 Wh. & Tud., 509.

In St. Lukes vs. St. Leonards, referred to in the same book, at page 512, a bill was filed by the Parish of St. Lukes to avoid confusion in making their rates, and prayed a Commissioner to fix their boundaries for that purpose. Lord Thurlow refused to interfere. In a note to this case, rd Thurlow is reported to have said that if he should entertain a bill and direct an issue in such a case as this, he did not see what case would be peculiar to the courts of law. In the case of Spear vs. Crawter, 2 Mer. 417, Sir W. Grant, M. R., refused to issue a commission to ascertain the boundaries of manors, upon the authority of the two cases just referred to. Such has been the uniform ruling of the courts, and as there is nothing in the case before us upon which an equity can be based, we must dismiss the complainant to look for her proper remedy in a court of law.

Having thus fully considered the right of the appellant to come into a Court of Equity at all, and decided adversely to the right, we find it unnecessary to discuss the matters of demurrer set forth by the defendants 234 The decree of the Chancellor to dismiss the bill must be affirmed.

AMAZIAH W. ARCHER, APPELLANT, VS. ISAIAH D. HART AND JOHN S. SAMMIS, APPELLEES.

1. If a party in a cause depending enters into a bond to perform the decree or abide the judgment of the court, it is intended to mean the court which ultimately decides the cause.

2. An appeal is matter of right, if entered during the term of the court at which the judgment is pronounced, or within ten days thereafter, and such appeal, when entered, suspends the judgment, sentence and decree appealed from; and if reversed, it is as if it had never existed.

3. Where a decree in equity was in favor of a defendant, and the bond which he had given to perform the decree of the court, was directed to be cancelled, on an appeal from so much of the decree as related to the principal matter, if the same be reversed, that portion of the decree directing the cancellation of the bond is also reversed; it is also accessory to the decree appealed from, followed it, and shared its fate.

4. A voluntary bond is valid as a common law contract, if it is entered into by competent parties, and for a purpose not prohibited by law, and is founded upon a sufficient consideration.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of Duval county.

This was an action of debt on bond executed by appellees, by which, after reciting "that whereas, the said Amaziah W. Archer and others have heretofore filed their petition before the Hon. Thomas Douglas, Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eastern Circuit of the State of Florida, and thereupon obtained an order to the Sheriff of Duval county, and caused to be arrested sundry persons of color, to wit: a boy called Dennis Bryan, also a girl called Mary Bryan, said colored persons and others being alleged in said petition to be slaves and the property of the said pe- 235

titioners; and whereas, the above named Dennis Bryan and Mary Bryan are now in the custody of the Sheriff of Duval county, and claim to be free persons of color, and ask to be discharged from the custody of the said Sheriff, (on bail as per written agreement between the attorneys of the parties petitioners and defendants,") it was conditioned that "if the said Dennis Bryan and Mary should appear before the said Judge of the Circuit Court, from time to time as may be required, and abide the decision of the issue upon the said petition as well as the further order of the court, then and in that case the bond or obligation to be null and void, otherwise to remain in full force and virtue." The declaration alleges that Dennis, one of the persons of color above named, who had been declared to be a slave and the property of plaintiff, did not appear and abide the decision and order of the court, as required by the condition of the said bond, but that he disappeared before the final determination of the cause, and was not then to be found.

The appellees, (the defendants in the court below,) pleaded, 1st. That they had faithfully performed and complied with the condition of their said bond, and that Dennis did appear before the Circuit Court and abide its decision and order, until, by the sentence and decree of said court, he was discharged from custody and dismissed without day. 2d. That the bond in question was ordered to be discharged and cancelled by the decree of the Circuit Court, and so much of said decree as directed the bond to be discharged and cancelled still remained in full force unreserved, no appeal having been prayed or prosecuted from the same.

The facts in the cause will appear in the following agreement of the parties:

It is agreed that this cause shall be argued as if upon is- 236 sue joined, the following special verdict had been duly entered, and the court shall proceed to pronounce such judgment nunc pro tunc, as if the said verdict had been duly entered and argued at the last fall term of this court, and either party may take an appeal or writ of error to the next ensuing term of the Supreme Court:

"We, the jury, find the slave Dennis to be of the value of nine hundred dollars, that upon the twenty-first day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty, one of the said plaintiffs filed a petition before the Honorable Thomas Douglas, Judge of the Circuit Court for the Eastern Circuit of Florida, praying that the said slave Dennis, together with other slaves, formerly the property of Jacob van, deceased, should be taken into custody by the sheriff of Duval county as having been manumitted contrary to the provisions of the Act of November 22, 1829; that afterwards, to wit, on the following day, an order was issued directed to the said sheriff, commanding him to take the said slaves into his custody, and them safely to retain until the further order of said court.

"That such further proceedings were had upon the said petition, that afterwards, to wit, at the May term of 1852, of the said Circuit Court, the following order was entered: 'Now on this day came the said petitioners, by James W. Bryant and John P. Sanderson, Esquires, their solicitors, and the said Dennis Bryan, and Mary Bryan, being again brought into court by the sheriff aforesaid, and Samuel Spencer, J. McRobert Baker, P. Fraser and Felix Livingston, appearing to oppose in this behalf upon the issue liber vel non, raised by their plea heretofore put in, were permitted by the court to do so, and the solicitors of the respective parties having entered into a stipulation in writing, that the said Dennis and the said Mary claimed as 237 slaves as aforesaid, may be discharged from the custody of the sheriff, on condition that a bond in the penal sum of four thousand dollars, payable to the petitioners, be filed, conditioned that the said Denis and the said Mary appear before the Circuit Court from time to time as may be required by the court, to abide the decision of the issue in this cause, and the further order of the court. And it is further stipulated that the said bond may be given and received without prejudice to either party as to the question at issue, and that no advantage shall be taken by either party of any informality in this agreement, nor in the said bond to be given by said defendants, but the same will be enforced according to the true intent and meaning of the same as understood between the counsel for the parties, which is done, and said bond being duly filed, it is ordered accordingly. And on motion of the said petitioners, by their said solicitors, it is further ordered, that the issue of liber vel non, raised by the plea of the said Dennis Bryan and Mary Bryan to the said petition be tried by a jury upon the Common Law side of this court, at the next term, according to the rules and principles governing the trial of issues in Common Law cases, and that the testimony be taken in the same manner as testimony is allowed by the law to be taken in Common Law cases."

"That afterwards, and upon the same day, the writing obligatory which is the subject matter of this suit, was duly executed and filed. That afterwards, such further proceedings were had upon the said petition, that upon the 26th day of November, A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty-one the following final sentence or decree was pronounced in the Circuit Court for the county of Duval, viz: 'Now on this day this cause came on to be heard upon the issue liber vel non, joined between the parties, and a statement of facts herein filed and argued upon between the 238 parties and by their counsel, and the said parties having waived a jury, and after argument by counsel and due deliberation by the court, it is thereupon ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the said Dennis and the said Mary, in the said petition mentioned, are free persons of color and not slaves, and that the said Dennis and Mary be forthwith discharged out of custody, and that the bond heretofore given for their appearance in this cause, and executed by Isaiah D. Hart and John S. Sammis, be discharged and cancelled; and it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said Sarah mentioned in the said petition, is a slave and not free, and that the said Sarah be sold by the sheriff of this county at public outcry, after due notice of the time and place of sale, and at the time and place and in the manner of sales under executions at law. And that the said sheriff pay the proceeds of said sale forthwith into the Registry of this court, to abide the further order of this court in the premises.'

"That afterwards, to-wit, on the first day of December following, being within the ten days allowed by law, the following agreement and prayer for appeal were duly filed with the clerk of the Circuit Court for said county of Duval, viz: This agreement witnesseth, that in the case of Amaziah W. Archer, et al., against certain persons of color named Sarah Bryan, Dennis Bryan, and Mary Bryan, it is agreed by the undersigned, as attorneys for both parties, that in the appeals about to be taken by either party from the decision of the Circuit Court, made Nov. term, 1851, in said case, that the appeal bonds to be given by both parties shall be made payable to the Governor of Florida and his successors in office, for the use of such persons as may be interested, therein, and that neither party shall take exception to the same upon that ground, but they shall be deemed a compliance with the statute in such case provided, and that the costs heretofore accrued 239 shall be equally divided between the parties. Entered into this the 27th November, 1851.

"The bond having been duly filed in said cause, the solicitors for petitioners pray an appeal as to so much of the decree in said cause as declares said persons of color, Dennis and Mary, free.

"It is agreed by and between the undersigned solicitors in said cause that the foregoing prayer for an appeal be filed as of the first day of December, A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty-one, nunc pro tunc.

"And afterwards, upon the same first day of December, D. 1851, all the costs were paid, and an appeal bond was filed by the said Amaziah W. Archer, payable to the Governor of the State of Florida, and conditioned for the diligent prosecution of the said appeal, and the payment of all costs which might be adjudged against him in such appeal.

"And afterwards, at the February Term of 1852, of the said Supreme Court for the State of Florida, such proceedings were had upon the said appeal that the said Supreme Court reversed the decision of the court below, in so far as it declared the said negroes, Dennis and Mary, to be free, and proceedings to render such judgment and decree as the Court below ought to have rendered, did 'further order, adjudge and decree that the respondents, Dennis 240 and Mary, have not sustained the issue of liber vel non made in the court below, and are slaves for life, and the property of the appellants, and that they, the said Dennis and Mary, be delivered up to the custody of the appellants. And it is further ordered, that the appellants pay the costs of these proceedings, and that the cause be remitted to the court below, with instructions to execute the decree of this court in the premises.'

"And we, the jury, further find that several days after the rendition of the said decree of the Supreme Court at its February Term, the said slave, Dennis, absconded, and never been delivered to said appellants, although a demand was duly made upon said defendants for the delivery of said slaves, on the day of the rendition of said last decree; and forasmuch as the jury are ignorant in point of law, upon the facts of the case, on which side they ought to find the issue, they do agree that if the court should be of opinion that the said plaintiffs are entitled to recover the value of the boy Dennis, and that the condition of the said bond has been broken, then they find for the said plaintiffs the sum of four thousand dollars, to be discharged upon the payment of nine hundred dollars, the value of said boy Dennis, together with one cent for the damages of said plaintiffs, and also their costs in this behalf expended; but if the court should be of opinion that the condition of the said bond has not been broken, and that the said plaintiffs are not entitled to recover, then the jury find for the defendants.

241 The court below rendered judgment in favor of the defendants, from which the plaintiff appealed.

J. P. Sanderson for Appellant.

The questions now submitted by the pleas and special verdict, and presented to the court, are:

I. Whether the conditions of said bond have been performed.

II. Whether the decree of the court, directing the cancellation of said bond operated as a discharge to Hart and Sammis, the obligors; or,

III. Whether the appeal taken did not operate as a supersedeas, as well to the part of the decree cancelling the bond as to the part declaring Dennis and Mary to be free and not slaves; and

IV. Whether said decree, cancelling said bond, has not been reversed by the decree of the Supreme Court at its February Term, 1852, in said cause.

It is the duty of appellant to maintain and prove the affirmative of the third and fourth propositions and the negative of the first and second.

The statute, Thomp. Dig., 446, regulating appeals, provides, "That if any party feels aggrieved by a final judgment or decree, it shall and may be lawful for such party during the session of the court in which such judgment or decree shall be pronounced or within ten days thereafter, to obtain an appeal to the Supreme Court, and an appeal obtained shall in all cases operate as a supersedeas."

The appeal was obtained within the ten days prescribed by statute, bond filed, and costs paid. There is no pretence that the appeal was not regularly taken, and operated as a supersedeas to the part of the decree declaring "Dennis and Mary to be free and not slaves," and I presume it will be conceded that the appeal suspended that part 242 of the decree. But it will be contended by counsel for defendants that the order of the court directing the cancellation of the bond was not appealed from, and still remains of force, and that defendants were discharged from said bond by said decree, for such is the issue tendered by defendant's second plea.

Upon these two grounds the defendant's counsel have rested their defence.

I. Have the conditions of the bond been performed?

The conditions are as follows: "Now, if the said Dennis Bryan and Mary Bryan shall appear before the said Judge of the Circuit Court from time to time as may be required, and abide the decision of the issue upon the said petition, as well as the further order of the court, then and in that case this bond or obligation to be void, or else to remain in full force, virtue and effect."

The principal condition of this bond is, that the said Dennis and Mary shall abide the decision of the issue upon the petition, and must mean the final decision on that issue. Have they performed that condition? The issue was finally decided by the Supreme Court at the February Term, 1852, and immediately thereafter demand was duly made for a surrender of said slaves; said slave Dennis had absconded, and the obligors have failed to obey the decision of the issue. The Supreme Court proceeding to render such judgment and decree as the court below ought to have rendered, "did further order, adjudge, and decree that the respondents, Dennis and Mary, have not sustained the issue of liber vel non made in the court below, and are slaves for life, and the property of the appellants, and that they, the said Dennis and Mary, be delivered up to the custody of the appellants."

The slave Dennis has not been delivered up as ordered and directed by said decree, and the condition of the bond in this respect has been broken, and the plaintiffs are en- 243 titled to recover: and the condition of the bond has not been performed in this—he, Dennis, did not abide the further order of the court below. The order and decree discharging and cancelling the bond, was not the further order of the court. The further order of the court was the order allowing the appeal. The allowance of the appeal, though taken by the parties, when taken under the statute becomes an order of the court, and suspends the whole decree. Therefore the obligors did not comply with this condition of the bond. The bond was given to abide the decision of the issue, and the further order of the court: the last order of the court was the appeal, which transferred the cause to this court, and with it the bond as an incident to the issue.

The taking, the dismissal or withdrawal of an appeal is a judgment of the court. Harder et al. vs. Stoval, 1 Kelly, 95, Index 359; Ball vs. Gardner, 21 Wend. 166, 1 N. Y. Dig., 326, § 8.

The term "court," uesd in the condition of the bond, has been held to mean the "court" which shall ultimately decide the cause. U. S. vs. Schr. Little Charles, 1 Brock., 380.

II. Did the decree of the court directing the discharge and cancellation of said bond, operate as a discharge to Hart and Sammiss, the obligors, or did the appeal taken operate as a supersedeas as well to the part of the decree cancelling the bond as the part declaring Dennis and Mary free and not slaves?

I. The order, judgment, and decree of the court below discharged Dennis from custody and cancelling the bond, were uttered by the court in one and the same breath, and together constitute but the judgment pronounced upon the issue joined. If no appeal had been taken, the bond was cancelled and discharged by the judgment and decree de- 244 claring Dennis free, and not a slave, and no order cancelling said bond was necessary. That part of the decree is, therefore, mere surplusage, unnecessary, and void.

"A void judgment, quashing a forth-coming bond, may be wholly disregarded." Fellows vs. Griffin, 9 S. & M. U. S. Dig. 1848, 58, § 80.

If this view of the case be correct, it follows that Hart and Sammis were not discharged by said decree.

The appeal operated as a supersedeas to the entire decree. The prayer for an appeal is as follows: "The bond having been duly filed in said cause, the solicitors for petitioners pray an appeal as to so much of the decree in said cause as declares said persons of color, Dennis and Mary, free." This appeal carried up the whole case. This was a proceeding on the Chancery side of the court, and as the Appellate Court is by law directed to proceed to render such decree or judgment as, upon the whole case, the court below ought to have done, the whole cause before the court below was carried up, and open to review. The decree and mandate of this court in the cause, not only reversed the decree, but directed the slaves to be delivered up to the custody of the plaintiffs.

A court of review gives up such a decree as the court below ought to have done; and when the plaintiff below brings the appeal, the court above not only refuses what is wrong, but decrees what is right, and models the relief according to its own view of the ends of justice and the exigencies of the case. Gelston vs. Codwise, 1 J. C. R., 182.

And on an appeal from Chancery, the decree and order of the court of errors becomes, to the court below, the law of the case, and the party can have no further relief then, than what is administered by the decree of the court above." Ibid.; 2 Fla. R., 276; 4 Fla. R., 357.

The appeal then carried up not only the issue joined, but the whole cause, and especially the bond, which was coupled with and dependent upon that issue, for the appeal opens the whole cause, though taken from a part only, and suspends the whole judgment of the court below. Colby's Prac., 306; 3 Bouvier Ind., 70; Allison vs. Chaffin, 8 Ga., 330, cited Index 40, § 12.

An appeal, from the moment it is made, suspends the execution of the decree; and if taken within the time presented by statute has relation back to the day of the rendition of decree. Penhallow vs. Doan, Adm'r., 3 Dall., 89, 99, 1 Arch. Prac., 241; Colby's Prac., 306; Stewart vs. Preston, 1 Fla. R., 8.

The appeal operates from time of motion, and the filing of the bond will have relation back and bind the parties from the time of notice. 1 Arch. Prac., 241; Hawkins vs. Jones, 1 E. C. L. R., 111; 2 Strange, 867, 1186; Edward's Treatise, 148, n.; Salk., 321, Perkins vs. Woolaston.

The 4th assignment of error, alleges error in deciding that the bond was a creation of the court.

The bond was made and executed by agreement of the parties to the bond, as will appear by the facts contained in the special verdict—no agreement was made with Dennis—he is no party to the bond—he was treated as a slave—and entered into for his benefit by Hart and Sammis. It was an act of plaintiffs and defendants, the obligors, and they only had power to cancel the contract, and this court is called upon to enforce the agreement.

This bond violated no public policy or private morality, but was appropriate to the execution of the laws and a proper adjustment of the rights of the parties in the cause. Had the original suit been commenced by an attachment 246 and this suit brought to recover on an attachment bond, would this court have doubted but that the bond, in the event of an appeal, would hold good and abide the decision in the Appellate Court? Or, suppose suit had been commenced by attachment, and Dennis taken into custody under levy of the writ of attachment, and the obligors had come forward and entered into bond precisely under the conditions of this bond, and the court below had rendered judgment for the defendant, or, as in this case, directed a surrender of the property, and a cancellation of the bond, and an appeal had been duly taken by the plaintiffs, I ask if this court would doubt for a moment but that the appeal would suspend the judgment and carry with it the bond given for the forthcoming of the property? It must of necessity operate in this manner, for the plaintiffs in attachment, after judgment against them, could not direct a new levy and hold the property to respond to a final decree in the court above in their favor. If the contrary is held, he would be without remedy—the property in the meantime might be removed from the State and the attachment law would be to him a dead letter upon the statute book. Stephens vs. Baird, 9 Conn., 274, cited N. Y. Dig., 64.

This was a bond voluntarily entered into by the obligors, and binding upon them—a bond valuntarily given, and though not prescribed by law, is a valid instrument upon the parties in point of law. U. S. vs. Tingry, 5 Peter's, 115; U. S. vs. Bradly, 10 Peter's, 343, cited Peter's Dig.; Franklin vs. Pendleton, 3 Sand. S. Ct., 572; U. S. D., 11, 78, §39; 1 Brock., 383.

rality, which is appropriate to the execution of law, is valid, and may be entered into and recovery had thereon, though there be no statute expressly authorizing the execution of such bond. The Governor vs. Allen, Kin. Law Com., 1850, §51.

It is objected that there has been no proceedings in the court below to carry into execution the mandate of the court above. This comes too late, after plea, &c. Lee vs. Moore, 12 Miss., 458, U. S. D., 11-79, 50: 1. N. Y. D., 328, §37-38.

THOMPSON, J.:

In a controversy which arose in the Circuit Court sitting in Duval County in relation to the slavery or freedom of certain negroes, an issue was directed to be made up and tried at a succeeding term of the court; and in the meantime, by consent of the claimants, of whom the present appellant was one, two of the persons so claimed to be slaves for life, and then in custody, were delivered to the respondents upon their entering into bond in the penalty of four thousand dollars, payable to the appellant by name, with the addition of the terms "and others," conditioned that Dennis and Mary, (the persons who were claimed to be slaves, and were asserting their freedom,) should appear before the Judge of the Circuit Court from time to time as 250 may be required, and abide the decision of the issue upon the petition, as well as the further order of the court. The issue so made up, was determined in favor of Dennis and Mary in the Circuit Court; they were declared to be free, and the bond entered into by the respondents was ordered to be cancelled. From this judgment of the Circuit Court an appeal was prayed by the claimants to this court, from so much of the judgment of the Circuit Court in said case as declared said persons of color, Dennis and Mary, to be free; which appeal was allowed and perfected within the term of ten days prescribed by law.

In this court, the portion of the decree appealed from was reversed and set aside, and proceeding to give such decree as the Circuit Court should have given in this particular, this court declared that the said Dennis and Mary were slaves for life, and the property of the claimants, and ordered that they should be delivered up to the custody of said claimants. Soon after the decree was reversed in this court, demand was made upon the respondents for the slave Dennis, but the demand was not complied with; and it further appears, that at or about this time he absconded, and has not since been arrested.

Suit was brought upon the bond by the present appellant, whose name only appears on the face of the instrument as the obligee thereof, aginst the respondents, who are the obligors, assigning as a breach that the said Dennis did not appear from time to time, &c., and did not abide the decision of the issue upon the petition, as well as the further order of the Circuit Court, but on the contrary absconded, &c. By the subsequent pleading, the defence is made to rest upon two grounds:

1st. That Dennis was only to appear before the Circuit Court, that he did so appear, and was discharged without day by the decree of said court of the 26th of Nov., 1851.

And 2dly, That by the decree of the Circuit Court, the 251 bond in question was ordered to be discharged and cancelled, that such portion of the decree was not appealed from, and remains in full force and unreversed.

Upon a special verdict finding the facts which are above briefly stated, the Circuit Court gave judgment for defendants; the principal ground of error assigned is, that the court erred therein, and that the judgment should have been for the plaintiff.

In the decision of this case, we do not deem it material or necessary to consider in their order the numerous points made and discussed at the bar upon the argument, because the grounds upon which we put our judgment herein will be found to have met and included all the positions taken by counsel which were open to discussion.

The main grounds upon which the respondents rely, in support of the judgment of the court below, are founded on the terms of the condition of the obligation sued upon, and the effect of the appeal prosecuted by the present appellant from the decree of the Circuit Court in the original cause, made and passed on the 26th November, 1851, which declared Dennis and Mary to be free.

It has been argued with much zeal by the counsel for the respondents, that the decree of the Circuit Court alluded to, exhausted the requirements of the bond, that Dennis was only to appear from time to time before the Judge of the Circuit Court, and that when the decree was pronounced in his favor and the bond declared to be discharged and cancelled, every thing was accomplished which the respondents had bound themselves to the performance of. This is certainly a very technical view of the question, even if correct in point of law; but it is most clearly erroneous. In every case where it becomes necessary that any of the parties should enter into a bond for the performance of the decree of the court, the condition provides 252 in terms only that the party shall answer the decree, sentence or judgment of the court in which the cause is depending; no provision is made for the event of a writ of error or appeal, but in such case the law supplies the omission in every case where the writ of error or appeal arrests the execution of the decree, sentence or judgment of the inferior court, and suspends its force and energy until the question is examined in the appellate tribunal. Thus in the case alluded to, a decree had been pronounced upon the equity side of the court, with which the losing party was dissatisfied; assuming that an appeal could be taken from that decree to this court, if it was taken in due time it arrested the execution of the decree, suspended its effect and force as a judgment, and removed the cause to this court by force and operation of law. In such case the law substituted the judgment of this court for that of the Circuit Court, and such rule of law entered into and formed a part of the contract as completely and effectually as if it had been inserted therein in terms.

By the Act of February 11th, 1832, appeal from the equity side of the Circuit Court operates as a supersedeas in two cases:

First When the appeal is entered as in other cases as provided by the general law of February 10, 1832, which is during the term of the court in which the decree is pronounced, or within ten days after adjournment; and, secondly, when, being taken within two years after it is pronounced, a justice of this court shall allow its operation as such, upon giving bond and security as required by law, (Thomp. Dig., 462, 446.) The first named supersedeas is obtained as a matter of right, subject to no condition except that of giving the security required by law; and the other rests in the existence of the sound discretion of the Archer vs. Hart and Sammis—Opinion of Court.

Judge. At law, no execution can issue upon the judgment of the court until after the lapse of ten days from the adjournment of the term, except in a certain special contingency to be made known to the court by affidavit of the plaintiff; consequently the judgments rendered during the term are ineffectual until after the expiration of the time limited; if an appeal is taken within the time, the execution is superseded, and the force of the judgment suspended until the appeal is determined. And so is the rule in equity. By the Act of Nov. 7, 1828, § 28, no decree in equity pronounced by the Judge could be engrossed and signed until after the lapse of thirty days, and not then, if the decree had been appealed from, or a petition for rehearing filed. And it is further declared that no process shall issue on any proceedings be had on any final decree or order, until it had been engrossed and signed as directed, and filed in the clerk's office. (Thomp. Dig., 461.) The effect of the Act of 1828, was to allow thirty days for the unsuccessful party to enter his appeal, during which time the decree pronounced was not effectual, and the appeal if taken within the limitation, operated as a further suspension until the appeal was heard.

The Act of 1832, before cited, restricts the party to ten days, within which to enter his appeal, and this is the only change.

The authorities cited by the counsel for the respondent lay down the rule correctly, but they are inapplicable to the present case. If the execution of the decree had been commenced, the supersedeas would arrest the proceedings at the stage in which they were when the supersedeas was allowed, but the execution of the decree in the case of Dennis and Mary had not yet commenced, and could not by force of law have been begun when the appeal or Archer was taken, he having pursued his remedy within the ten 254 days, and while the decree was inactive. If the party had suffered the time to have passed, and the execution of the decree had been consummated by the discharge of the boy Dennis, and the cancellation of the bond, and he then had prayed an appeal, and obtained an order for a supersedeas, such order would not have retroacted so as to make void what had been done in pursuance of the decree.

In the case of the United States vs. the schooner Little Charles, depending in a District Court of the United States, the vessel, which was under arrest, was released upon a bond to perform the decree of the court. In the District Court the vessel was acquitted, but on appeal the sentence was reversed, and the vessel was condemned by the sentence of the Appellate Court. Then, as in this case, it was contended that the condition of the bond was not broken; that it was to perform the decree of the court, which could only mean the District Court, and by that decree the libel was dismissed. But Chief Justice Marshall said: "This objection must search for other sup-"port than is furnished by the merits of the cause. The "bond was intended to be submitted for the vessel, "and to be acted upon as the vessel would have "been acted upon, had it remained in the power of the "court. I think myself justified, then, by authority and "by reason, in construing the general term 'court,' which "is used in the condition, as meaning the court which "shall ultimately decide the cause." 1 Brock. R., 382-3.

This case is directly in point. Here the boy Dennis was in custody, the bond was entered into to procure his enlargement, the respondents undertaking that he would abide the judgment of the court, and to afford to the claimants as full and perfect a remedy as if the slave had remained in custody. If the slave had remained in custody, no one will pretend to say that he was entitled to claim the execution of the decree until the time had elapsed 255 within which the adverse party was allowed to enter his or their appeal, for the law is explicit that no process shall issue or any proceedings be had on any final decree until it is engrossed and signed as directed, and filed in the clerk's office; and this cannot be done at an earlier day then ten days after the decree is pronounced. Upon what principle, then, is it that the rights of the claimants were charged by the substitution of the bond for the person of the slave? We are not aware of any, and none has been suggested in the argument. If authority be wanting to show the affect of an appeal, it will be found in Packman's case, 6 Co. R. 18, b. In that case it was held that when an appeal is taken from a sentence or decree allowing a probate of a will, or granting letters of administration, if the sentence or decree is reversed, all intermediate acts of the former executor or administrator are ineffectual, because the appeal suspends the former sentence, and on its reversal, it is as if it had never existed; but if it is otherwise, if the probate or administration is revoked upon citation, when the grant was only voidable, for the citation is in the nature of a new suit.

In the case under discussion, the conclusion cannot be avoided that the appeal of Archer and others against Dennis and Mary suspended the decree of November 26, 1851, in the original cause, and that decree, so far as appealed from, having been reversed, it is as if it had never existed, as if it had never been pronounced by the Circuit Court, and its place and stead was substituted by force and operation of law, the decree which was made by this court upon the appeal, and it therefore results that the condition of the bond is broken.

Another point assumed in the argument, and which is said to have formed the ground of decision in the court below is, that the appeal of Archer and others from the 256 decree of the 26th November, 1851, was restricted to that point alone which declares Dennis and Mary to be free persons, and did not therefore embrace the direction that the bond in question shall be discharged and cancelled.

It is undoubtedly true that a party by his appeal may complain of a part of a decree pronounced in a court of Equity, and that while the whole case is open to the respondents under the limitations established by this court in the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company vs. Cole, (4 Fla. R.,) yet so far as the appellant is concerned, the duty of the appellate tribunal is limited to the matters complained of. Is this the case here? A reference to so much of the record of the original suit as is found in the special verdict in this case, will furnish a ready answer. Several persons were, in the original suit, claimed by Archer and others to be slaves, and to be their property. As to Dennis and Mary the claim was not sustained, and the bond, which had been substituted for their persons, was declared to be discharged and cancelled; and this judgment formed the first clause of the decree. Another person was found to be a slave, and so declared by a subsequent clause, with a direction for sale, &c. The appeal, in the terms in which it was prayed, was from "so much of the decree in said cause as declares said persons of color, Dennis and Mary, to be free;" and this, we conceive, carried with it all that portion of the decree which related to Dennis and Mary, and their condition. The direction, in the same clause, as to the cancellation and discharge of the bond, was but the consequence of the declaration that they were free; it was ancillary thereto and dependent upon it, and precisely analagous to the case of an award of process to a complainant to carry out and effectuate the relief awarded by the decree: or to the case where a right in 257 real estate is ascertained by the decree of the court to be in a complainant, and the defendant is decreed to convey in accordance with the title ascertained by the decree.

In all such cases, the process and the conveyance are but accessories to the principal relief, and cannot subsist without it. Why should the bond be cancelled and discharged but because Dennis and Mary were ascertained and declared to be free by the decree? The matter is so plain that any attempt by argument further to elucidate it, would be vain and futile. The direction was but ancillary and accessory to the principal direction, and followed it, and shared its fate. Another position assumed is, that this court had not jurisdiction of the appeal from the decree in the original cause, for two reasons: 1st. Because the proceedings were ex parte, and, 2d, because it was not a final judgment, and therefore, as against these respondents, the decree of this court has no validity.

A very serious question presents itself, whether if this court assumes jurisdiction of and decides an appeal or writ of error, there is any power or authority in this or any other court to review the judgment, and declare the proceedings to be coram non judice and void? We are not disposed at this time to claim that power and authority for this court after the term in which the judgment was pronounced has been closed by adjournment. But it is unnecessary to pass upon this question, for even if this court possessed the power to pronounce its own judgments nullities, and to disregard them, and could do so in favor of parties or privies, the points are not well taken. We know of no prohibition to the jurisdiction of this court, because the proceeding was ex parte. Causes often proceed ex parte, and this court reviews the judgments pronounced therein. In every case where a plaintiff pursues his remedy at law, upon a default, and in equity, upon an 258 order to take a bill pro confesso, the court below proceeds ex parte, and the judgment or decree may be and is reversed in this court. But the proceeding alluded to was not in point of fact ex parte—the persons who were claimed to be slaves asserted their freedom, and the humanity and justice of the law as administered by the courts, allowed them, pro hac vice, the status of free persons to enable them to make that right clear, and to obtain all the benefits to result from that condition if they could establish it, and thus there were both plaintiffs and defendants, the slaves holding the affirmative.

The authorities cited at the bar upon this point relate to the summary jurisdiction of courts, and are inapplicable. As to the other point that the decree was not final, the decision of this court in Bellamy vs. Bellamy, 4 Flor., R., 242, 258, shows that it was final. If the parties had waited until the money arising from the slave directed to be sold, had been distributed under order of the court, they would have been subjected to irreparable injury; the bond would have been cancelled and discharged, and the slaves eloigned before they could have had an opportunity of having the error redressed in this court. The case is clearly within the exception recognized in the decision quoted, and also in the case of Forgay vs. Conrad, 6 How. S. C. Rep., 201.

The only remaining point to be considered, is the position assumed by respondents, that the bond in question is wholly illegal and void, and cannot be enforced. It would be sufficient here to say that the point does not arise in the case, the defence of illegality of the bond declared on not having been presented by plea. By Reg. Gen. of Jan. Term, 1847, title Pleadings in particular actions, § 2, Art. 1, it is laid down thus: "In debt on specialty or covenant, "the plea of non est factum shall operate as a denial of Archer vs. Hart and Sammis—Opinion of Court.

"the execution of the deed in point of fact only, and all 259
"other defences shall be specially pleaded, including mat"ters which make the deed absolutely void, as well as
"those which make it voidable." But as this objection was not presented, and the point was argued with much zeal on both sides, we are disposed to consider and pass upon it, as if it were regularly presented. We are clearly of opinion that the bond in question is neither a bail bond nor a replevin bond, nor a statutory bond, and therefore the authorities cited in the argument in relation to such instruments are not applicable, but we consider it as a voluntary bond, good and valid at Common Law, provided it is entered into by competent parties, and for a lawful purpose, not prohibited by law, and is founded upon a sufficient consideration. United States vs. Tingey, 3 Peter's R., 115; United States vs. Linn, 15 Peter's R., 311.

There is no allegation that the parties to the instrument rest under any incapacity to contract; that the respondents Sammis and Hart were incompetent to sign, seal and deliver the obligation, or that Archer was under any disability to accept and receive it, and we must consider them able to contract with each other. It is for a lawful purpose—that is, it does not appear that the objects and purposes of the instrument were in violation of any positive rule, or infringed any policy of the law. Nothing has been alleged in the argument as tending to show a violation of any rule of law, except that urged upon the hypothesis that the instrument in question was a bail bond. That it is not of this character, is so clear that it is only necessary to state it; no argument could demonstrate it more fully. Although it was conditioned for the appearance of Dennis and Mary, it was not to answer any debt or sum of money claimed to be due and owing from them to Archer and others, but to abide the order and decree of the court on the question of their slavery or freedom, and is there- 260 fore not within the letter or spirit of § 5 of the Act of November 23, 1828, which declares that "no person shall be required to give bail for his or her appearance to answer any original writ or summons emanating from a Court of Law."

That the contract was founded upon a sufficient consideration has not been denied, and indeed it cannot be questioned; for admitting that the respondents derived no profit or advantage therefrom, yet if there be detriment or loss to the obligee, it is sufficient. Dennis and Mary were claimed to be the slaves of Archer and others, which claim has been sustained by this court; Archer and others consented to the bailment or delivery of said slaves to the respondents, accepting the bond in their place and stead. This is a sufficient consideration to support the contract, and hence the deduction that the instrument sued upon is a good and valid Common Law contract, which the courts can and ought to enforce.

We believe that the view of the case which we have presented in this opinion covers and disposes of every point made in the argument, and that it only remains to declare the evident conclusions of law therefrom, that the judgment of the court below is erroneous and should be reversed, and that a judgment should be entered in this court upon the special verdict for the plaintiff and appellant. It is accordingly so ordered.

LOAMMI DAVIS, APPELLANT, VS. MARTHA FITCHETT AND CHARLES F. FITCHETT, ADM'RS., &C. OF SAMUEL ELLIOT, DECEASED.

1. Upon an appeal from a Justices Court to the Circuit Court, the trial in the latter court is to be had anew upon the merits, and the original defendant is not limited and confined upon such new trial to the same points of defence made in the court below, but may present new defences upon the merits.

2. There being no time specified within which a plea denying the signature of the defendant to a bond, bill or note should be filed in a Justices Court, it may be filed on the entry of the appeal in the Circuit Court.

3. A free person of color should not be sued by guardian; he is under no incapacity or disability with regard to the defence of suits brought against him, but may appear and defend by attorney as other persons of full age.

4. A free person of color, who is defendant in a suit upon a bond, bill or note, &c., may by plea deny the execution thereof in the manner provided by law; the interposition of such plea, sworn to, does not make the party a witness within the 42d section of the Act of Nov. 21, 1828.

[The Reporter has not been furnished with a copy of the record from which to frame a statement of the facts in this case, but enough appears in the opinion of the court, to enable the case to be fully understood.]

James Gettis and M. Whit Smith for appellant.

J. T. Magbee for appellee.

262 THOMPSON, J.:

The appellant, who is, as it appears, a free man of color, was sued by the respondents in a Justice's Court in a plea of debt, upon a promissory note for the sum of fifty dollars, upon which judgment was rendered by the Justice against him for the said sum of fifty dollars, with interest and costs. From this judgment he appealed to the Circuit Court of the Southern Circuit, sitting in Hillsborough County, when upon a new trial, judgment was rendered against the appellant for the sum of sixty-six dollars, and from this last judgment the record has been removed to this court by appeal, upon several points of law reserved upon bill of exceptions.

The first error assigned is upon the ruling of the Circuit Court, that the appellant, who was defendant in the Justice's Court, could be sued without joining his guardian, and making the latter a party to the suit. The necessity for making the guardian a party to every suit brought by and against a free person of color, is supposed to arise from the provisions of the Act of January 8, 1848, entitled "An Act to authorize Judges of Probate of the several counties in this State to appoint guardians for free negroes." The first section of the statute provides, that free persons of color shall be required to have guardians, to be selected by themselves, or if under ten years of age, by their parents, with the approval of the Judges of Probate, and it is made the duty of the Judge, if the gaurdian is approved of, to issue a certificate of appointment. The second section provides, that such guardians "shall have power to sue for and recover all such sums of money as are or may hereafter be owing to such free negro, or free mulatto, and shall have the same control over them as is possessed by guardians in other cases."

263 The last section is the one which is relied upon to support the position assumed, that a free person of color cannot be sued otherwise than through, or by his guardian. The statute, it will be observed, provides only for cases in which such free person of color is the plaintiff or creditor; it is silent as to those cases in which he is the debtor and defendant; and it will also be observed that the enactment is couched in affirmative terms only. Hence it will follow, that if before the Act, such persons were not under any disabilty to sue for the recovery of their rights, they may do so still, upon the principle that an affirmative statute does not take away the Common Law—the only effect will be, to give to the guardian appointed under the law, the right to sue equally with the ward. But as before remarked, the Act speaks of creditors and plaintiffs only, and if the corelative parties of debtor and defendant are included within the Act, it must be by force of the general terms—"and shall have the same control over such free negroes and free mulattoes as is possessed by guardians in other cases." This, it is supposed, places the free person of color under all the disabilites, in relation to his position as a party in court, which an infant labors under; but it is very clear, that the terms quoted do not extend beyond the authority which such guardians may exercise over the persons of those committed to their wardship. If, however, the provision should be deemed ample enough to put the free persons of color with regard to their property and rights of property under the same disabilities as if they were infants, yet a reference to the law in relation to infants, as parties in a court of justice, will show that the position is ont well taekn. When it is said that at Common Law, infants could neither sue nor defend, except by guardian, it is not intended to be the guardian of the infant's person and estate, but either one admitted by the court for the particular suit on the infant's personal appearance, or one appointed for suits on the general by the King's letters patent. Fitz. Nat. Brev., 27, H. 26-

But this rule being found inconvenient, it sometimes hapening that an infant was secreted by those who had the legal custody of his person, and so prevented from applying to have a guardian ad litem appointed, it was remedied by the Stat. Westm., 1, (3 Ed., I,) c. 49, and Westm. 2, (13 Ed. I,) c. 15, which authorized suits by the infant by prochein ami. Co. Lit., 135, b. n. 1.

If an infant is sued, he is not sued by his guardian, nor is there any principle of law which requires he should be sued in this manner; but the suit is brought against him as if he were of full age, and being brought personally into court, a guardian ad litem is assigned him to enable him to make his defence; and in this way only, by reason of the incapacity and disability resulting from his non-age, can he defend any action or suit at law or in equity. If the infant, when sued, does not apply to the court for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the plaintiff's attorney should apply to him to appear and move for that purpose, and in case of refusal so to do, the plaintiff's attorney may, six days afterwards, make application to the court. Schief. Prac., 168, citing 2 Wils. R., 50.

So it would appear that if free persons of color were placed on the same footing as infants, the action was, in its origin, rightly brought against the appellant. We do not, however, consider that free persons of color rest under the same incapacities and disabilities with regard to the defence of suits, which infants do, but they may appear and defend by attorney as other persons of full age, and this assignment of error is therefore overruled.

2. In the Circuit Court, the appellant sought to interpose a plea denying the execution of the note sued upon, but which plea the court would not admit to be filed on the ground that the plea could not be admissible, unless it appeared from the record of the justice, that such plea had been regularly filed in the court below; and this refusal of the court forms the second and third errors assigned here.

If the trial in a Circuit Court of an appeal from the decison or judgment of a Justice of the Peace were upon the record, in the same manner as appeals from the Circuit Court to this court, the ruling of the Judge below would without doubt, have been correct; but as by the Act of Feby. 12, 1832, (Thomp. Dig., 364,) the case is to be tried anew upon its merits, we are at a loss to perceive that force of the reason stated for rejecting the plea when offered in the Circuit Court.

By the Act regulating the practice and proceedings of the Circuit Court, (Thomp. Dig., 330,) dilatory pleas and pleas denying the execution of any bond, note or other writing sued upon, are not to be received unless pleaded on oath, and filed before the cause is called upon the appearance sued upon, are not to be received unless pleaded on oath, and filed before the cause is called upon the appearance docket; but by the Act regulating proceedings before Justices of the Peace, although such plea is required to be sworn to, yet there is no time limited within which it is to be filed. (Thomp. Dig., 471.) It may therefore be put in at any time before trial in the Justice's Court; and as the appeal from his judgment altogether suspended its force and effect as a judgment, and the party was entitled to a trial of the case anew, as if it had never been tried before, we can see no valid objection to an amendment of the pleadings by either party, or to the interposition of new defences. If the new trial had been in the Justice's Court, it is very clear the right to amend the claim or defence existed, and we cannot conceive that the removal to a Superior Court would operate any change of 266 the rule. If the removal of the case by appeal to the Circuit Court brought it within the influence of the rules of practice of the latter, yet such rules would not retroact so as to operate upon the case from its commencement in the court of the Justice of the Peace, but would only affect it from the time it came within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court by the appeal; and it is not pretended that the plea was not tendered at the first term in the Circuit Court, and was for that reason rejected. We are not aware of any rule of law which would restrict a party who upon appeal is entitled to a new trial upon the merits, to the same defences which he had made in the Court below upon the first trial.

It is however urged that the ruling was right, but for other reasons than those assigned by the court below; and if this be true, the respondent is entitled to have the benefit of them.

It is argued that the appellant, being a free man of color, could not interpose a plea denying the execution of a bond, bill, note or other writing sued upon at any time, or in any court, in a case where a white person is a party, because by the Act of November 21, 1828, § 42, it is provided that negroes or mulattoes, bond or free, shall be good witnesses in civil cases where negroes or mulattoes shall alone be parties, and in no other case whatever. By the term a witness, we understand one who gives testimony or evidence in a cause; and it is difficult to perceive how an affidavit, by a party to his plea, would constitute him a witness. By the statute 4 & 5 Ann, c. 16, pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, to the disability of the plaintiff or in abatement, which are termed dilatory pleas, are not to be admitted, unless affidavit be made of the truth of the matter pleaded, but it never was supposed that such affidavit made the defendant a witness.

Our statute, before quoted, following the statute of Ann 267 for the purpose of protecting plaintiffs against these dilatory pleas, makes the same provision, and goes further and provides that pleas which deny the exectuion of any bond, note, &c., sued upon, shall, like dilatory pleas, be put in upon oath; and so the plaintiff is not to be put to the proof of the instrument, unless the truth of the pleas is sworn to. Such verification of the plea, is not evidence; it cannot be read to the jury as testimony for the party pleading it; nor does it, like an answer in chancery, require the testimony of two witnesses to contervail the allegation of the plea, but it is simply a formality which must be observed before the plaintiff shall be required to maintain the affirmative allegation of his declaration in this particular. By the common law, in an action upon a bond, if the defendant pleaded non est factum, the plaintiff was bound to prove the execution of the bond; and so in an action of assumpsit upon a bill or note, the plea of the general issue would throw upon the plaintiff the onus of proving the making and delivery of the bill or note; the statute changes the rule in this respect, and declares that the plaintiff shall not be put to this expense and trouble, unless the issue tendered is supported by affidavit of the defendant, and that the only force and effect of the affidavit is to raise the issue, to show that the plea is a real and substantial defence, and not a frivolous plea intended merely to harrass the plaintiff wantonly, and put him to needless expense. A party may with as much propriety be termed a witness in a cause who makes and presents to the court an affidavit for continuance. There is nothing in this objection; a free person of color being liable to be sued, it follows as a necessary consequence that he is entitled to all the means and opportunity of making and presenting his defence which are permitted and allowed to other suitors, except when he is restricted by the force of 268 some express statutory regulation; and this court being clearly of opinion that a party in an appeal tried in the Circuit Court from the judgment of a Justice of the Peace, who was the defendant in that court, is not limited and confined to the points of defence made in the court below, the Circuit Court erred in refusing to receive the plea which was tendered; for which error the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions that the plea be received, and a new trial had in said court on that as well as all other proper issues in said cause.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

JAMES MCKAY, APPELLANT, VS. WILLIAM LANE, APPELLEE.

1. Whether on the failure of a Judge to hold the term of court at which a sums ad. resp is made returnable, it is nevertheless a term for pleading, and whether the defendant is bound to plead to the declaration filed at said term. Qu?
2. Courts of Error will not consider an assignment of error which is presented as a mere abstraction, when the party has been in no degree damnified thereby; or, where the error, if it is one, is either corrected by the Judge himself, or is rendered harmless by the subsequent events of the trial.
3. The omission of a bill of particulars is not a proper ground of demurrer to the declaration.

4. The venue being correctly stated in the margin is sufficient, although a wrong venue being inserted in the body of the declaration.
5. A plea which is defective in the essential quality of certainty as to time, is bad on demurrer.

6. Objections to the admissibility of evidence must be made before it goes to the jury; it was therefore too late after an instrument of writing was read to the jury to object that its execution was not sufficiently proved.
7. The general rule No. 23, of the Reg. Gen. Jany. Term, 1847, had in view the question of the costs of proving documentary evidence intended to be offered on the trial of a cause; it is not obligatory on either party to give notice of all the documentary evidence intended to be introduced.

8. In an action of assumpsit upon an express warranty of chattel, the plaintiff may recover costs, charges, and interest on the principal sum paid as the consideration, although the contract of the sale has not been rescinded, nor the property returned, nor any offer made to return it.

James T. Magbee, for Appellant.

O. B. Hart, for Appellee.

ANDERSON, C. J.:

This case is brought up by appeal from the Circuit Court for the county of Hillsborough.

The plaintiff in the court below, William Lane, brought an action of assumpsit aginst McKay to recover from the defendant damages on account of the alleged unsoundness of a certain negro slave, which the plaintiff had bought from defendant under a warranty of soundness, and which slave afterwards died from disease alleged to have existed at the time of purchase.

The plaintiff also declared that he had been put to expense and charges in and about the taking care of the said negro.

Besides the special count setting out the purchase and warranty and unsoundness of the negro, the common money counts are in the declaration.

The nature of the other pleadings will be stated in our consideration of the assignment of errors.

There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for the sum of $692.40, from which judgment an appeal was taken.

The errors assigned are twelve in number, and so far as they are material to the proper adjustment of the rights of the litigant parties we shall consider them in their order.

270 The first and second errors assigned, though involving an interesting and important question of practice, we find upon an examination of the whole case, it is not necessary to decide; for admitting that the Judge's ruling was erroneous, the appellant was not prejudiced, as we shall presently show. As the point is of very general interest and application, and the case before us does not require its decision, we think it our duty to reserve it to a more favorable opportunity, when we may have access to more books than we can procure here, and thus have the benefit of fortifying, or of correcting, our present opinions.

The question as stated in the assignment is this, whether on the failure of a Judge to hold the term of court at which a summons ad respondendum is made returnable, it is nevertheless a term for pleading, and whether the defendant is bound to plead to the declaration filed at said term.

Under the ruling of the court upon this point, the defendant was obliged to withdraw a demurrer which he had filed to the declaration, and this he complains of as error; but at a subsequent stage of the case, when he had pleaded to the declaration, the plaintiff demurred to one of his pleas, and thereby the defendant had the full benefit of his own demurrer to the declaration, upon the well settled rule of pleading that a demurrer at any stage of the pleading opens all the antecedent pleading. 1 Chitty, 707.

Under the authority of this rule, his Honor in the court below, doubtless deemed it his duty to look into the sufficiency of the declaration, as the plaintiff had previously requested him to do; and in like manner we shall consider ourselves as bound to give him the full benefit of his demurrer. Thus as we have said, he is in nowise injured by the ruling of the court in the point presented in his first and second assignment of errors.

The third error assigned is as follows: The court erred in ruling the defendant to plead to plaintiff's declaration before the covenants and warranties upon which said declaration was based, were filed in the cause. 271

We cannot find in the record any such ruling as is here stated. The court, it is true, ruled the defendant to plead instanter to the declaration, as a condition of having a default opened; but he had made no complaint (except in a demurrer which, as we shall see, was not the proper mode,) as to the omission of the particulars, or asked for an order to have them supplied. In an action of assumpsit, as this is, the warranty for the breach of which damages are demanded in the action need not be filed, certainly not without an order first asked for and obtained.

The assignment is not in precise and correct terms, but so far as the actual ruling of the court was, which is sought to be presented, we soo no error. We shall consider further the subject of particulars at a subsequent point of this opinion.

It is assigned further for error, that the court erred in ruling defendant to withdraw his demurrer to plaintiff's declaration, and plead thereto, there being no bill of particulars filed and there being no court holden the preceding term.

As we have already seen, the defendant was subsequently to this ruling, admitted to all the benefits of his demurrer, and it has been our uniform practice and it is the practice of all revisory courts, not to consider an assignment of error which is presented as a mere abstraction, when the party complaining of it has been in no degree damnified, and where the error, if it is one, is neither corrected by the Judge himself, or is rendered harmless by the susequent events of the trial, as in the case before us. We decline, therefore, the further consideration of this alleged error, and pass on to those having a practical bear- 272 ing on the case.

It is alleged in the fifth assignment of error, that the court erred in its ruling whereby it decided that plaintiff's declaration was good, and defendant's third plea bad.

Our consideration of this assignment will involve, as we have already intimated, an inquiry into the merits of the defendant's demurrer. The demurrer alleged that the declaration is not sufficient in law, first, because no bill of particulars was filed with the declaration.

The omission of a bill of particulars is not a proper subject of demurrer, as must be obvious from a moment's consideration of the object and effect of this form of pleading. A defendant may move for an order requiring a bill of particulars, and on proof of such order the plaintiff will either be stayed in his proceedings until the bill is furnished or subjected to other penalties appropriate to his default.

It is said secondly, that the declaration is not sufficient because the general conclusion is informal and insufficient.

In what particulars it is supposed to be so, we are not informed, and we perceive nothing on examination to warrant the allegation.

It is said thirdly, to be insufficient, because no specific indebtedness is stated in the counts for money paid, and money had and received, on the part of defendant.

These counts are connected by the copulative conjunction with the one immediately preceding, in which the indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff is stated specifically to be the sum of one thousand dollars, and the use of the words "and for so much money," have direct reference to the sum stated, and are in accordance with the most accustomed forms.

The same remark applies to the fourth point in the demurrer.

McKay vs. Lane—Opinion of Court.

273 The defect alleged, fifthly, to-wit: that it was not stated that the slave had not been tendered back to defendant, is not sustained by any authority or principle. The allegation was not necessary in this form of action. The count is no otherwise vague and indefinite than arose from the omission of the bill of particulars, which omission might have been supplied as we have stated, upon the motion of the defendant.

It is stated, sixthly, that the venue of the first count is laid at Key West, and not in Hillsborough county.

It is true that in the body of the declaration the venue is laid in Key West, with the addition of Monroe county, but the venue in the margin is correctly stated to be Hillsborough county, and this we hold to be sufficient.

"Such venue in the margin will aid, but not prejudice, "and in civil cases, if the name of a place only, and no "county or a wrong county be stated in the body of the "declaration, it will suffice, because the place is always "construed to refer to the county in the margin, although "another county has been mentioned." 1 Ch. Pl., 305. See also Rég. Gen., Jan. Term, 1847, § 2, Rule 3.

The last point in the demurrer is untenable.

The consideration referred to as set out in the second and fourth counts, and which is said not to be sufficient, is stated in the following words: "In consideration that the said plaintiff at the request, &c., had then and there bought of the defendant two certain negro slaves at and for a certain price or sum of money, then and there agreed upon, &c."

Why this is not regarded as a sufficient consideration to support the subsequent promise and undertaking, we are at a loss to understand.

It was an executed consideration, and therefore did not require to be stated with the same particularity as to quan-274 tity and value as is required in stating executory considerations—the allegation of a past consideration being but matter of inducement, and as such, not in itself traversable. 1 Ch. 323. The objection to the declaration on this ground is not well taken.

The court correctly ruled that the third plea of the defendant was bad. The simple allegation that the slave Monday was sound, was no sufficient reply. The plea is defective in the essential quality of certainty as to time. The complaint is, that the negro was unsound at a particular time, namely, at the time of the purchase—it is no defence to say that the negro was sound, without saying further that he was sound at the time of purchase.

Having thus disposed of the questions presented by the respective demurrers, we resume the consideration of the assignment of errors.

It is assigned in the sixth place as error, that the court erred in admitting certain testimony. Had the objection been made to the reading of the bill of sale at the proper time, it should not have been allowed to go to the jury without further and other proof of its execution—but such was not the case. No sufficient objection was made till the bill was read to the jury, and it is well settled, that objections not urged before the Judge below permits evidence to go to the jury, cannot be assigned in this court as error.

The decree and answer in the equity suit were rightfully admitted. A judgment or decree in a controversy between the same parties, is the highest species of evidence, and the admission of a party in an answer in Chancery are scarcely less conclusive as evidence against him. The objection to their introduction, founded on the 23d rule of the Rules of Practice, asumes that the rule was designed for a purpose different from its real object, which had in view only, the question of the costs of proving certain doc- 275 uments. The admissibility of the evidence is a totally distinct question, and can admit of no doubt.

The 7th, 8th and 9th assignments refer to the same point already discussed.

The objections to the reading of the bill of sale came too late.

The qualification made by the Judge to the instruction asked in relation to the bill in Chancery was altogether proper. The effect and weight of evidence is exclusively and appropriately within the province of the jury, as stated by his Honor The tenth assignment therefore is not sustained.

The error assigned in the eleventh place, is, that the court erred in ruling out the evidence of Bradley and others. The question to which this testimony had relation, was the soundness or unsoundness of the negro at the time of the sale. The witnesses excluded were called to show his soundness three weeks before and previous to that time. The testimony was clearly admissible upon the general rule which we quote from 1 Starkie on Ev., 17, that "all "facts and circumstances upon which any reasonable pre- "sumption or inference can be founded as to the truth or "falsity of the issue or disputed fact, are admissible evidence."

The fact that the slave was sound three weeks before the sale and for a long time previous thereto, was certaintly calculated to raise a reasonable presumption of his soundness at the time of sale, and being so, was, under the rule we have quoted, admissible evidence.

We think that the ruling of the Judge excluding it was erroneous.

But the error was unimportant, for there was abundant evidence before the jury of the actual condition of the negro at and about the time of the sale, and it is impossible 276 to conceive that the admission of Bradley's testimony, presumptive in its character as it confessedly is, could have had any weight with the jury in opposition to the testimony of a medical gentleman having the facilities for forming a correct opinion, which we find from the record that Dr. Peachy had.

This court has uniformly proceeded upon the practice not to reverse a judgment, however, erroneously an isolated point may have been ruled by the Judge below, when it is clearly apparent that the party complaining has been in no degree injured by the improper ruling. This is clearly so in the case before us, and for this reason we do not sustain the assignment of error of which we have just been speaking, notwithstanding it is abstractly well made.

It is alleged lastly, for error, that the court erred in instructing the jury that they might give costs, charges, and interest, inasmuch as the contract had not been rescinded, nor the negro returned, and no offer to return him made.

The objection here raised might apply to some forms of action, but not to the present one. This is an action of assumpsit which may be properly brought as it here is, upon an express warranty of the soundness of a personal chattel, and the judgment in this species of action, if in favor of theplaintiff , is, that he recover damages by him sustained by reason of the defendant's nonperformance of his promises and undertakings. Costs, charges and interest come properly under the denomination of damages, and we know of no principle of law which excludes them as proper objects of consideration with the jury while determining the quantum of damages sustained by the plaintiff.

Upon a review of the whole case, we can discover no adequate reason for interfering with the judgment of the 277 court, and we shall therefore direct the judgment to be affirmed.

Per curiam. Judgment affirmed with costs.

JOHN MERCER, APPELLANT, VS. WILLIAM B. HOOKER, APPELLEE.

1. Under the Act of March 15, 1844, Sec. 2, an execution is in force until satisfied; if a sheriff indorses any action thereon, it is not his duty to return the same to the clerk's office; nor does the writ thereby become inoperative, unless the same is satisfied.

2. In this State, by statute, a married woman may acquire a separate and independent title to both real and personal property, during coverture, by bequest, demise, gift, purchase or distribution, subject however, to the same becoming liable to the debts of the husband, unless an inventory thereof is filed and recorded, within six months from the time the title vests in her, as specified in the statute; the record of title papers particularly describing the property given to the separate use of a married woman, is a sufficient inventory and compliance with the statute.

3. The exclusion by the Circuit Court, of a bill of sale of a chattel to a married woman, because the execution thereof was not proved before it was recorded, was erroneous; but as it did not appear from the instrument that the property was to be the separate property of the wife, or by any evidence that it was paid for with the separate money of the wife, but purchased and paid for by the husband, it became his property, and subject to his debts, and therefore the party was not injured by the error of the court in the exclusion of the evidence.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hillsborough county. The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

James Gettis, for Appellant.

J. T. Magbee for Appellee.

SEMMES, J.:

In this case, an execution in favor of William B. Hooker 278 against Edward T. Kendrick, issued in 1847, was levied on a horse, as the property of the defendant, and to which the appellant, John Mercer, interposed his claim.

Upon the trial of the issue in the court below, the following facts appeared in evidence. In 1850, Kendrick purchased a bay horse of one Hagler, who at the request of Kendrick, executed a bill of sale to the wife of the latter.

Some few months thereafter, Kendrick traded this horse for the one in controversy, and shortly after sold the latter to one Cowart, who subsequently sold the same to the present claimant.

To support his claim in the Court below, the appellant relied mainly upon the alleged previous title of Mrs. Kendrick to the horse originally purchased, as well as the one in controversy.

It is unnecessary to notice specifically the several instructions given to the jury by the Court below, and to which the counsel for the appellant excepted.

The execution it appears, came to the hands of the sheriff in December, 1848, who afterwards endorsed upon it "nulla bona." Counsel are mistaken in supposing that it was the duty of the sheriff, after having made his return, to deposit the execution in the clerk's office, or that the writ itself become inoperative after the endorsement. On the contrary, it was the duty of the sheriff to retain the writ in his hands, and it was by its very terms, in full force until satisfied. Thomp. Dig., 355. It created a lien upon the personal property of the defendant from the time it came to the hands of the sheriff, without respect to the rights of third persons, who may subsequently have acquired title to the same.

To establish the title originally in Mrs. Kendrick, it was not only necessary for the claimant to prove that the purchase was made for her and with her money, but that the property was inventoried and recorded in the clerk's office 279 of the Circuit Court within six months after said property was acquired by her.

In this State, married women may acquire a separate and independent title to both real and personal property during coverture, by request, demise, gift, purchase or distribution, subject, however, to the same becoming liable to the debts of her husband, unless an inventory thereof is recorded within six months from the time the title vests in her. Thomp. Dig., 221. The record, however, of title papers particularly describing the property, is a sufficient inventory and compliance with the statute.

The court below was right in deciding that the husband and wife should join in all sales, transfers and conveyances of the separate property of the latter. Thomp. Dig., 221.

The exclusion by the court of the bill of sale, as evidence, because its execution had not been proved before it was admitted to record, is clearly erroneous, because there was no necessity of its being recorded. But this ruling cannot affect the judgment below, inasmuch as the claimant was not damnified thereby. It does not appear from the bill of sale, that the horse was the separate property of Mrs. Kendrick; on the contrary, it appears from the evidence that the property was purchased and paid for by the husband, there being no evidence that the money was that of the wife.

These points embrace all the rulings of the court below upon the trial of the cause, and with the exception stated, we are not disposed to overrule them. They are made in conformity with our statute, and we see no reason to doubt their correctness.

Judgment below affirmed.

TERM HELD AT MARIANNA, 1853.

JOEL CONKLIN AND JAMES SMITH, PARTNERS, &C., AS CONKLIN & SMITH, APPELLANTS, VS. MANUEL GOLDSMITH, EMANUEL FORCHEIMER AND SIMON FORCHEIMER, PARTNERS, &C., AS GOLDSMITH, FORCHEIMER & CO., APPELLEES.

A bond executed and filed, on obtaining a writ of attachment by the agent of the plaintiff in his character as agent, and professing to bind himself and not his principal, is a substantial compliance with the requisitions of the statute provided the bond be also executed by two good and sufficient sureties.

Appeal from the Circuit Court for Santa Rosa county.

On the 10th day of February, 1853, Moses W. Garrison, agent for the appellants, applied to and obtained from the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Santa Rosa county, at the instance and in the name and for the use of the appellants, against the appellees, a writ of attachment, returnable to the next term of the Circuit Court for said county.

The bond required to be executed by the statute of this State in all cases of attachment was executed by Garrison, the agent, in his own name, binding himself and not his principals.

The appellees (defendants below) at the ensuing term of the court, hoved to dissolve the attachment on the ground that "the bond executed by Garrison is his individual bond and not the bond of Conklin & Smith, and therefore Conklin & Smith vs. Goldsmith and others—Opinion of Court.

281 the writ of attachment has issued without a bond as required by the statute in such case made and provided." The court below sustained the objection thus taken by the defendants and ordered the writ of attachment to be quashed, from which the appellants took an appeal.

Hawkins, for appellants.

Campbell, for appellees.

SEMMES, J.:

This was an attachment suit brought by appellants against the respondents.

The attachment bond was signed by Moses W. Garrison as agent, binding himself and not his principals, Conklin & Smith.

Upon motion, the court below quashed the attachment, because the bond was not given in the name of the principals, and the question for our consideration is, whether this was necessary to the validity of the writ? We confess the point is not free from embarrassment. The whole difficulty arises out of the peculiar phraseology of the statute, which to say the least, renders the intention of the legislature as to the mode in which the bond should be executed, somewhat doubtful. The words of the statute are, that "before the issuing of any writ of attachment, the party applying for the same shall by himself, his agent or attorney, enter into bond with two or more good and sufficient securities," &c.

However important it is to give significance and effect to everyword, clause and sentence in a statute, yet less regard is to be paid to the words used than the policy which dictates the act. Broome Leg. Max., 440. And therefore where the language used is doubtful, or susceptible of two meanings, that which will better advance the remedy and is more consistent with the intention of the Legisla-282 ture, should prevail; and it is thus the object of the law becomes one of the surest guides to its proper exposition, Nothwithstanding the truth of this principle, and its application as a general rule, in the construction of the stautes, yet if the mode in which the bond should be executed in this case was clearly defined by the statute, the argument drawn from the general purpose and policy of the law, would be entitled to but little weight in determining the question before us. For, though the policy of the attachment law was to facilitate the collection of debts by giving an additional remedy to the creditor, yet the main object of that part of the statute before us, was to protect the debtor from an improper use of this remedy, by requiring two good and sufficient securities to the bond. This object can as well be accomplished where the agent executes the bond in his own name as in the name of his principal. A very familiar rule in the construction of the statute, and one we think much more applicable to this case is. that the different parts of the statute should be so construed with reference to each other, that effect may if possible, be given to the whole act, and to this purpose the words should receive their ordinary meaning, and be prevented if possible, from becoming superfluous, void or insignificant.

If, as is contended by respondent's counsel, the bond should be executed in the name of the principal, the question may well be asked as to the meaning to be given to the words "agent or attorney," or whence the necessity of using them at all? The principal being required to give a bond "by himself." it was but an idle ceremony in lieu of this, to authorize him to give the bond "by his agent." For what he does through his agent, in contemplation of law, he does himself. Why therefore clothe him with a power which he had at common law, above and independent of the grant in the statute? Besides the word attorney is evidently used in contradistinction to the word 283 agent. If the agent was required to execute the bond in the principal's name, as is insisted on, he must of necessity be an attorney in fact; otherwise, he could not bind the principal. But it could not have been contemplated in the use of the word attorney, to imply he should be one in fact, but an attorney at law, unless we conceive the folly that after the word agent, the Legislature should have seen the necessity of using the relative term, conveying the same identical idea. If the word attorney does not mean one at law, then it must be rejected as superfluous and unmeaning. The absurdity then seems manifest, that the party applying for the attachment is required to give a bond by himself or through his agent, who must have special authority for that purpose, while it would be a literal compliance with the statute for his attorney at law to execute the bond in his own name, binding of course upon no one himself and the sureties who might subsequently sign.

The inconsistency of this construction is avoided by holding, as we do, that the bond is a good one under the statute if the agent execute the same in his own name, and this seems the only construction which the law seems susceptible of, to preserve its unity and give force and effect to the language. Being a remedial act, it should receive a liberal interpretation, such as, while it looks to the object of the staute, and secures ample indemnity to the defendant, leaves the remedy unfettered by a useless restriction, and one in our opinion not designed by the Legislature. An argument drawn from inconvenience, is invoked in favor of this construction, and we think it is entitled to great weight.

The remedy afforded by the statute would, in a majority of cases, be unavailing if the creditor, who is supposed to be absent, is expected to furnish his agent with special authority to execute attachment bonds in anticipation of 284 his debtor's fraudulent acts. In this case, the agent having executed the bond in his own name, and given two good and sufficient securities, the end and purpose of the law, in our opinion, was complied with, while the consistency of the statute is preserved.

Statutes similar to our own have received in some of our States a judicial construction which supports the foregoing views.

In Mississippi, the law requires that before the attachment is granted "bond and security shall be taken from the party for whom the same shall be issued, his agent or attorney," &c. Upon the same question as the present, coming before the court, in the case of Frost vs. Cook, 7 Howard R., 358, Clayton, Justice, said: "The bond given by the agent complied substantially with the statute; the object was to secure the defendant in the recovery of costs and damages, and that object is as well obtained by a bond of the agent as of the principal." See also Page vs. Ford, 2. S. & M., 266.

Let the judgment of the court below be reversed and set aside, and the cause remitted to the court below with instructions to deny the motion to quash, and to proceed in the cause.

Hon. J. Wayles Baker of the Middle Circuit, who sat in this cause, was understood to dissent from the judgment of the court.

Simon, a Slave, vs. the State of Florida—Statement of Case.

285 SIMON, A SLAVE, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, VS. THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

1. Whether the confession of a prisoner is or is not voluntary is a question for the determination of the court; and it is error for the court to refer it to the consideration of the Jury.

2. Although the inquiry should, in the first instance, have been restricted to the question of the influences which operated upon the prisoner to induce the confession, yet it afterwards appeared that such confession was not voluntary, the court should have arrested the examination, and withdrawn the evidence from the jury.

3. To render a confession voluntary and admissible in evidence, the mind of the prisoner should at the time be free to act, uninfluenced by fear or hope. Whether the prisoner had been arrested on a charge of arson, on suspicion merely, and carried to the Magistrate's office, a large and excited crowd of persons attending, from the violence of which the firmness and determination of the Magistrate was barely sufficient to protect him, and thus situated, the excited populace remaining without the office, but within the hearing of the prisoner, who exhibited marks of great terror and alarm, he, the prisoner was urged by the Magistrate to confess his guilt, saying to him that "they were satisfied of his guilt—that he would be put upon his trial and would certainly be hung—that if he had accomplices, they would be put upon their trial and not him, if he would turn State's evidence;" and thereupon the prisoner confessed his own guilt, but denied he had any accomplices: HELD, That the circumstances of the case lead to and induce the conclusion that the confession was not voluntary, but was forced from the mind of the prisoner by the "torture of fear."

In this case, the prisoner's guilt, according to the bill of exceptions, rested alone on the confession, unsupported by any proof of the circumstances which directed suspicion against him; and in the proof of the corpus delicti, the statement of the prisoner as to the place where the house was fired, was contradicted by two witnesses.

At the June term, 1853, of the Circuit Court for Escambia County, the Grand Jury presented an indictment against Simon, the plaintiff in error, for burning a dwelling house belonging to Richard T. Maxwell.

286 The record, after stating that certain persons, naming them, were on the tenth day of June chosen and sworn as Grand Jurors, proceeds to state that "on another day, the fifteenth day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, the Grand Jurors came into court and presented the following bill of indictment, which said indictment is in the following words and figures, and is endrosed as follows:"

The indictment is in the usual form, and is endorsed thus: "State vs. Simon, a slave"—"Arson" "A true bill. Wm. H. Baker, Foreman."

The following bill of exceptions, embracing the testimony offered on the trial, and the rulings of the court, was made a part of the record:

BE IT REMEMBERED, that on the trial of this cause the State produced the following witnesses, who testified as follows:

1st. Joseph Sierra was produced as a witness for the State, who being sworn, testified, that Doctor Maxwell's house was burned down in Pensacola on the seventeenth day of October last—that the house formerly belonged to Mr. Ahrens, but had been sold by him to Dr. Maxwell—that it was in the morning of the 17th October, that the house was set on fire and burned down. Simon, the prisoner at the bar, was afterwards taken up, and brought before the witness on suspicion, the witness being at that time, Mayor of the City of Pensacola—that Simon made confession before the witness that he had set fire to Maxwell's house—that no compulsion and no influence was used to extract from the prisoner such confession. That witness said to Simon that if he told the truth, and that if he, the prisoner, was the one who burned the house, he would be put upon his trial and would be certainly hung; that if he had any accomplices he would, by testifying against them, become State's evidence, and they would be 287 put upon their trial and not him. Witness said to Simon the prisoner, do not bring any innocent person into this matter, for if you do, although you may not be punished in this world, you will be in the next, which is worse. If you bring any one into this matter, let it be one who is gulity. Simon hung down his head for a while, and I asked him what he had to say? He replied, send for my master, and I will tell the whole. Witness then sent for his master, Mr. McVoy, and when he came witness told him what had happened. The prisoner then asked his master, Mr. McVoy, as he had already asked the witness, as to the consequences of his confession, or in relation to the punishment if he should tell the truth, and Mr. McVoy made the same reply to him which the witness had made.

Simon, the prisoner, then said, he had set fire to Dr. Maxwell's house, that he was by himself at the time he did it, and that no body else was with him. This confession was about the 21st or 22d of last October, and the house was burned in this county. On the next morning the prisoner was committed.

Witness visited the prisoner in jail to find out if he had any accomplices, and on one occasion he told the witness that there was a boy who was an accomplice, but that he did not know his name. Witness procured the boy to be apprehended, but the prisoner declared that he was not the one, and so the boy was discharged.

Upon his cross examination, the witness said that there was great excitement among the people—that there was a great crowd, but that the excitement was out of doors, and that the people said, he the prisoner, should be hung. Witness told the prisoner that they were satisfied about his guilt, and that all they wanted to know was who his accomplices were. At the time prisoner made his confession
or Maxwell's house? Witness says there were no threats and no coercion used toward the prisoner, and no promise made him to induce the confession. Witness says he thinks that but for his protection afforded the prisoner, the people would have taken him into their own hands. Witness says he had several interviews with the prisoner in jail, and at the second interview the prisoner told witness that he had an accomplice. Witness said to the prisoner, you are in irons and you cannot escape. Witness told him he had to come to trial, and that if he had any accomplices, he had better inform upon them before they got away from town. Witness told him he had better inform upon his accomplices for the benefit of the community, so that they might be arrested. Witness told the prisoner that he would be State's evidence if he had accomplices and would disclose them. The prisoner appeared to be greatly alarmed, but the witness told him he should be protected.

In reply to the questions here asked by the State, witness said, I used no threats and held out no promises or favors to the prisoner at the time he made his confession of guilt. The house burned was a dwelling house, and at that time was undergoing repair by Doctor Maxwell, who was then living in another house. Don't know whether any one was sleeping in the house that was burned, at that time or not. Prisoner said he had set fire to the east window under the gallery, and staid there until it was blazing. Witness says the house fronted south, and that the window which the prisoner said he fired, was the last window fronting on the gallery to the east. Witness says that the excitement to which he has testified, was sometimes in the presence of the prisoner, and sometimes not, but in his hearing.

Simon, a Slave, vs. the State of Florida—Bill of Exceptions.

289 2d. John Brosneham was then produced as a witness for the State, who being duly sworn, proved the articles of agreement between Henry Ahrens and Doctor R. T. Maxwell, conveying the house that was burnt, to Doctor Maxwell.

3d. Richard T. Maxwell was now introduced by the State, and upon the agreement and conveyance of the house and lot between Ahrens and himself being placed in his hands, he acknowledged that he executed it, and said that the house that was burned down, and for which the prisoner was then on trial, was the property designated in said agreement.

Upon his cross examination, Doctor Maxwell said that he was not residing in the house at the time it was burned, but that he was then living in another house—that the house that was burned had not been occupied for two or three months previous to the burning, but that about six weeks before the burning, a negro woman slept in the kitchen by his permission—says that the house he was residing in at that time is in Pensacola.

In answer to a question here presented by the solicitor for the State, Doctor Maxwell said that the house that was burned was a dwelling house.

4th. Henry Ahrens was now introduced as a witness by the State, and being first sworn says, upon the said agreement between him and Doctor Maxwell being shown him, that it was executed and delivered by him to Doctor Maxwell—says that previous to the execution of said agreement he was in possession of the house—that he built it, and that he lived in it sometime before he sold it to Doctor Maxwell, but did not live in it at the time, but was then living at Arcadia in Santa Rosa county.

Here the Solicitor for the State announced that he would rest the case for the State for the present, and thereupon, 290 on the part of the prisoner, the following witnesses were produced, who testified as follows:

Joseph Commyns, who being first sworn, testified that he saw the house on fire about two o'clock in the morning—that he thinks the fire commenced in the upper story—that he was about the first to give the alarm, that he heard somebody there, and knew it was Mr. Knapp and Joseph Sierra by their voices—that the house had no basement of brick—that it had an attic, and that he thinks the shingles were set on fire—that the fire was running out on the shingles when he first saw it—that he was at the custom-house, about two hundred yards off, when he first discovered the fire, and that he saw the fire over the top of McVoy's and Moreno's and Brosnaham's houses—that he went to the market house before he went to the fire—that he could not see the ground floor of the burning house from the position in which he stood at the custom-house—that the windows of the house that was burned came pretty near to the roof of the house—that he thinks he could have seen the window in the south east corner of the house, if it had been on fire, from where he stood, but did not take much notice—that the street where he stood runs up by the house that was burning—that he noticed nothing but the fire, but that he could have seen the fire in the front windows from where he stood, had they been on fire, but don't know whether the lower part of the house was burning when he got there.

The defendant then introduced Chester P. Knapp, who testified that he saw the house on fire between two and three o'clock—that the south east attic was burning when he first saw it—that he saw the fire through the windows, that he went in at the front gallery and saw no fire there and saw none of the windows burning—that he tried to break down the door—thinks he would have seen the fire in the front windows if they had been burning—that the 291 building was a story and a half high—that it was through the upper windows that he first saw the fire—that the windows above were the smallest, that the windows below had blinds, but does not remember as to the upper windows.

Hereupon the defendant rested his case, and the State offered to produce Mr. McVoy as a witness, to prove the ownership of the slave Simon, the prisoner. To this the defendant, by his counsel, objected, and the court overruling the objection, Mr. McVoy was sworn, and testified that the prisoner is his slave, his property.

And upon his cross examination by defendant's counsel, Mr. McVoy said that he had heard Mr. Sierra's testimony, and that he was in the Mayor's office when the prisoner confessed—that the prisoner was under a great state of excitement, that he was laboring under great terror, and that he never say any one more terrified—that witness, Mr. Sierra, and the city marshal were in the room with the prisoner, and the crowd on the outside.

Thereupon the counsel for the prisoner moved the court to withdraw the confession of the prisoner from the jury, because it satisfactorily appeared that the said confessions were elicited from the prisoner by undue terror or the hope of reward, which motion was overruled by the court, the court not being satisfied that the said confessions were obtained by undue terror or the hope of reward, and thereupon the said confessions were referred to the jury, leaving it to them to say whether they had been elicited from the prisoner by undue terror or the hope of reward.

Whereupon the counsel for the prisoner made their exception to the ruling of the court, and prayed that this bill of exceptions might be signed, sealed, and made a part of the record in this case. Which is accordingly done.

Campbell for the plaintiff in error. 292

First. The first error assigned is, that there is nothing in the record to show that the Grand Jury found a true bill against the prisoner. Holton vs. the State, 2 Fla. R., 476.

Second. It was left to the jury to say whether the confesisons of the prisoner were admissible; whereas it was the province of the court, and not of the jury, to decide upon their admissibility. 1 Phil. Ev., 18; 2 Starkie Ev., 36; 2 Russell on Crime, 826; Roscoe Ev., 34; 1 Greenl. Ev., 255.

Third. The court should have ruled out the confessions, because it was evident they were extracted by fear and the hope of favor.

A confession to be admissible, must be free and voluntary, it must not be extracted by any sort of threats or violence, nor be obtained by any direct or implied promises however slight, nor by the exertion of any improper influence. 2 Russell on Crimes, 825, 826; 1 Chitty Cr. Law, 570; 1 Wheeler, 69. And to ascertain whether a confession is voluntary, we are not simply to consider the language used to the prisoner by the person to whom it was made, but also the age, situation and character of the prisoner, and the circumstances under which he was at the time the confession was elicited. 1 Greenleaf, 255.

We contend that under these rules, the confessions of the prisoner were clearly inadmissible. It is clear that the first confession was induced by fear and the hope of favor. By fear. The prisoner was a slave, and therefore more readily operated upon by the appliance of fear.

At the time his confession was made he was laboring under the greatest terror induced by the presence of an excited crowd, who threatened his life, and who were only restrained from executing their threats by the authority of 293 the mayor; and the prisoner was urged to confess by the mayor, who assured him his guilt was known, and that if he was the only person concerned in the crime he would certainly be hung. 2 Russell on Crimes, 831; Serpentine vs. the State, 1 How., 256.

By favor. The promise of protection made by the mayor was, under the circumstances, a powerful inducement to the prisoner to confess; and he might very naturally have thought it necessary to ingratiate himself with the only protector he had in the multitude around him. Mill's Case, Russell on Crimes, 828-831. When life is in peril, fear prompts us to take any step that may insure immediate safety, even though it may result in an equal though more remote danger.

Again, the promise of the mayor, that if the prisoner "had accomplices, by betraying them he would be admitted as State's evidence, and they would be put on their trial, and not him," was clearly sufficient to exclude the confession. 2 Russell, 828-839. The fact that he discovered no accomplice, and that he was admonished that if he was the only guilty party he would be hung, does not remove the objection. The law cannot measure the force of the influence used, or decide upon the effects it may have upon the mind of the prisoner. 2 Russell, 826.

The second confession was also induced by promise. The prisoner was told it would be better for him to betray his accomplices, so that he might become State's evidence. Authorities above cited.

The mayor, to whom the confessions were made, says he made no threats or promises to elicit the confessions from the prisoner, and such doubtless was his intention. But the question is not whether he intended to excite hope or inspire fear, but whether the language employed might be 294 so construed by the prisoner as to produce those results. 2 Russell, 831.

Archer, for the Attorney General, for the State.

SEMMES, J.:

The first error assigned, is, that there is nothing in the record to show that the Grand Jury found a true bill of indictment against the plaintiff in error, and the case of Holton vs. the State, 2 Fla. R., 476, is relied upon as authority. We have carefully revised the decision in that case. It is certainly distinguishable from the one before us, and we certainly are not disposed to extend any further the principles of that decision. Immediately after the caption of the record, in this case, which contains all the essential requisites, follows this statement: "And on another day, to wit, the fifteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, the Grand Jurors came into court and presented the following bill of indictment, which said indictment is in the following words and figures, and is endorsed as follows, to wit." Then follows a copy of the indictment, with the finding of the Grand Jury, closing with the usual certificate of the clerk. The record is a complete and perfect one, and a mere statement of the facts is a sufficient answer to the objection.

The second assignment of error is, that the court below left it to the jury to determine whether the confession of the accused was voluntary or not? It was undoubtedly the province of the court to determine in the first instance as to the admissibility of these confessions. There is a manifest distinction between the questions, whether a confession be voluntary or not, and the credit and weight to be given the evidence establishing the confessions. The one is as exclusively a question for the court, as the other is for the jury, for it is only when the confession is volun- 295

tary that it becomes legal evidence, and can be submitted to the consideration of the jury.

It oftentimes may become a question of no little embarrassment to determine whether the confession is voluntary or not, but still, the law has reposed the exercise of this power in the court, and it cannot be delegated to the jury. Their province is widely different; they are not concluded by the confessions, when submitted to them, for they are to determine not only the weight and credit to be given the testimony of the witnesses, who depose as to the confessions, but the credit to be given to the confessions themselves.

We do not consider this to be an open question. There is no conflict of authorities on the subject, and the doctrine is universally acquiesced in by the English and American Courts. A note by the Editor of Russell on Crimes, is relied on as maintaining a different doctrine. 2 Russell 5 Amer. Edit., 826, n. 2. But it is very evident that the questions, as to the admissibility of the evidence, and the credibility of the witnesses, have been confounded. Otherwise, the note of the Editor is not only at variance with the text but with the authority referred to. In case of Rex vs. Nute, 2 Russell, 832, it is true the confessions were in evidence, and the jury were allowed to pass upon the question whether they were voluntary or not, but on a case reserved, the Judges held that these points were not for the jury.

It is insisted by the Attorney General, that the evidence in relation to the confessions being voluntary, having gone to the jury, it was too late afterwards to object to its admissibility. It is true, the investigation in the first instance, should have been restricted to the motive and influence which may have operated on the mind of the prisoner, in making these confessions; it was a preliminary 296 question, and the judgment of the court should have been invoked on that. But it is none the less true, that it was in the power of the court to have arrested the examination and withdrawn the evidence at any time during the progress of the trial.

The third assignment of error, is, that the court should have ruled out the confessions, because they were not voluntary.

To render a confession voluntary and admissible as evidence, the mind of the accused should at the time be free to act, uninfluenced by fear or hope. To exclude it as testimony, it is not necessary that any direct promises or threats be made to the accused. It is sufficient, if the attending circumstances, or declarations of those present, be calculated to delude the prisoner as to his true position, and exert an improper and undue influence over his mind.

The evidence in this case was, that the accused was arrested on suspicion. What the grounds of suspicion were do not appear. He was taken before the mayor of Pensacola, at his office. A large and excited crowd was present, declaring that the accused should be hung, and but for the firmness and determination of the mayor, would have seized upon him. He was informed by the mayor that the crowd was satisfied as to his guilt, that he would be put upon his trial, and would certainly be hung. That if he had accomplices they would be put upon their trial, and not him—that he would become State's evidence. The mayor further testifies "that the accused was greatly alarmed." The city marshal, who was also present, testifies, that the accused was under great excitement, was laboring under great terror, and that he never saw any one more terrified. Under these circumstances, he was urged to confess. When asked what he had to say? he replied, 297 "send for my master and I will tell the whole." Upon his master appearing, the previous statements of the mayor were repeated to the accused, and he confessed his guilt. The next morning he was committed to jail, and upon a second interview with the mayor he again confessed his guilt and accused some one as his accomplice, who on being arrested he failed to identify.

There were no corroborating circumstances in proof, in aid of the confession, though there was evidence to disprove a part of his statement. Upon this state of the facts he was convicted and sentenced to be hung.

There are few cases to be found in the books where stronger influences were brought to bear on the mind of the prisoner to extract a confession than the one before us. That it was made under the influence of fear or apprehension of personal violence, can scarce be doubted. The fact of the assurance of protection, on the part of the mayor; from the threats and violence of the crowd, was but additional inducement to the confession; for, connecting the language of the mayor with the terror inspired by the crowd, it is but fair to presume that the conviction was, that his confession was the only immediate security for his person and his life. The fear of immediate punishment may be as powerful an agent in extorting a confession, as the punishment itself. If, from the situation and character of the accused, the circumstances were calculated to, or did inspire him with, this fear, his confessions came at least within the spirit of the rule excluding them as evidence. The impression and conviction was made—the agency is of no consequence.

The second confession made in prison, it is reasonable to infer, was induced by the circumstances attending the first. The presumption is, that the previous influences continue, and such presumption must be overcome. The 298 State vs. Guild, 5 Halst., 163. Explicit warning of the accused by the magistrate, and length of time intervening, are circumstances which may render the subsequent confessions evidence. Ibid. These do not exist in this case.

It is true the precise time when the subsequent confession was made, is not stated, though it is clearly inferable it was the next day. Whether this be so or not, it was incumbent upon the prosecution to have proved the time, and failing to do so, the accused is entitled to all the benefit of the omission. Independent of these confessions, the fact that the accused is a slave, and the confession to, and at the instance of his master, are circumstances entitled to the most grave consideration; the ease with which this class of our population can be intimidated, and the most absolute control which the owner does involuntarily exercise over the will of the slave, should induce the courts at all times to receive their confessions with the utmost caution and distrust. And the facts of this case afford a strong commentary upon the uncertainty and danger of these confessions. In the course of his examination the accused undertook to state the particular part of the house which was set on fire. He says he set fire to the east window of the first story under the gallery, and that he staid there until it blazed up. One of the witnesses is satisfied the fire commenced in the upper story; the shingles he thinks must have been set fire to from the attic—the fire was running out on the shingles. He believes he could have seen the east window had it been on fire, from where he stood.

Another witness says, he discovered the south-east attic on fire, that he went into the gallery, but he saw no fire there; none of the windows were burning. These witnesses, who are unimpeached, and whose testimony is uncontradicted, establish the fact, that the confessions of the prisoner as to the particulars of the burning, were altogether untrue. It is true that the jury were competent to 299 believe his confession as to his guilt and reject the balance of his statement. But the record does not disclose a solitary circumstance from which we would be warranted in believing one statement more than the other.

If the confessions were voluntary, it would be difficult to conceive of a motive for giving this detailed statement of a matter so clearly proved to have been false. We can only reconcile the confessions with the fact that when made, the prisoner was laboring under excitement and apprehension.

Judgment below reversed, cause remanded, and new trial ordered.

WRIGHT, C. J., delivered the following dissenting opinion:

The record in this case presents the following facts:

On the 17th October last the dwelling-house of R. T. Maxwell was burned in Pensacola. On the 21st or 22d of the same month, Simon, the prisoner, was apprehended and taken before the mayor of Pensacola, Mr. Sierra, on suspicion of setting fire to the house. He made confession of his guilt. The witness, Sierra, testifies that no compulsion and no influence was used to extract from the prisoner such confession—that "witness said to Simon that if "he told the truth, and if he was the one who burned the "house, he would be put on his trial and would certainly "be hanged." On cross examination, the witness says, "there was great excitement among the people—there was "a great crowd, but the excitement was out of doors, "and that the people said, he, the prisoner, should be "hanged." And further, that witness "thinks that but for "his protection afforded the prisoner the people would "have taken him into their own hands."

There is much other testimony presented by the bill of 300 exceptions, such as that after Simon had confessed his guilt, the witness urged him to disclose the names of his accomplices, if he had any. Whereupon Simon hung down his head, and requested that his master might be sent for—that on the coming of his master, Simon repeated his confession, being warned by his master, as he had been previously warned by the mayor, viz: that if guilty he would be tried and hanged, and Simon added, that in setting fire to the house "he was by himself. and that nobody was with him."

The next day while in jail, Simon named an accomplice in his crime, who on being apprehended proved not to be the man, &c.

In the court below, the prisoner's counsel moved the court to exclude this testimony from the jury on the ground that the confessions of the prisoner were obtained by undue terror.

Three distinct grounds of error are assigned here. In relation to the first, the court is agreed. The second and third I shall consider together.

The general rule in cases like the present, is, that if there be reasonable ground for presuming that the confession was made under the influence of any promise or threat of a temporal nature, the evidence ought not to be received. 2 Hale, 285; Arch. Crim. Pl., 109. Here it is urged that such a threat was conveyed in the declaration made by Sierra to Simon, "that if he told the truth, and if he was "the one who burned the house, he would be put upon his trial, &c. I think otherwise, and that Sierra's declaration to Simon is to be regarded rather as a warning—an admonition, than as a menace, calculated to overcome the mind of the prisoner, and render his confession unworthy of credit. The kind of threats which the law regards as 301 fatal to confessions of this character, are threats of present or prospective evil, made in order, or with the effect, to induce confession. Such would be a threat of prosecution or any other personal harm. In this case, however, the object of the witness, Sierra, was (and such was the obvious effect of his warning,) to put Simon on his guard against disclosing anything but the truth. It is not to be denied that a confession obtained by any undue means should be excluded from the jury. 2 Russ. on Crimes, 645; 2 East. P. C., 658; 1 Phil. Ev., 104.

But in this case no undue means were used. I cannot regard the crowd outside, and their excited declarations, as constituting such undue means. The natural and probable effect of these excited declarations was, not to induce the prisoner to make a false confession of his guilt, but rather to induce him to persist in a denial, though he might be ever so guilty.

The question in all cases like the present, is, "whether the inducement held out to the prisoner was calculated to make his confession an untrue one." Arch. Crim. Pl., 111. In this case there was no such inducement.

I think the court below was right in permitting the confession to go to the jury.

302 JOHN T. J. WILSON AND JAMES M. CLELAND, APPELLANTS, VS. LUKE LOTT IN HIS OWN RIGHT, AND AS EXECUTOR OF MARY THOMAS, DECEASED.

Where the term of a court is adjourned, after the day appointed for its commencement, to another day, it is but a prolongation of the term; but when the term is postponed by an adjournment before its commencement, and in anticipation of the appointed time, to another day, the return thereof is adjourned; and those things which were appointed to be done on the first day of term, are postponed and adjourned also to the deferred time: Therefore, the term of this court appointed by law for the 3d Monday of March, having been, by an order of the 18th February preceding, postponed and adjourned to Monday, the 11th day of July, the transcript of the record in this cause filed on the last named day, was filed in due time.

Motion to docket the cause for argument at the present term. The point presented is set forth in the opinion of the court.

Woodward and M. A. Long for the motion.

Campbell and Hawkins against it.

THOMPSON, J.:

The appeal in this case appears to have been duly entered in open court, at the last fall session of the Circuit Court for the Western Circuit sitting in the county of Jackson; the transcript of the record however was not filed in the Clerk's office of this court until Monday last, the 11th of July instant, being the first day of this term, held pursuant to the postponement and adjournment ordered on the 18th of February last, by an order made during the sittings at Tallahassee.

The counsel for the appellants now moves that the case be docketed, and heard at the present term of the court, 303 which motion is resisted by the counsel for the respondents, who contend that the case should be dismissed for want of prosecution, the transcript of the record not having been filed "on or before the first day of the term next succeeding" the allowance and entry of the appeal, as prescribed by § 4 of the Act of February 10, 1832, (Thomp. Dig., 448.)

The term of this court next succeeding the entry of the appeal in this case would have been on the 3d Monday of March last, but as the said term could not be held consistently with a due regard to the public service, it was postponed and adjourned over until the 2d Monday of the present month of July, and on this day the appellant brought in and filed the transcript of the record.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this should have been done on the 21st March, the time appointed by the statute for holding the term of court at this place. And this brings us to the question of the effect of the adjournment of the term.

An adjournment is defined in Jacob's Law Dictionary to be "a putting off until another time and place," which definition is in conformity with the meaning of the term as it is used in ordinary and common parlance, according to Dr. Johnson, and other lexicographers. The term then which was appointed to be held the 3d Monday of March having been put off until another time, namely, the second Monday of July thereafter, it would seem to result as a necessary consequence that the things which were to have been done, and which would have been done at the first named time, must necessarily be postponed with the term to the deferred time. Writs of error, citations and other process which had been issued returnable to the first named day, would be returnable at the time specified in and by the adjournment, because the return day was adjourned and 304 postponed. And this view is supported by authority.

It is laid down in Comyn Ab., tit. Adjournment, (A. 3,) that "where the return itself is adjourned, nothing can be done upon the same return; as if the term be adjourned in octabis mich. usque mens. mich., there can be no appearance upon oct. mich., for that was adjourned," and citing 1 Roll. 130, 633, 4 Ed., 4, 21, a.; and again it is laid down, "So every thing to be done at a return which was adjourned, shall be done at the day to which the adjournment was; as if a bond be to appear oct. mich. before which, the term is adjourned to another place and day, an appearance there is sufficient." Comyn Dig., tit. Adjournment, (A. 3,) citing Mo., 430, Cro. Eliz., 466.

Upon authority as well as reason, it would seem that the transcript of the record filed on the day to which the term was adjourned, was filed in due time.

There is an obvious distinction between the adjournment of the court on the first or any subsequent day of the term, and the adjournment of the term in anticipation of the appointed time, to another day; in the first place, the term has actually commenced, and the effect of the adjournment is but a prolongation of the term—in the latter case the term being postponed by adjournment before it commences, the return day thereof is also adjourned, and it takes its beginning from the time to which it is adjourned.

Per totam curiam. Let the case be docketed and stand for argument at this term.

Wilson & Cleland vs. Luke Lott—Statement of Case.

305 JOHN T. J. WILSON AND JOSEPH M. CLELAND, APPELLANTS, VS. LUKE LOTT IN HIS OWN RIGHT AND AS EXECUTOR OF MARY THOMAS, DECEASED, APPELLEE.

1. Fraud is not to be presumed, but must be proved; and this is the general rule, as well in equity as at law.

2. In equity, fraud will sometimes be presumed from the nature and subject of the bargain itself, being such as no man, not under some delusion, would make, on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other; and it will be presumed from the circumstances and condition of the parties contracting; and these instances form exceptions to the general rule.

2. Where one greatly indebted, although not actually insolvent, with the avowed design of removing from the country, makes a sale of all his property, real and personal, receiving payment partly in cash, partly in a debt due by him to the vendee, and for the residue the promissory note of the vendee, which were subsequently paid, and possession of the property sold followed and accompanied the conveyance: HELD, Not to constitute evidence of fraud, although it appeared that the vendee was the mother-in-law of the vendor; and that owing to subsequent misconduct of the vendor, the proceeds of the sale were lost to his creditors.

4. Where it appeared that subsequently to the sale, upon the entreaties of the vendee, who was unwilling to be separated from her daughter, and upon her promise to remember her grand children liberally in her will, the vendor yielded to the said solicitations and promises, abandoned his intention of removing, and resided with the vendee, but never assumed any dominion or control over the property sold, it was held that it did not constitute such a possession in the vendor from which a secret trust in his favor would be inferred, so as to make the transaction fraudulent by construction of law.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for Jackson county.

Wilson and Cleland filed their bill of complaint against Luke Lott in his own right and as Executor of Mary Thomas, deceased, alleging that Lott, in March 1839, conveyed to Mary Thomas his interest in certain lots in Marianna, and 306 also a tract of land situated in Jackson county; that Lott being the owner of an interest in certain pre-emption claims likewise conveyed it to said Mary Thomas in her life time, and that at the date of these conveyances Lott transferred and conveyed to said Mary Thomas all his other property of every name, nature and description. The bill sets forth that at the time of these transfers and conveyances, Lott was largely indebted to many persons, and among them to complainants, who instituted separate suits against him and recovered judgments in March 1840, in each case for $4,434.39; that the executions which issued thereon were, in consequence of the transfers and conveyances which had been made, returned "nulla bona." It charges that the said transfers and conveyances were concocted and contrived in fraud, covin, collusion and guile, to the end and purpose, and with the intent and design to elude and deceive, hinder, circumvent, delay and defraud the creditors of said Lott in general, and especially complainants. That a merely nominal and fictitious consideration, if any, was given or known in these transactions, and that if any money passed it was borrowed for the purpose and immediately returned to the lender, and that if notes were given they have never been enforced, and were given as a pretence to cover the real nature of the transactions.

The bill further charges that Mary Thomas was in no sort of condition, either by age, ability, habit or inclination, to enter into such an extensive engagement, being an aged widow, having neither the time, capacity or disposition for such investments. That she never occupied or improved the town lots, and never cleared, planted or improved the land, but that said Lott had been in the receipt and enjoyment of the profits and income of all; that Lott was the son-in-law of Mrs. Thomas, at whose house he and his family resided without any apparent and real difference or exclusiveness of interest, and that she became the bailee 307 of all his property for its protection, and to cover it from his creditors. It alleges, further, that before her death Mary Thomas made her will, by which she devised and bequeathed to her grand-children, to wit, the children of said Lott, all her property, reserving a life estate to her daughter, the wife of said Lott, and appointing said Lott executor thereof. The bill concludes by praying that the transfers and conveyances referred to be set aside as fraudulent and void as to creditors, and that it be decreed that said Mary Thomas in her life time, was a trustee of the creditors of said Lott, and that said property be held to be subject to their debts and sold to pay the claims of complainants.

Defendant in his answer, states that in the latter period of the year 1838, or early in 1839, he proposed to emigrate to Texas, and that preparatory to this movement he sold all his property, both real and personal, except notes and accounts, to the said Mary Thomas. He declares that his intended movement to Texas was the only inducement with him to sell his property, and in the most pointed and unequivocal terms denies the truth of the allegation in the bill, of an intention on his part to defraud his creditors. He denies that there was any fraud, actual or constructive, in the sale of his property, and asserts that the transfer and conveyance thereof was for a full and valuable consideration, and proceeds to state in detail the valuations placed on the different parts of the property sold; that as soon as the conveyances were completed, the property was delivered to Mrs. Thomas, and she continued to possess and enjoy and control every part of it until her death.

The answer further states that the consideration for which defendant sold the property was paid in the following manner, viz: Mary Thomas paid the defendant one thousand dollars in cash, one thousand dollars in his own notes which 308
he had given her some time previous for a negro man, and two mules—assumed the payment of his stock note due the Union Bank for $1,333.33, and for the balance she gave him two notes which she paid before her death. The money paid defendant, he states he applied in various ways to his own use, but the great part of it he believes he lost at bragg. Defendant admitted that from the time of the said sale to Mary Thomas he and his family resided with her, but for reasons which he circumstantially states. He alleges that at the time he sold his interest in the pre-emption claims (eight in number) he entered into an obligation by which he bound himself in the penal sum of two thousand dollars that the entries of all said pre-emption claims should be effected; that entries could be made of only four of said claims, for the reason that assignments of the other four could not be obtained from the persons entitled to them. That he was also bound by his said obligation to remain with and overseer for the said Mary Thomas until the price of the four pre-emption claims of which entries could not be effected, being $1200.00, should be satisfied by his personal services or those of a person to be hired by him to supply his place, and in compliance with this undertaking he remained with her. That when the time arrived when he was at liberty to leave without violating his engagement, his mother-in-law, Mrs. Thomas, begged him to remain with her until she could settle her affairs, promising, if he would, to accompany him to Texas. That while engaged in settling her affairs the infirmities of age were daily drawing her nearer to the grave, and defendant in consideration of her situation, added to her entreaties, and a promise of a liberal provision by her will for his children, consented to remain with her until her death. The answer further denies that he enjoyed in any way or shared

Wilson & Cleland vs. Luke Lott—Statement of Case.

309 with Mrs. Thomas, the rents and profits of any part of the property, and that if he intermeddled with the property originally hers or that which she acquired by purchase from him, it was as her agent and overseer.

Allen H. Bush, a witness for complainant, testified that Mary Thomas resided at the place now occupied by Luke Lott from the year 1836 or 1837, to the period of her death which took place in 1847 or 1848. Luke Lott resided at the same place from the same period to the present time, except for a short time in the year 1837 or 1838, when he resided in Marianna. Mrs. Thomas was the mother-in-law of Lott and appeared to be on good terms with him; their personal relations were of the most friendly and confidential kind, and their associations were free and unreserved. That during the years 1836-7-8-9, and 1840, Lott was not a man of much wealth. Witness thinks he was not free from debt, but that he was in embarrassed circumstances, considerably in debt for a greater part if not the whole of the time alluded to. Thinks Mrs. Thomas in 1838 was not wealthy, but was in comfortable circumstances —cannot say in what her property consisted, and cannot say whether her fortune or circumstances were such as to induce her to enter into speculations. The common reputation seemed to be against the fairness of the contracts between Lott and Mrs. Thomas.

Thomas M. White, a witness for complainants, testified that in 1839 Mrs. Thomas lived in the town of Marianna in the family of her son-in-law, Luke Lott—does not know what her occupation was at that time, nor can he say whether or not she was knowing to the indebtedness of Lott. Witness thinks Lott was largely indebted from general reputation.

Michael Lott, a witness for complainants, testified that a most perfect understanding of friendship, respect, good 310 feeling and confidence existed between Mrs. Thomas and Lott, and that there was a great deal of intimacy, confidence and unreserved communication between them, but he could not state whether she knew or was informed of the engagements, bargains and contracts of said Lott, or whether she was apprised of his general or special indebtedness in the years 1837 and 1838, or of his indebtedness to complainants.

Mrs. Sarah Hudson, a witness for defendant, who was a near neighbor of Mrs. Thomas, and intimate with her and Lott, states that she never knew Lott to make use of the property as his own after the sale, or to receive or enjoy the products of the farm or wages of the negroes, or sell any of the personal or real estate until after the death of Mrs. Thomas. She further testifies that she thought it was generally known as she heard both Lott and Mrs. Thomas say it, that Lott sold his property with a view of removing to Texas, and that he was to wait until he could ascertain whether all the pre-emption claims could be perfected, and that finally he was prevailed on by Mrs. Thomas to stay and attend to her business for her. She further testifies that Lott was a favorite son-in-law of Mrs. Thomas, and they were always on good terms—that she always saw Mrs. Thomas exercising control over the property, and that if Lott sold any thing she was told by Mrs. Thomas that he always made a strict settlement with her

John F. O. Thomas testified that he was living near Ochesee at the time of the sale to Mrs. Thomas—that she took possession of the property immediately after the sale, and managed and possessed it for her exclusive benefit, and for her sole right—that Lott, after the sale, never made use of the property as his own, or received or enjoyed the products of the farm, &c., and that if he ever had any thing to do with the property it was as overseer or agent until he, witness, moved to the place, when he, wit- 311 ness, became manager and overseer of the negroes of Mrs. Thomas for about five years. He states that Mrs. Thomas and Lott were very friendly, and that she always placed a great deal of confidence in him, but he does not think that she ever knew anything of Lott's indebtedness. That after the sale Lott lived in one end of a double penned house and Mrs. Thomas in the other, but that Mrs. Thomas managed and controlled the property to suit herself—that he acted as overseer for five years and everything was carried on by her directions. That Lott never assumed any control after the sale, and that when he sold any thing it was by the directions of Mrs. Thomas, and he accounted to her for every thing.

Mrs. Susan C. Carraway testified that she lived with Mrs. Thomas at the time of the purchase by her of Lott's property, and that Mrs. Thomas moved to the place she purchased immediately after and managed and controlled and possessed the property for her own exclusive benefit, and in her sole right. That Lott assumed no control of the property after the sale, or use or sell any portion of it as his own, and that when he had anything to do with it, he acted either as overseer or agent of Mrs. Thomas. She further states that it was generally known that Lott sold his property to Mrs. Thomas for the purpose of removing to Texas; that after the bargain was made Mrs. Thomas sent one of her sons to her house on Stafford Creek (where she resided) for her small trunk which contained her money; that witness saw the money some time before the sale and saw it counted to pay to Lott, but she does not know how much there was. Lott, she says, sold most of the crops, but as soon as he returned he gave Mrs. Thomas an account of the sales and settled with her.

John G. Gamble testified that Lott was the owner of twenty shares of stock in the Union Bank of Florida, and 312 that on the 27th June, 1839, he transferred the same to Mary Thomas. That the bank held Lott's stock note dated 28th December, 1838, for $1,333.33, and that upon the transfer of the shares aforesaid the stock note of Mary Thomas was substituted for that of said Lott.

Joseph Thomas testified that he witnessed the execution of the deeds from Lott to Mrs. Thomas, and that they were fair conveyances, intended to convey absolutely all Lott's interest in the property named, and for the consideration therein expressed; that the transaction was a fair and honest one, and founded on a valuable consideration and that Mary Thomas took possession of the slaves and other property immediately after the sale. He further states that Lott had given his note to Mrs. Thomas for $1,000 for a negro boy and two mules, and that Lott took this note as that much cash in payment for the property sold Mrs. Thomas.

To discredit the testimony of John F. O. Thomas and Joseph Thomas, complainants procured the testimony of Robert L. Harrison, who testified that he was acquainted with both of them, and that their general character or reputation for truth and veracity, was bad in the neighborhood in which they resided in Gadsden county, and that he had no reason to believe it otherwise at the time he testified. That from his knowledge of this general character of John F. O. Thomas and Joseph Thomas, he could not believe either of them under oath in a cause in which they were under the influence of their interest or their affections.

A. L. Woodward for appellants.

1. Fraud is a question of intent, arising upon evidence. It may be imputed, ascertained and established by inference and deduction; and it may also arise upon admission

313 or proof of certain facts, as a presumption of law, not to be rebutted or repelled.

II. The vendee's sanction or concurrence in the vendor's intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, vitiates any agreement or contract, and renders it void as to their claims.

III. The unconditional and absolute sale of a man's entire estate, he being largely indebted in proportion, or in amount equal to its full worth or value, his debts remaining wholly or the greater part unpaid, and the greater portion if not all the purchase price having been retained, reserved and appropriated, applied and expended otherwise—such a transaction, with all its surrounding circumstances, creates the presumption of a fraudulent intent, which, unless rebutted and satisfactorily explained, becomes conclusive.

IV. A secret trust or reservation for the benefit of the vendor or his family, to the exclusion of all or of any of his creditors, renders an agreement or bargain and sale void in toto, or so far as their rights may be affected thereby.

V. The participancy, sanction or concurrence of the vendee, in the intent, purpose, or design of the vendor, to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, may be presumed or inferred from the position, character, connection and circumstances, age, habits and pursuits or occupation of the respective parties to an agreement or bargain and sale, and such a presumption being raised, it becomes conclusive unless repelled and countervailed.

VI. A sale to pay a pre-existing debt, and the continuance of the vendor in possession, authorizes a legal presumption of an agreement or stipulation for the benefit of the vendor, not to be repelled or rebutted by evidence, and is fraudulent per se, and therefore null and void.

VII. The weight of evidence and the force of authority

Hawkins and Campbell for appellees.

WRIGHT, C. J.:

In this case the bill charges in substance, that on the 13th March, 1839, the defendant Lott conveyed to Mary Thomas certain property in the town of Marianna, and a tract of Land in Jackson County—that Lott was the owner of certain lands obtained by pre-emption, which he also conveyed to Mrs. Thomas—that about the same time Lott also conveyed to Mrs. Thomas all his property, of every description—that Lott was then largely indebted to many persons in the county, and particularly to the complainants—that in March, 1840, judgments were obtained at law by complainants, and executions were issued against Lott and returned "nulla bona"—that the sale to Mrs.

Thomas was fraudulent as to creditors—that a merely nom- 315 inal and fictitious consideration was paid, if any—that Mrs. Thomas was in no sort of condition to purchase, was an aged widow—that defendant Lott remained in possession of the property—that Mrs. Thomas lived with Lott, who was her son-in-law—that no separate account was kept of their affairs, and that shortly before the death of Mrs. Thomas, she made a will, devising all her estate to her daughter, Lott's wife, and appointed Lott her executor.

The prayer of the bill is, that the conveyance from Lott to Mary Thomas be set aside as being fraudulent, and that he be required to account as executor, &c.

The answer of the defendant, Lott, states, that in 1838 or '39, he had it in view to go to Texas, and with that intent sold all of his property, real and personal, except notes and accounts, to Mary Thomas—that he had no intention thereby to defraud his creditors—that the property sold went over into the possession of the vendee, who continued in possession until her death—that she paid him the purchase money as agreed on, partly in money, partly in his own notes, and that he lived with his mother-in-law after the sale, and attended to her business as an agent or overseer. He denies all fraud and secret trust—in short denies all the facts sets forth in the bill as a ground for the interference of a Court of Equity.

A Supplemental bill was afterwards filed, charging Mrs. Thomas with knowledge of, and participation in, the fraud of the defendant, Lott. To this Lott answers in effect, that he does not believe that Mrs. Thomas knew of his indebtedness at or before the sale to her.

The testimony of a number of witnesses was taken in the cause, but it is sufficient to say that there is nothing in this to cast suspicion even, upon the truth of Lott's answers. The complainants are therefore in this attitude—they have appealed to the conscience of Lott in relation to 316 the facts on which they rely—he denies the facts charged, and they present no proof to contradict his answers.

It is true, as contended for on the part of the complainants, that fraud is in general, a question of intent, and may be presumed from circumstances, and in some cases the presumption is so strong as to be incapable of being repelled by proof, but in the case before us, the facts disclosed, to-wit, that Lott was largely indebted, that he made the conveyance in question to his mother-in-law, and that he conveyed his entire property, though these may be badges of fraud, yet to say that they constitute fraud in themselves, would be to carry the doctrine beyond the limits of reason or authority, and to shut out the light of wisdom and truth. Here by the evidence brought out by the complainants themselves, we have all these facts explained—all these badges of fraud removed, at least so far as Mrs. Thomas is concerned; for she, it seems, knew nothing of Lott's indebtedness, or of his fraudulent intent, if it existed. She paid for the property purchased, what seems a full and adequate price.

From this state of the case, it follows that Mrs. Thomas must be deemed a bona fide purchaser, for a valuable consideration, without notice even of Lott's indebtedness.

Let the decree of the court below be affirmed.

THOMPSON, J.:

I concur in the judgment of affirmance of the decree rendered in this cause in the court below.

The question raised in this case is simply one of fact—whether the parties to the conveyance complained of were guilty of an actual fraud; or, whether those facts and circumstances existed, and attended the transaction, which work the same mischief, and which in contemplation of

Wilson & Cleland vs. Luke Lott.—Opinion of Court.

317 law are deemed badges of fraud, or presumptions of ill faith, and from which the law, upon principles of public policy, deduces a fraudulent intent, and declares the contract void as to creditors—in other words, whether the transaction is tainted by fraud in fact, or fraud by construction of law.

It was remarked by Ld. Ch. Elden, in the case of Mortlock vs. Buller, (10 Ves. R., 306,) that the court has never ventured to lay down, as a general proposition, what shall constitute fraud; nor does it seem possible that any fixed and invariable rule can be established on this point, which would not be liable to be circumvented, and utterly defeated by new schemes, which the fertility of man's inventive genius would contrive. The question of fraud is one of motive and intent, and can rarely, if ever, be considered as a single fact, but a conclusion to be inferred from all the circumstances of the case. In the proof, however, the same general rule prevails in equity, as at law; it is not to be presumed, but must be proved.

The counsel for the appellants has argued this case upon the assumption, that in a Court of Equity, fraud may be presumed, and that in this a diversity exists between such tribunal and a Court of Law. In this, the counsel has laid down the position too broadly. I am aware that fraud is always secret; that where persons design to commit it, they do not publish their motives and intentions, for this would be to defeat the end they aim at; and I am also fully aware how difficult it is to demonstrate the intention from the overt acts and conduct of the parties; yet these difficulties furnish no reason for the assertion of the power, by a Judge, guided by no more certain rule than his own arbitrary conclusions, to presume a fraudulent intent from what has been called the moral evidence, but which, however, may more correctly be termed his own vague sus-318 picions of the nature and character of the transaction, unassisted and uncontrolled by any certain and fixed principles. In such case, every transaction would be dependent on the peculiar notions of the Judge, as to what would constitute good or ill faith. The fairest transaction, in the view of a suspicious mind, might be deemed fraudulent, while to another mind of an opposite cast, a course of conduct justly obnoxious to censure, would escape with impunity.

When it is said that fraud may be presumed in a Court of Equity, when the same presumptions will not be entertained in a Court of Law, it is to be understood, that in some peculiar and particular cases there exist exceptions to the general rule before laid down. The subjects of these exceptions will be found in those two species of fraud which are mentioned in the classification of Ld. Ch. Hardwicke in the case of Chesterfield vs. Jansen, (2 Ves. R., 155,) as the second and third kinds of fraud. The learned Chancellor thus classifies the different kinds of fraud:

"First, then, fraud, which is dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition, which is the plainest case.

"Secondly, it may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself, such as no man in his senses, and not under delusion, would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man accept on the other, which are unequitable and unconscientious bargains.

"3. A third kind of fraud is that which may be presumed from the circumstances and condition of the parties contracting; and this goes further than the rule of law, which is, that it must be proved, not presumed. But it is wisely established in this court to prevent taking surreptitious advantage of the weakness or necessity of another, which, knowingly to do, is equally against conscience as to take advantage of his ignorance; a person 319 is equally unable to judge for himself in one as in the other.

"4. A fourth kind of fraud may be collected or inferred, in the consideration of this court, from the nature and circumstances of the transaction as being an imposition and deceit upon the other persons not parties to the fraudulent agreement.

"5. The last head of fraud on which there has been relief, is that which infects catching bargains with heirs, reversioners or expectants, in the life of the father, &c., against which relief always extends. These have been generally mixed cases, compounded of all, or several species of fraud, there being sometimes proof of actual fraud, which is decisive."

It will be apparent, from this quotation, that the presumptions arising from the intention, or moral evidence, as it has been termed, are alone applicable to those cases which arise under the second and third divisions, and to those under the fifth, which partake of the nature of the two former; in all other cases, the general rule must prevail. And even in the excepted cases referred to, Courts of Equity are as little warranted as Courts of Law in imputing or presuming fraud, upon the mere arbitrary notions of the Judge, but under each head certain bounds and limits have been established, within which the discretion of the Judge is to be exercised, and which are already as widely extended as is consistent with a due regard to the inviolability of the right to contract. It seems hardly necessary to add that this case does not come within any of the exceptions, but is to be determined by the application of the general rule; and those marks, badges or presumptions of fraud, which are inferred by law, are, and must be, deduced from facts, which it allows to be rebutted by evi- 320 dence.

The facts and circumstances of this case, as drawn from the evidence, may be succinctly stated as follows:

It appears that in March, 1839, the respondent, Luke Lott, being then and before that time, largely indebted to the appellants and others, (although it does not appear that he was actually insolvent,) and having determined to remove to the Republic of Texas, made a sale of all his property, real and personal, to Mrs. Mary Thomas, his mother-in-law, for the sum of $9,600, which said sum appears to have been the full value of the property conveyed, and was paid partly in cash upon the execution of the conveyance, partly in the promissory notes of the vendor, and for the residue the vendee, Mrs. Thomas, gave her own notes, which were subsequently paid. That immediately upon the sale and conveyance before mentioned, Mrs. Thomas took possession of the property conveyed, removing her slaves and other property, to the farm purchased of Lott, and exercised dominion and control over the same as owner, and for her sole and exclusive use and benefit, until the period of her death, which occurred in 1846. It further appears, that a part of the property sold consisted of eight pre-emption claims, and that it was stipulated in relation to these by a separate agreement, that if it should happen that any of these claims should not be located and entered, then the vendor, Lott, should indemnify the vendee to the value thereof in serving her as an overseer, or to employ one for her at his expense; that entries of some of these claims were not effected, and that Lott, in conformity with his agreement, reimbursed Mrs. Thomas by services in the capacity of overseer, but the precise times when this service commenced and when it terminated are not stated; it is stated in Lott's answer, that he was so employed for several years; and that afterwards he was induced to abandon his design of removing to Texas, by the entreaties of his mother-in-law, and by her promise to provide liberally for his children in her will, which, as it further appears she did, by devising and bequeathing to them her entire estate.

The evidence is full that Mrs. Thomas was most tenderly attached to her daughter, Mrs. Lott, and also to her son-in-law, the defendant Lott, and that she always opposed most earnestly the removal to Texas, especially as she considered herself too far advanced in life to accompany them.

The appellants became judgment creditors in 1841, and filed their bill seeking to set aside the conveyance on the ground of fraud, in 1847, after the death of Mrs. Thomas. The counsel for appellants, besides the argument before referred to, following the allegations of the bill of complaint, contended for an inference of fraud deducible from the following circumstances:—1. The relationship by affinity between the vendor and Mrs. Thomas, the vendee; 2. The large indebtedness of Lott to complainant and others at the time of the sale; 3. The actual or presumed knowledge of Mrs. Thomas of the fact of such indebtedness, and of a design to assist Lott in a fraud upon his creditors; 4. That the sale was not made upon a good and valuable consideration; and 5. That possession did not accompany and follow the conveyance, but continued in the vendor.

The fact of the relationship between the parties is not per se a badge or mark of fraud. I am not aware of any principle of equity which regards a sale and conveyance by one relative to another, standing alone, as a circumstance of suspicion. Combined with other circumstances, it may serve to elucidate, explain, or give color to a transaction, such as a sale at a considerable under value, &c., &c. (Copes vs. Middleton, 2 Madd. R., 409,) If it is 322 combined with the ground subsequently alleged, of the large indebtedness of the vendor, it is still not of any importance; nor do the facts taken in connection amount to a badge or mark of fraud. And even if the two preceding facts be combined with an allegation of an actual knowledge, on the part of Mrs. Thomas, of the indebtdness and embarrassment of Luke Lott, (assuming such allegation to have been maintained by proof,) it will not make out a case of fraud. In Barrow vs. Bailey, (5 Florida R. 25,) this court held "that one in failing circumstances, or "even insolvent, has a right to sell or assign his property, "except as against pre-existing liens, for the purpose of "paying his debts; and if he has the right to sell, of course "any one has the corresponding right to purchase. The "only limitation upon the exercise of these rights is, that "the sale and purchase be in good faith, and for a valuable "consideration. If the appellant's purchase falls within "this rule—if he purchased from the vendor in good faith "and for a fair price—it is perfectly immaterial whether "said vendor was embarrassed, or insolvent, or otherwise, or whether the condition of his affairs was or was "not known to the vendee."

But there is no evidence of any knowledge on the part of Mrs. Thomas of the condition of her son-in-law's pecuniary affairs; and if Lott entertained within his own heart any design to defraud his creditors, there is no proof in the record before us that Mrs. Tomas knew of it, much less participated with him in carrying it into execution. It was a fact to be proved by the complainants, and the respondents might well have relied on the maxim, idem est non esse et non apparare; but there is affirmative proof, tending to negative the fact of knowledge of Lott's indebtedness—there is proof that at some period subsequent to the sale, she reproached Lott for having kept the circumstance of his indebtedness concealed from her. It is sup- 323 posed by the counsel for complainants that a presumption of knowledge arises from the relationship between Mrs. Thomas and Lott, and he cites the case of Barrowe vs. Bailey as authority for such position. But there is a misapprehension of the decision of the court. In the case cited, there was an admission in the answer of Barrow as to a correspondence between himself and his brother-in-law in relation to the pecuniary embarrassment of the latter, the substance of which correspondence was claimed to have been set forth in the answer, but the letters themselves were not produced in evidence, as they should have been, and the court, in the absence of the letters, assumed that Doggett had been as full and unreserved in his communitions with his brother-in-law as he had been to the witnesses, who were strangers, and especially as Mr. Barrow had during the correspondence, required full and particular information as to his correspondent's pecuniary condition, and what he expected and hoped for. See 5 Florida R., 22, 23.

As to the fourth ground taken, that is fully and flatly contradicted by the evidence in the record. There is no evidence that the property, sold and conveyed was rated at an under value, and the proof is full that the consideration agreed upon was fully paid. That the money paid did not reach the hands of Lott's creditors, in discharge of their respective claims, but was in fact lost at the gaming table, was no fault of Mrs. Thomas, and the consequence thereof, or the punishment therefor, should not be visited or inflicted upon her or her devisees and legatees, the children of Luke Lott.

It is next assumed that the transaction is fraudulent because possession did not accompany and follow the deed, but remained unchanged in Luke Lott. Is this true in point of fact? The answer of Lott is in strict response to 324 the bill in this particular, and not only stands uncontradicted, but is supported by the testimony of the other witnesses, John F. O. Thomas, Mrs. Hudson and Mrs. Carraway. He avers a delivery of possession by himself, and an acceptance by Mrs. Thomas, immediately upon the sale and conveyance, and that Mrs. Thomas removed her other personal property to the farm purchased from Lott, and continued to occupy and possess it, and all the property thereon and attached thereto, exercising full and complete dominion over all for herself as owner.

It is, however, supposed that the evidence establishes a possession by Lott in common with Mrs. Thomas, continued from the time of sale; but I do not concur with the counsel in this view. Lott having sold off all his property, with the design of going to Texas, it was most natural and reasonable that he should be the guest of his wife's mother until his affairs were so arranged as to enable him to execute his intention. The testimony negatives positively any control over or interference with the property by him until his term of service commenced as her overseer, and then also the evidence is clear that he never exceeded the usual control of an overseer, but always preserved that character, conforming to the directions and orders of Mrs. Thomas.

When this term of service commenced as overseer, I have before remarked, does not appear; but it was to commence, according to the agreement for the sale of the preemption claims, so soon as it was ascertained that the contingency happened of a failure to effect entries of said claims in the land office, or of some of them. From the very nature of the case, some time must necessarily elapse before this could be ascertained, whether he should either serve as overseer, or provide her one, if he did not wish to 325 be detained in the prosecution of his purpose to remove to Texas; and hence it was to be performed at some future time. It does not appear at whose instance this stipulation was inserted in the agreement, but I think the conjecture suggested at the bar, that it was insisted upon by Mrs. Thomas, with a view to retard and put obstacles in the way of, if not wholly thwart, Lott's removal, with his wife and children, a very reasonable and probable presumption. There was no continuance in possession by Lott in the capacity of owner and proprietor, but the change was so open and notorious to the neighbors that it seems to have been observed by all. There was no agreement that Lott was to have any use and benefit from the property as lessee or hirer; no agreement that he should continue in the possession; no devisum imperium; no united or common possession; in fact, no such continuation of possession from which a secret trust or reservation in favor of the vendor can be inferred.

In the case of Gibson vs. Love, decided in this court, (4 Florida R., 217,) cited at the bar, a slave had been sold in discharge of a precedent debt due from the vendor to the vendee, but it was stipulated and agreed that the slave should continue in the possession of the vendor, as before the sale, and for his ease and convenience, he promising to pay the vendee a hire equal to the legal rate of interest on the price agreed upon. The court properly held that the continuation of possession by the vendor was not sufficiently explained by the evidence to repel the inference of fraud which, in the contemplation of law, was deducible therefrom; that the appropriate evidence to rebut the presumption, is an explanation of the intention, to show either that it is consistent with the deed, or is unavoidable, &c. The want of analogy between the case cited and the case at bar, is ob-326 vious. Here there is no retention of possession by the vendor, either alone or jointly with his vendee.

With respect to the allegation in the appellant's bill of complaint of the pecuniary inability of Mrs. Thomas to make the purchase of Lott, it will be sufficient to say that the effort to sustain it by proof was very feeble. One witness only was examined upon the point, and his statement is very vague and indefinite. He says she was not wealthy, but was in comfortable circumstances. The sequel, however, sustains her ability. It is proved that she paid for the property in full, and this is amply sufficient to negative the allegation of the bill.

Upon the whole case, I am perfectly satisfied that the appellants, who were complainants in the court below, have utterly failed to make out a case for relief, and that the court below committed no error in the rendition of the decree dismissing the bill of complaint.

SEMMES, J., in assenting to the judgment of the court, was understood to adopt the reasons contained in the Opinion delivered by Justice Thompson.

Per totam curiam. Judgment affirmed with costs.

THOMAS JORDAN, APPELLANT, VS. HENRY C. PETTY, ROBERT A. WARE, ET AL., APPELLEES.

1. Where a judgment upon a verdict was defectively entered, and the court afterwards, on motion, ordered a new judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc, such latter entry, as between the parties to the record, relates back to the date of the first entry, and is to be regarded and treated to all intents as entered at that time; and it will rectify and cure any variance between the original entry of the judgment and the execution issued thereon.

2. When a fieri facias, or other execution, is taken out on a judgment within 327
the time limited by law, and which is not executed, the plaintiff may sue out a new writ of execution at any time afterwards without a scire facias; provided the first writ be returned and filed.

On appeal from an order quashing an execution issued in favor of the appellant against the respondents, and which had been levied on the goods of respondent, Robert A. Ware. The facts are set forth in the opinion of the court, to which reference is made.

Davis for Appellant.

Hawkins for Appellee.

THOMPSON, J.:

The facts of this case appear to be as follows:

In 1840, a suit was instituted by attachment in the Superior Court of the Apalachicola District of the Territory of Florida, for Franklin County, in favor of Thomas Jordan, against Henry C. Petty, Augustus P. Clayton, William Bilbro, John Bilbro, and the respondent, Robert A. Ware, as the owners of the steamer Alabama, upon a demand for services; which attachment was levied upon the steamboat in April, 1841. The record states that the defendants appeared by Semmes, Campbell and Stone, their attornies, and pleaded the general issue, and a trial, verdict and judgment were had, but the latter did not specify the names of the defendants, simply stating "Henry C. Petty, &c." On the 3d May, 1841, a fieri facias issued on this judgment against all the defendants named in the writ and declaration, under which a part of the sum recovered was levied, by a sale of the property attached, and was returned nulla bona as to the residue.

No further action appears to have been had until 1849, when an alias writ of fieri facias was sued out of the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court for the Western Circuit, 328 sitting in Franklin County, likewise against all the defendants named in the declaration, which writ being levied on the goods of R. A. Ware, was, at the April term, 1849, of the said Circuit Court, quashed on his motion, because of the defect in the judgment entered in April, 1841, only one of the defendants being named therein. At the same April term, 1849, and after the order was entered quashing the execution, the plaintiff, Jordan, moved the court for leave to enter up judgment on the verdict rendered in the cause at the April term, 1841, of the Superior Court, "a sufficient judgment having been omitted to have been entered at the time;" upon which motion, after argument of counsel for both parties, as the record states, it was ordered that said motion be granted, and that judgment should be then entered up as of the April term, 1841, which was done accordingly.

On the 23d of February, 1850, the plaintiff sued out another writ of fieri facias on the judgment entered up nunc pro tunc, at the April term, 1849, which was levied on the 9th of February, 1852, upon the goods of the defendant, Ware. On the 10th of February, on a suggestion of illegality or irregularity in the issue of the execution, the same was, by order of the Judge of the Western Circuit, superseded until the ensuing term of the court, and the goods levied upon surrendered to the defendant, Ware, on stipulation, with security, to abide the judgment of the court. And at the April term, 1853, the affidavit of illegality was sustained on the ground of irregularity, the execution having issued without a previous scire facias, sued out, and fiat thereon, and the writ was quashed.

The error assigned here is on the order last mentioned of April term, 1853, and the case rests upon the effect to be 329 given to the entry of judgment, nunc pro tunc, at the April term, 1849.

The error in entering the judgment of the Court at April term, 1841, it is contended, is a misprison of the Clerk of the Court, and our practice may, possibly, be so considered, although the plaintiff, or his attorney, is not entirely blameless, it being his duty to attend to the entries made by the Clerk in his case at the time of making the entry, and if he is not satisfied with it, should bring the matter to the attention of the Court. But this is a matter properly for the consideration of the Court on a motion to enter judgment nunc pro tunc. Here it has been entered, and the propriety of the order directing it, is not before us for review.

The granting of such leave is, in all cases, a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court. Mr. Tidd, speaking of such applications to enter judgment nunc pro tunc, against executors and administrators, says that in granting this indulgence, the courts will take care that it shall not operate to the prejudice of the defendant, by imposing terms upon the plaintiff, as that he shall undertake not to disturb intermediate payments made by the defendant, or impeach judgments obtained in the interval. 2 Tidd Pr. 933, citing 6 Term Rep. 11, and Lloyd vs. Howell, Admr., H. 37, Geo. III. R. B., 4 Taunt. R., 702. 1 Young & Jer. R. 368. And he also says, that if the defendant dies in vacation, judgment may be entered after his death, as of the preceding term, when he was living, and it will be a good judgment at common law, as of that term. 2 Tidd Pr., 939. There can be no doubt but that the effect of the judgment entry actually made at the April term, 1849, nunc pro tunc, is to make the judgment relate back to the April term, 1841, and is to be regarded as a judgment of that term. If this were not so, and the time of the actual 330 entry could be enquired into, the caution which Mr. Tidd says, the courts always observe, would be a mere idle ceremony, wholly useless and unnecessary. So also the entry of judgment against one who dies in vacation, as of a preceding term when he was alive, would be of little avail to the plaintiff, if the date of actual entry could be enquired into upon a writ of error, coram vobis. The judgment must be regarded, certainly for all purposes of the present case, as of the term of April, 1841. It is now contended that, considering this as the date of the judgment, no legal, regular or valid execution issued thereon within three years after the rendition of the judgment; that the plaintiff should have sued out a scire facias quare executionem non, to obtain his writ of fieri facias; and having sued out the writ on the 23d of February, 1850, without such revival, it was irregular and properly quashed.

At common law it, in a personal action, the plaintiff suffered his judgment to lie for a year and a day without suing out an execution, he could not do so afterwards, but was put to his action of debt upon the judgment. This inconvenience was remedied by the Statute Westm. 2, (13 Ed. I,) c. 45, which gave the plaintiff a scire facias in such case, to revive the judgment, and obtain execution thereon.

Our statute has extended this time to three years. The general rule here, therefore, is that if the plaintiff does not sue out his execution within the time of three years after the rendition of his judgment, he must, in order to obtain the fruits thereof, adopt either his common law remedy, of an action upon the judgment, or a scire facias under the statute.

This general rule, however, is to be understood with some exceptions, among which is this: When a fieri facias or other writ of execution is taken out, within the time limited, and not executed, a new writ of execution may be sued out at any time afterwards, without a scire facias, 331 provided the first writ be returned and filed. 2 Tidd. Pr., 1104, citing 2 Wils. R., 82; Barnes Notes 213, S. C. Is not this case within the exception? An execution was sued out on the 3d day of May, 1841; within the regular time after judgment, which has not been executed, and which has been returned and filed in the office. It is said the writ is irregular, because it is upon a judgment against several persons jointly, and the judgment of 1841, when it was issued, was against Henry C. Petty only. But the answer to this is obvious. The judgment entered in 1849 corrected the error, and as it was entered nunc pro tunc, it related back, and by intendment of law, is a judgment of 1841, and the execution issued on the 3d of May, 1841, is in conformity with it in all respects, as it now stands upon the roll. The whole error has been in not taking a correct view of the order of April, 1849, correcting the entry of the judgment. As between the parties to the record, it must be regarded consistently, either as of the date 1841 or 1849. It cannot partake of both dates. If of the date of April, 1841, then the case comes within the exception before laid down, and the writ issued in 1850 was a regular and valid execution. If of the date 1849, then the writ was issued within the limitation fixed by our statute of three years, and is, of course regular; so that qua cunque via data, it is a good and valid writ, and should have been supported.

It was urged upon the argument, by the counsel for respondent that the judgment entered in this case was voidable for error in fact; that the attorneys who appeared and pleaded for the defendants therein, were not authorized by the defendant, Ware, to make such appearance and file such plea, and that all courts may collaterally pass upon the question whether this opinion be correct or not, as applicable to courts of original jurisdiction. We are perfectly clear that this court, as one of appellate jurisdiction, 332 cannot thus pass upon the question. If the point was made and adjudicated in this case in the court below, which does not, however, appear, the decision must have been against the respondent, as the order of April term, 1853, which is the order appealed from, only avoids the execution, and the omission by the respondent to enter an appeal, would amount to a waiver and acquiescence. But the point does not appear to have been adjudicated in the court below. We can take notice in this court of an error of law appearing on the face of the record, but we cannot do so of an error of fact, unless it is a matter on which an appeal or writ of error is based, and regularly assigned for error in this court. If there is such error of fact existing in the case, it must be brought to the notice of the Circuit Court, by writ of error coram vobis, or other appropriate remedy.

For the foregoing reasons, we are of opinion that there is error in the order of the court of April, 1853, which is appealed from, and the same should be reversed and set aside, with costs.

Per totam curiam. Order reversed and set aside.

1. The 3 § of the 5th article of the Constitution, giving power to the Judges of the Circuit Court, or a majority of them, to preside in the Supreme Court, and hold the sessions thereof, was temporary and special, and does not apply to the court as it is at present constituted, so far as to authorise a majority of the Justices to hold a term.
2. The 5th section of the act of January 11,1851, by necessary implication, re-

Griffin, Sheriff, Adm'r., vs. Orman.—Opinion of Court.

333 quires the action of three Judges in every case, who must all hear the argument, and confer together upon the judgment, although two being a majority, may pronounce the judgment of the court.

On motion, raising the question whether or not two Justices of the Supreme Court constitute a quorum for the purpose of hearing and deciding causes.

Bush and Campbell contra.

THOMPSON, J.:

The motion made in this case raises the question whether two Justices of this court do or do not constitute a quorum for the purpose of hearing and deciding causes pending therein; and as it is desirable that the opinion of all the Justices should be had upon this point, as a question of general importance, I have consented to hear the argument and express my opinion thereon, although I am disqualified, by reason of having been of counsel for one of the parties in the court below, from taking any part in the adjudication of the merits of the controversy.

It is not controverted that, though there be no express words in the act of January 11, 1851, entitled "An Act to organize the Supreme Court of the State of Florida," (Pamp. Laws 5th Session, 1850-'51, pp. 121, 122,) which requires the action of three Judges upon every case tried before it, yet that such joint action is rendered absolutely necessary by implication from the terms of the 5th section. That section provides "that whenever, from any cause, any "one or two Justices of the Supreme Court are disqualified "or disabled from hearing and determining any cause "brought before them, it shall be the duty of the Justices of "the said court to notify the same to any one or two Judges 334 "of the Circuit Court, as the case may be, and the time "and place when such causes shall be set or hearing; and "it is hereby made the duty of such Circuit Judge or "Judges, upon receiving such notice, to attend at the time "and place designated, and he or they shall be and are "hereby invested with full authority, in conjunction with "the remaining Justice or Justices of the Supreme Court; "to hear and determine the causes of which they were no-"tified as aforesaid."

Nothing can be plainer than this language. If one Justice is disqualified, one Circuit Judge is to be notified, and so, if two Justices are disqualified, then the attendance of two of the Circuit Judges is to be called for, and the court, thus constituted, is to act, in the one case with two Justices, and in the other, with the remaining Justice of the Supreme Court. In all cases one Justice of the Supreme Court must be upon the bench, for there is no provision for the case where all the Justices of this Court are disqualified.

It being clear that the act of the General Assembly contemplates the action of three Judges, to constitute a court for the trial of every cause, it follows that the three Judges must all be present when the act is done, though it is not necessary that they should all concur in the judgment to be pronounced. See 2 East. R. 244; 8 East. R., 319, 327, n. (a); 6 John. R., 41

But it is argued that this requisition, or provision of the act before referred to, is inconsistent with the 3d section of the 5th Article of the Constitution, which, it is supposed, confers all the powers of the Court upon a majority of the Judges. I have examined the section, and given to the argument based thereon, the most attentive consideration, and I am satisfied that the interpretation contended for cannot be sustained. The section in question is clearly temporary in its character. It provides that for five years from the election of the Circuit Court Judges under its au- 335 thority, and thereafter, until the General Assembly shall otherwise provide, the powers of the Supreme Court shall be vested in and its duties be performed by the Judges of the Circuit Courts, and directs that they, or a majority of them, should hold sessions of the Supreme Court at such times as should be directed by law. It seems to me that it is utterly impossible to render this more plain and intelligible by argument or illustration. The whole section applies to a provisional organization of the court, and the power to discharge the duties appertaining to the office of Justices, was delegated to the Circuit Judges, or a majority of them, expressly by the title of their offices, and has no reference to the permanent organization which, it was contemplated, would be made at a future period. There was, also, a substantial reason why a majority of the Circuit Judges should be so authorized. The province of the Supreme Court is to correct the errors of the Circuit Courts, sitting as courts of original jurisdiction in the several Circuits; and if the authority had been given to the Judges of the Circuit Courts simply, and not to a majority of them, the whole number, by the rules of the common law, would be compelled to act jointly in the execution of the power, although a majority would govern as to their judgments; and thus the provision would have been brought in direct conflict with the 18th section of the same act, which directs that "no justice of the Supreme Court shall "sit as Judge, or take part in the Appellate Court, on the "trial or hearing of any cause which shall have been de-"cided by him in the court below." The design of the convention, in the provisional constitution of the court, would have been utterly defeated, but for the clause vesting the power in a majority of the Circuit Court Judges; there would have been a Supreme Court, but it could not proceed in any case, for each one, by the 18th section, was 336
disqualified to sit upon and determine the cause he had decided as a Circuit Court Judge, and if he retired, the residue were powerless to act, because the authority was jointly to the whole number. But it is sufficient to say that the 3d section can have no reference to the court as it is at present organized, by the acts of January 11th and January 23d, 1851. The present organization is under the authority of the 1st and 2d sections of the 5th Article of the Constitution, which merely creates the court, with the outlines of its jurisdiction, leaving to the General Assembly the power and duty of regulating such jurisdiction within the limts of the Consttution, and leaving also to that department the power of fixing the number of the Judges. The act of 1851, before referred to, does not, as before remarked, declare that any number less than the whole number of the Justices shall form a quorum, but seems to contemplate a joint action, and such has been the interpretation hitherto put upon it, and acquiesced in until the present time.

No reference was made upon the argument to the act of July 25, 1845, in relation to the Supreme Court, (Thom. Dig. 51, art. 12,) the 8th section of which provides that three Justices shall be a quorum to transact the business of the court, and if three do not attend on the first day of the term, the Sheriff shall adjourn the court, from day to day, for a week, and then if three do not attend, to adjourn it for the term. Some portions of the act of 1845 is undoubtedly repealed by the provisions of the acts of 1851, but this section has been considered as untouched by the latter statutes, and has been repeatedly acted upon since, as will be seen from the records of this court at Tallahassee, Jacksonville, Tampa, and at this place. At each point, owing to various unavoidable accidents, the Justices 337 of this court have been prevented from assembling on the day appointed by law for the opening of the term; and but for this section of the act of 1845 the terms would have been lost, and much delay and inconvenience would have resulted, in ordering extra or special terms.

In my opinion, there is but one course to pursue, and that is the one provided for by the act of 1851. The Justices of this Court must notify the fact of the disqualification of one of their number to one of the Circuit Court Judges, and to inform him of the time and place appointed for the hearing of the cause, and that the case be continued until that time.

WRIGHT, C. J., and SEMMES, J., concurred in the views, and adopted the conclusions announced by Justice Thompson.

JOSEPH FORSYTH AND EZEKIEL SIMPSON, APPELLANTS, VS. GEORGE PERRY, APPELLEE.

1. In all relations and in all matters, except as to crimes, a slave is regarded by our law as property; and therefore the rule that the principal is not liable to one agent, or employee, for damages occasioned by the negligence or misconduct of another agent or employee, is not applicable to slaves.
2. The contract of hiring of a slave, between the owner and the hirer, constitutes a bailment of the slave, and the hirer is bound to take ordinary care of him.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Santa Rosa County.

This was an action of trespass on the case, instituted by the Appellee, to recover the value of a negro slave who 338 was drowned in the attempt to execute an order of the Mate of a Steamboat belonging to Appellants. The negro slave was hired to the Appellants, to be employed as a hand on board their Steamboat, and whilst in their employ the order was given which resulted in the loss of the slave to the Appellee.

Campbell for Appellants:

Both the mate and the negro being in the employ of the Appellants, and engaged in the same business, and the loss of the negro having been caused by the misconduct of the mate alone, the action cannot be maintained. Story on Agency, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568; Priestly vs. Fowler, 3 Mees. & Welsh, 1; Farwell vs. Boston & Worcester R. R. Co., 4 Met., 49.

The law is that the master is liable to third persons for the misfeasances, negligences and omissions of duty of his servants and agents. Story on Agency, 564. But, according to the above authorities, where one servant is injured by another engaged in the same service, and whilst transacting the business of the common master, the servant, so injured, is not such third person as to bring the master within the rule. The servant's remedy in such a case is against the wrongdoer himself.

With regard to injuries to third persons the responsibility of the master springs from the duty he owes to society so to conduct his business that third persons shall not be injured thereby. But there is no obligation on the part of the master that the agent or servant shall suffer no injury from the negligence of others employed in the same service. The relation of the parties is created by contract, with a full knowledge of the risks and responsibilities of the business; and it is to be presumed that those risks and responsibilities are provided against by the contract.

The law of master and servant applies to this case, and 339 not that relating to the hiring of chattels. Story on Bailment, 571, '72; Boyce vs. Anderson, 2 Peters' R., 150.

As between a master and his slave, the latter is property, and nothing but property; but he may, as to third persons, occupy the same relation as a freeman. There is no difference between the relation which a slave, employed as a mariner, holds to the owners and officers of a ship, and that existing between the latter and a freeman before the mast. In the case of Booth et al. vs. Schooner L'Esparanza, Bee. Rep., 92, it was held that a master could sue in the District Court of the U. S. for the wages of his slave as a mariner.

The true test of the responsibility of the appellants is, whether the owners of a vessel are responsible for injuries received by a sailor, in consequence of the negligence or misconduct of the mate. To apply any other would be to throw greater safeguards around the person of a slave than a freeman, and to permit the master to enjoy the profits of an avocation, and yet relieve him from an important risk incident to it—the danger to his property from the misconduct of subordinates.

Hawkins for Appellee:

First. Forsyth and Simpson are liable by force of the general rule, that the principal is liable civilter, in all cases, for the negligence, misfeasance, malfeasance or omissions of duty on the part of his agent, in the course of his employment, although the principal did not know of, or authorize or participate in the act, &c.

The principal of respondeat superior is founded on public policy, justice and convenience. See Story on Agency, 554, 555, §452.

2. Perry, as to Forsyth and Simpson, must be considered as a third person; he did not hire himself—he hired his property. 340

Negro slaves are regarded as property in all civil suits; as persons, only when held amenable for crimes. 5 S. & M., 609; 6 How. Miss. R., 35.

3. Being property, reasonable care should have been had of the slave hired. See Boyce vs. Anderson, 2 Pet. U. S. R., 150; 4 Porter, 434.

The exception to the general rule, viz: where different agents are employed in the same business of a common employer, in case one agent receives an injury from a co-agent, he must seek his redress against the co-agent and not against the principal or common employer, has no application here. Story on Agency, 564.

First. Because, as before stated, the hiring of the slave was a bailment, the "locatio conductio rei," with ALL its incidents, attributes and responsibilities.

Second. Because the negro was under the direction and control of the captain of the boat, an employee, and the agent of Forsyth and Simpson. (See Ohio case, where the co-agent was free and not a slave;—this, therefore, is an a fortiori case.—Newspaper.)

Third. The exception to the rule applies to persons and not to property.

The negro slave cannot hire himself—possesses no free-will, option or discretion as to his employment—he cannot, if he would, leave the service of his employer in case of harsh treatment. He cannot be a spy or check upon the other employees, give notice of their dereliction from duty, or correct it in any way.

A slave cannot be an agent. The exception contemplates free white agents, ex necesistate rei. Interest of the owner, and humanity to the slave, forbid the application

Forsyth & Simpson vs. Perry.—Opinion of Court.

341 of the rule as contended for. See Scudder vs. Woodbridge. 1 Georgia Rep., 195.

SEMMES, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This was an action of trespass on the case, brought by the respondent against the appellants, as owners of the Steamboat "General Hamer," to recover the value of a negro slave, the property of respondent, and who was hired on board said boat, and alleged to have been lost through the carelessness and misconduct of the mate. The slave was ordered to jump on board said steamer from a flat-boat lying along-side. In the attempt to do so, he struck the guards of the steamer, fell into the water and was drowned.

On the trial of the cause, upon the plea of the general issue, the court below instructed the jury—First. That a principal is liable civilly for any act of his agent, when there was negligence, if done within the scope of his authority; and, Secondly, That if the jury were satisfied that the mate was in the employ of the defendants, and he gave an order to the slave which no ordinarily prudent man would have given, and that in consequence of this order the negro was lost, they should find for the plaintiff; but if on the contrary, they were satisfied that the order was not an unusual one, under the circumstances, and that there was not gross negligence in giving the order, they should find for the defendants.

The jury returned a verdict for the respondent, and thereby established the fact of gross negligence on the part of the mate in giving the order which resulted in the death of the slave.

Appellants' counsel, in excepting to the charge of the court, contends, that the right of action was against the mate, and not the owners of the boat; that by reason of 342 the mate and the slave being at the time in the employ of the Appellants, and engaged in the same business, and the loss of the slave having been caused by the misconduct of the mate alone, this action cannot be maintained.

The rule of law cannot be questioned, that civiliter, the principal is liable to third persons for the misfeasances, negligences and torts of his agent, in the course of his employment, though he did not authorize, justify or participate in the act, or misconduct of the agent. In all such cases, says Judge Story, the rule applies, respondeat superior, and it is founded on public policy and convenience. Story on Agency, § 452. The justice and propriety of maintaining this responsibility on the part of the principal, results from the implied guaranty on his part, not only as to the qualifications of the agent, but that within the scope of his agency he will act with fidelity and a due regard to the rights of others. The force and application of this principle is sought to be evaded in argument, by insisting that the owner of the slave is not to be considered in the light of a third person, entitled to compensation for his loss against the Appellants; and the exception to the rule is relied on, as supporting this view of the relative rights and liabilities of the parties to this suit. The exception is, that when different agents are employed in the same business, the principal is not liable for any injury done to one agent by another agent, while engaged in the same common employment, and the reason assigned is, that the mere relation of principal and agent creates no contract, and therefore no duty on the principal that the servant or agent shall suffer no injury from the negligence of others employed by him in the same business, and that in such cases the servant or agent takes upon himself the hazard of every such injury, and his remedy, therefore, lies solely against the immediate wrong-doer. Story on Agency, §453. 343

The principle here asserted is doubtless as true as the rule itself. But while the facts of this case bring it within the rule, they necessarily exclude it from the exception. The effect of the argument, as will be seen, is to destroy the identity of the slave, and substitute the owner in his place. But the owner does not hire himself. He is not in the employ of the party, and in no light can he be regarded as his agent. The sole relation he occupies to the common employer is, as bailor of the property, and his right of action for any wrong done the slave, either against the immediate wrong-doer or his principal, grows out of the fact that the slave is property and he the owner. The words servant and agent, used in the exception to the rule, and in the authorities relied on, are relative terms, and must in the very nature of things, have no reference to free white persons; for it cannot be seriously contended that a slave is to be considered, in any legal sense, the agent of his employer. In a limited sense, it is true, he is a servant, but he certainly does not occupy the higher relation of agent. The doctrine of agency is founded upon reciprocal rights and duties. The slave has none of these. The fact of his being a slave, places him beyond the operation of this law. The very position he occupies, and is recognized by the law, renders it impossible to embrace him within that class of persons referred to. Unlike white persons, the slave does not, upon entering into the service of another, voluntarily incur the risks and dangers incident to such service. He has no power to guard against them by refusing to incur the peril, or by leaving the service of his employer. He is but a passive instrument in the hands of those under whose control he is placed.

The exception to the rule applies to persons necessarily —those who are competent to contract, and who, while 344 they are responsible for the consequences of their own misconduct, having the same rights and remedies as their co-agents. Why comprehend slaves, when it is manifest they have none of those rights or remedies against others, and are not liable in a civil suit for their own acts and misconduct? In all relations, and in all matters, except as to crimes, the slave is regarded by our law as property; and being so considered, the case before us is governed by the law of bailments. The contract of hire in this case constituting a bailment of the property, and it being reciprocally beneficial to both parties, something more than mere good faith, on the part of the bailee, is requisite. The owners of the boat were bound to take ordinary care of the slave, and failing to do so, through their agent, they are responsible for the consequences.

The fact of the slave being a human being, while it does not impair the rights of the owner, would rather increase than diminish the liability of the employer.

In the case of Boyce vs. Anderson, 2 Peters' R., 156, Chief Justice Marshal, in delivering the opinion of the court, says, "Supposing the strict rule introduced for gen-"eral commercial objects does not apply to the conveyance "of slaves, the ancient rule, 'that the carrier is liable only "for ordinary neglect,' still applies to them." In this case, the jury have found gross negligence, on the part of the mate, in his conduct to the slave, which would render the employers liable in any event.

Apart from the views we have presented, considerations of public policy, the interest of the master, and humanity to the slave, require that he should be excluded from the exception to the rule, and that he should be shielded from the unrestricted control and oppression of irresponsible subordinates. The liability of the employer, civiliter, for 345 the misconduct of his subordinates, will naturally add to the personal security and protection of the slave. Public policy emphatically demands, that the owners of boats, railroads, and other public conveyances, should employ careful and capable agents in their respective business.

Let the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

JOHN T. MYRICK, APPELLANT, VS. BENJAMIN D. BATTLE, APPELLEE.

Tht act of March 15, 1844, changing the rate of interest, does not affect a contract made before, but which became due and payable after it was passed. The rate of interest on every contract is to be regarded by the law as it existed at the time such contract was made.

Appeal from Jackson Circuit Court.

This was an action of assumpsit, instituted by Battle against Myrick, on a promissory note dated 14th March, 1844, and payable one day after date. On the day following, to-wit: on the 15th March, 1844, by act of the Legislature, the rate of interest was reduced from eight to six per cent. The court below ruled that interest on the note should be calculated at the rate of eight per cent., from which the defendant appealed.

Bush for Appellant:

The only error alleged in this case is, that interest should have been calculated at six per cent. instead of eight. The suit was on a note dated 14th March, 1844, and due at one day after date. It contained no agreement as to the rate of interest. The last law on the subject was approved 15th 346 March, 1844. I can find no authorities directly in point, but think there is an analogy between the present and the cases which decide that the rate of interest is governed by the law of the country where the note is to be paid. Story's Conf. Laws, 241, § 291, 292; Scofield vs. Day, 20 J. R., 102; Cooper vs. Sandford, 4 Yerger, 452; Fanning vs. Consequa, 17 J. R., 511; Boyce & Henry vs. Edwards, 4 Peters, 112, 123. And this notwithstanding that well established principle of the law, "that all questions affecting "the validity of a contract, are to be governed by the law "of the land where the contract is made."

The decisions are, that interest follows of course, after the debt falls due, as an incident to it. Washington vs. Planter's Bank, 1 How. (Miss.,) 230; McConnell vs. Thomas, 2 Scam., 313, cited in Supplement 2 U. S. Digest, 209, 210, Nos. 60, 75.

Incident means to fall out, to happen, &c. Now, by what law is an event to be governed other than that in force when the event happens? Webster defines it to be "something which happens outside of the main design." It is separate from, and forms no part of the contract. The contract is the act of the party: interest, its incident, results from the law. They may well be governed by different laws.

Another analogy. The merchants at the South give their notes to those of New York, payable at certain periods after date, with the current rate of exchange on New York. This exchange is calculated by the rate at the time the note falls due. Why should not interest be assessed by the same rule?

Another analogy. At common law, judgments did not bear interest. It exists by statutory provisions. The law is changed between the date of the note and the rendition of the judgment. Which law governs? Certainly the latter; and this because it is competent for the Legislature 347 to change the rate at any time before it begins to run.

And again. The measure of damages for the violation of a contract for delivery of property at a certain future time, is the value of the property at the time of the breach, with interest from that time. This is a contract for the payment of money: there is no difference in principle.

It sometimes happens that between the date and maturity of a note, a change takes place in the value of the coin or currency in which it is payable, even in the same country. It will be discharged by due payment in any coin which, by law, is made of equivalent value at the time of payment. Sedgwick on Damages, 237; Story on Prom. Notes, 511, § 390.

In the cases quoted and the one now before the court, the action of the Legislature was between the date of the note and its maturity. If legitimate in those cases, it must certainly be so in this.

As to the time when this note fell due, adding the days of grace, it became due on the 18th, or three days after the law was passed.

All notes payable at a certain time after date, are, by the law, entitled to grace. Story on Prom. Notes, 272, § 224. The prospective words in the statute apply only to conventional rules agreed on by the parties.

As to the Constitutional question, the only answer is, that interest is an incident to a contract, but forms no part of it; that the act left the contract entire in all its parts, untouched and unimpaired; that it only operated upon "something outside of the main design."

Hawkins for Appellee:

The court below was correct in its decision.

1. To rule otherwise, would impair the obligations of a 348 contract. Constitution of State, Bill of Rights, § 19.

A contract is a compact between two or more persons, executed or executory, evpress or implied. No distinction as to these, and all embraced in the Bill of Rights. See 3 Story on Con., § 1371.

What is deemed impairing the obligation of contracts? See ib., § 1379, p. 250.

The note in this case was made in reference to the laws existing at the time of its creation. See Duval, 78. Rate was eight per cent. if not expressed on the face of the note.

The law gives interest as matter of right in all cases of commercial paper, and is implied, though contract silent. Chitty on Contracts, 645, 646; Woodward vs. Curtis, 7 Wend., 112; Boddam vs. Riley, 2 B. C. C., 3.

There being a right, it became a vested right, and accrued immediately on the breach of the contract, and no after legislation can impair it. Story, § 1379. To apply the law of 1844, (six per cent. act,) would give it a retrospective operation, changing and affecting vested rights: void. 1 Kent, 456; 2 Pet., 656.

2. The laws regulating interest operate on the contract, and do not affect the remedy. Declaratory Statutes. If remedial, they cannot operate retrospectively, if they impair contracts. 3 Story Con., § 1379.

3. The interest is an entirety. Anomaly to calculate under both statutes. I cite—2 U. S. Digest, 616, § 16; Smedes' Dig., 291, § 3; Lee vs. Davis, 1 A. K. Marsh., 397.

SEMMES, J.:

The only question presented by the record in this case is, the rate of interest which should be allowed on the note sued on.

349 The note of the Appellant is dated the 14th of March, 1844, and payable one day after date. At the date of the note, our statute provided that where no rate of interest was expressed in the contract, no higher rate than eight per cent. should be charged. Duval, 78, § 1. On the day after the execution of the note, this statute was altered, reducing the rate of interest to six per cent. per annum. Thomp. Dig., 234.

It is contended, that inasmuch as the law was amended before the maturity of the note, and, of course, before interest had commenced running, the judgment of the court below, allowing eight per cent. interest, was erroneous. We do not think so. Upon both principle and authority, the respondent was entitled, as of right, to recover eight per cent. interest. All contracts for the payment of money bear interest after maturity, though silent on the subject, unless there is an express stipulation to the contrary. When the contract is silent as to the interest, as in this case, the law will imply an understanding, on the part of the debtor, to pay the legal rate, and this implied understanding is not only supported by mercantile usage in all commercial instruments of a negotiable nature, but because interest is considered as a legal incident to every debt, certain in amount, and payable at a certain time The rate of interest is to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is to be executed, and when, as in the contract before us, no place is indicated, it is to be presumed where it is made. 1 Am. Lead. Cases, 519.

The interest, though an incident to the debt, is impliedly a part of the contract, and the contracting parties are to be presumed to have had reference to the law as it existed at the time the contract was made, and, as a consequence, no statute altering the rate of interest can be made to af-350 fect contracts entered into before its passage, otherwise the obligation of the contract would be impaired, for the Constitution, in this respect, recognizes no distinction between express and implied contracts.

No analogy, in our opinion, exists, and therefore no argument can be drawn, from the right of the Legislature to alter the rate of interest in reference to judgments after a contract is made. A judgment is a part of the remedy, and carries such rate of interest as is legal at its date, whatever rate was recoverable on the contract. The contract is merged in the judgment rendered, and the judgment is controlled by the statute, and not by the contract.

It has been expressly determined in the case of Lee vs. Davis, 1 A. K. Marsh., 397, that the rule of interest on a note is to be regulated by the law as it exists at the time the contract was made. We see no reason to depart from the principle decided in that case. See also Bryan vs. Moore, Minor 377.

Let the judgment be affirmed.

ALPHONSE LOUBAT, APPELLANT, VS. ABIGAIL A. NOURSE, APPELLEE.

1. The widow is not entitled to be endowed of real estate purchased by her deceased husband and his partner, with the partnership funds, for partnership use and convenience, and held and owned as part of the joint stock or property of the partnership, when her claim comes in conflict with that of the surviving partner or a creditor.

2. Although such estate be conveyed to the partners, so as to vest in them a legal estate as tenants in common, yet in the absence of an express agreement, or of circumstances showing an intent that the estate is to be held for the separate use of the partners it will be considered, in equity, as vesting in the partners in their partnership capacity, subject to an implied trust 351 that they shall hold it until the purposes for which it was purchased have been accomplished, and that it shall be applied, if necessary to the payment of the partnership debts.

3. At law, upon the death of the partner, his share or interest in the realty held and owned by the firm, is cast by descent upon the heir, and he becomes tenant in common with the surviving partner; and so at law, the widow may have dower assigned her in such share or interest; but both heir and widow will take the same estate the ancestor and husband held therein, clothed with the same trust in equity, for those who are entitled to the beneficial interest, whether surviving partners or creditors.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for Franklin County.

Appellee filed her bill of complaint against the Appellant and others, and among other things alleges, that her late husband, Hiram Nourse, in his life time, together with one Hiram W. Brooks, on the sixth day of October, in the year eighteen hundred and forty, purchased from the Trustees of the Apalachicola Land Company, Wharf-lot No. 23, in the City of Apalachicola, and received from the said Trustees a deed in fee simple for the same; that the said Hiram Nourse, being so seized in fee of the said premises, did, during the coverture of complainant, sell and convey his interest in said Wharf-lot to Lawrence O'B. Branch, by deed bearing date the ninth of December, 1843; that the said Branch, on the seventh of December, 1844, conveyed said lot to Lowel Holbrook, and that said Holbrook, on the 15th of December, 1845, conveyed the same to appellant, who holds the same and receives the rents and profits.

Appellee further alleges in her bill that she has not in any manner renounced or relinquished her dower in and to the said lot, and claims one third part of the interest of her late husband therein, with a like proportion of the rents and profits since the day of the death of her husband, which occurred on the twenty-first day of August, 1850.

In his answer, the appellant admits that he is the holder 352 in fee of said lot, and that he acquired it in the manner stated in the bill. He also admits the marriage of complainant and the death of Nourse at the time mentioned, but alleges that the said Nourse, during his life time, was engaged in a general copartnership business, as a merchant, with Hiram W. Brooks, under the style of Nourse & Brooks, and at another time in copartnership with said Hiram W. Brooks and John D. Howell, under the name and style of Nourse, Brooks & Co.; that the said lot was purchased by said Hiram Nourse and Hiram W. Brooks with the monies of the partnership, and was by them held, used and enjoyed as partnership property and for partnership purposes, as joint tenants, and not tenants in common; that they improved said lot by the erection of a wharf, at great expense, which improvement was made with the funds of the copartnership. He further alleges that the said Nourse & Brooks, and the said firm of Nourse, Brooks & Co., during the time of their copartnership, received the rents arising from said real estate as partnership funds and assets, and that the same were carried into the amount of the general partnership business, and used and employed as part of the means of the same; that said Nourse and said Brooks did not in any way receive such rents, or use or employ the same, as the individual property of either of the partners, and that although a separate account was kept on the books of the firm with each partner, yet no part of the rents arising from said real estate was credited to the individual account of either of them.

Further answering, the defendant alleges that said copartnership of Nourse & Brooks, and of Nourse, Brooks & Co., during their continuance and up to the time of their dissolution, contracted large debts, and finally became insolvent; that at the time of their dissolution, their effects 353 were entirely insufficient to pay their debts; that among other debts was one due and owing to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, of eight thousand dollars, which was assigned to Lawrence O'B. Branch and N. C. Robbins in trust for certain creditors of said company; that said Branch and Robbins compromised the said claim with the said Nourse and Brooks, and as a part of the said compromise, said Nourse & Brooks, in part payment of the sum due by them, conveyed to said Branch the Wharf-lot so held and possessed by respondent.

But one witness was examined who proves that Nourse & Brooks were commission and forwarding merchants, and that accounts were opened on their books between the wharf and the firm, the rents being carried to the credit and the cost of erection and repairs to the debit of the wharf account. The wharf property was paid for by notes which Nourse had against the land company. These notes were debited to "bills payable." The style of the firm was that of Nourse & Brooks. Afterwards Howell was admitted as a partner, and it was then changed to that of Nourse, Brooks & Co. A large amount of claims was held by the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company against Nourse and Brooks, amounting to something like fifty or sixty thousand dollars, which were assigned to Mr. Branch as trustee, who settled with Nourse & Brooks by accepting property. At the time of the settlement the property was necessary to pay the debts of the firm, and the Wharf-lot was conveyed to Mr. Branch for that purpose. Nourse and Brooks were under protest, having stopped payment. They did not discharge their debts in money. When Howell entered, there was no alteration of the business. The firm was embarrassed by Howell, who promised capital and business, but failed in all respects. The dower of Mrs. Nourse was a matter of discussion; the 354 parties solicited a relinquishment of her dower, but Nourse refused to exert his influence with her for that purpose. The conveyance of the lot in question was made after the dissolution of the partnership.

The court below decreed that dower be assigned to complainant, according to the prayer of the bill, from which appellant prayed an appeal to this court.

THOMPSON, J.:

It has been said by a distinguished jurist, and afterwards reiterated by others, that the claim of dower is highly favored in equity; that the right which a dowress has to her dower, is not only a legal right, and so adjudged at law, but it is a moral right, and she is to be provided for and have a maintenance and sustenance out of her husband's estate to live upon; that she is in the care of the law, and a favorite of the law. These observations have been most zealously and eloquently pressed upon the consideration of this court by the able counsel for respondent, as landmarks and guides, and to be kept steadily in view in passing upon the questions involved in this controversy; and certainly we can have no disposition to depart from the liberal and generous views so expressed in regard to the sex, which is in every respect so justly entitled to the favorable consideration of individuals as well as courts, or to withhold the application of the most liberal rules of equity to the claim here presented. But we have a duty to perform, and that duty is a plain though stern one. We must separate the feelings and inclinations of the man from the office of the Judge. The maxim of all the courts is, jus dicere et non jus dare; we are not authorized to pronounce a new law, but to ascertain and declare what 355

the law is. If, as has been justly remarked by Ld. Loughborough, there is a general hardship affecting a general class of cases, it is a consideration for the Legislature, not for a court of justice. If there is a particular hardship from the peculiar circumstances of the case, nothing can be more dangerous or mischievous than, upon these particular circumstances, to deviate from a general rule of law, for misera servitus est, ubi jus est vagum aut incertum. See Broom's Max., 62. We must confine our discretion, in every case, within those sound limits established by the rules and principles of equity. The liberality and favor with which the claim of a dowress is regarded in a court of equity, must not be understood as extending to the subversion of a settled rule of right or property, but rather to the extension of the peculiar process and powers of the court in ascertaining and enforcing her right, whenever it is equitable and proper it should be done; and perhaps going to the length of enforcing discovery and relief in her favor, against a purchaser for value, who is also a favorite in this court. Within these limits of equity, there is no disposition to regard her claim otherwise than with favor.

In the case before the court, the property in which dower is claimed by Mrs. Nourse, is a wharf-lot in the City of Apalachicola, which, as she alleges, was owned by her said husband, and one Hiram W. Brooks, as tenants in common, and which was, in the life-time of Mr. Nourse, conveyed by them, and the title to which, by various mesne conveyances, is now vested in the appellant, Alphonse Loubat. The claim is resisted on the ground that the husband of respondent and Brooks were partners; that the property was owned and held by them as partnership property, and was conveyed by them in satisfaction and discharge of a partnership debt, they having become insol- 356 vent.

However distressing the doubts may be whether real estate, held as part of the partnership funds or stock, ought to devolve upon, or descend as real estate to, the heirs or devisees, or ought to belong as personalty to the executor or administrator, upon the death of the partner, in cases where it is not required for the payment of the joint debts, yet, so far as partners and their creditors are concerned, we are satisfied that the rule is clear and free from doubt, and that such real estate, belonging to the partnership, is, in equity, to be considered as mere personalty, and is to be governed by the general doctrines applicable to it in the latter character. Story on Part., §§ 92, 93, cases cited in the margin; also Coll. on Part., p. 117, 141, (Perkin's Ed.) The cases decided in the English Courts of Equity, as to the character of real estate held as partnership property, have mainly arisen from a contest between the heir and the personal representative, in consequence of the difference in the English law between the canons of descent and the law of distribution, and they have all turned upon the actual or presumed intention of the party, whether the real estate was to preserve its specific and legal character, or an equitable conversion into personalty was intended. When, however, the question has been as to the applicability of such real estate to the payment of the partnership debts, we do not understand that there is any conflict of judicial decision, but that the courts of equity have been consistent in holding that, for this purpose, the equitable conversion into personalty is complete; and this is founded, not upon any actual or presumed intention of the party, but upon the equities between the partners, that all the joint stock or fund shall be applied to the purposes of the partnership. Ibid.

Loubat vs. Nourse.—Opinion of Court.

357 In the United States, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts held, in the case of Dyer vs. Clark, that when real estate is purchased by partners, with the partnership funds, for partnership use and convenience, although it is conveyed to them in such a manner as to make them tenants in common, yet, in the absence of an express agreement, or of circumstances, showing an intent that such estate shall be held for their separate use, it will be considered and treated in equity as vesting in them in their partnership capacity, clothed with an implied trust that they should hold it until the purposes for which it was so purchased shall be accomplished, and that it shall be applied, if necessary, to the payment of the partnership debts. Upon the dissolution of the partnership, by the death of one of the partners, the survivor has an equitable lien on such real estate for his indemnity against the debts of the firm, and for securing the balance that may be due to him from the deceased partner, on settlement of the partnership accounts between them, and the widow and heirs of such deceased partner have no beneficial interest in such real estate, nor in the rents received therefrom, after his death, until the surviving partner is so indemnified. 5 Metc. R., 562; see also to the same effect, Howard vs. Priest, 5 Metc. R., 582, 585. Burnside vs. Merrick, 4 Metc. R., 527; Sigourney vs. Munn, 7 Conn. R., 11; Pierce vs. Trigg, 10 Leigh R., 406; Winslow vs. Chiffelle, 1 Harper Eq. R., 25; Divine vs. Mitchum, 4 B. Monr. R., 489; 1 Sumn. R., 180, 181. There is some diversity in the decisions of the American Courts upon the point, but the current of decisions may very certainly be considered as in accordance with the doctrine laid down in Dyer vs. Clark, above quoted, and which, in our opinion, is in strict conformity with the principles of equity and justice.

The case of Thornton vs. Dixon, (3 Bro. c. c., 166,) Bell 358 vs. Phynn, (7 Vesey R., 453,) and Balmain vs. Shore, (9 Vesey, 500), cited and relied upon by counsel for respondent, do not conflict with the rule thus laid down. The rights of creditors of the partnership were not involved in any of them. Indeed, in the case of Bell vs. Phynn, Sir Wm. Grant, M. R., puts his doubt whether the consequence of the estate being partnership property was a conversion, on the ground that there was no occasion to call for it for any of the purposes of the partnership, but that it remained clear. And so the case of Smith vs. Smith, (5 Vesey R., 190,) is upon its own peculiar circumstances. The estate in that case, though purchased with partnership funds, was conveyed to one of the partners, under a specific agreement that it should be his, and he be a debtor for the money, and therefore the claim of the widow for dower therein was allowed. It was argued that the rule was established in England because the partners held in joint tenancy, and therefore could have no application here, where the distinguishing property of that estate, the jus accrescendi had been abolished by our statute; but it will be seen from a reference to the authorities that this is founded in a mistake, for though conveyances of real estate to partners, in England, are generally to hold as tenants in common, yet that if it be conveyed to them as joint tenants expressly, in equity there will be no survivorship in such property, notwithstanding the form of the conveyance and the rule of law. In all cases the legal estate descends to the heir and he becomes tenant in common with the survivor; but equity, regarding the substance rather than the form, declares that he holds subject to a trust in favor of the surviving partner, for the application of the joint property to the purposes and uses of the partnership.

Recurring now to the facts of this case, the question is whether it is within the rule. It appears that Nourse & Brooks were in partnership together, and were engaged in 359 business in the city of Apalachicola, and commission and forwarding merchants; that they entered into a contract with the Apalachicola Land Company for the purchase of the Wharf-lot in question, went into possession thereof, erected a wharf, the cost of which erection, and the subsequent repairs thereof, together with all the income and profits arising therefrom, were regularly entered on the books of the firm, to the account of the wharf; and the firm becoming embarrassed and insolvent, discharged a debt due the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, of upwards of six thousand dollars, by the conveyance of this property to Mr. Branch, the assignee or trustee of said creditor. It further appears from the evidence, that the Apalachicola Land Company, being indebted to Nourse, one of the partners, and the husband of respondent, the debt due the company for the purchase of the wharf-lot was discharged, either in whole or in part, by using the notes or debts due Nourse, and a conveyance in fee was made to the two partners, in conformity with the previous contract. Upon these facts it is denied that the property was bought with the funds of the partnership, but with the private funds of Nourse, having been paid for with the debt which he held against the Land Company. The firm might have preferred to use the debt, and pay the money to the partner, or it may have been a loan of the debt by Nourse to the firm, for which he was to have credit, and did receive such credit, upon the partnership books, and this would seem to be the true state of the case from the statement that the notes were charged to the account of "bills payable" on the books of the firm. The testimony is evidently not as full and perfect as it might have been, but we must infer from the statement, that the notes received from Nourse were charged to bills payable and credited to Nourse, thus cancelling so much of the former ac- 360 count as represented the notes given for the purchase money of the wharf-lot, and placing the same to the credit of Nourse. At all events, he accepted a conveyance from the Land Company to himself and partner, in conformity with the original contract of purchase, and the rents and profits of the wharf were carried into the accounts of the partnership as part of its assets. All this is wholly inconsistent with any pretence of a sale or exclusive ownership, or indeed any claim of right adversely to the partnership, and indeed it does not appear that any such was ever asserted by him in his life-time. Nor is there sufficient evidence from which a resulting trust can be raised in favor of Nourse individually.

It is also contended upon the evidence, that because the conveyance is to the partners as tenants in common, although the property was paid for out of the joint fund, yet it would be, in effect, a division of the joint-stock pro tanto, and therefore not partnership property, and Goodwin vs. Richardson, 11 Mass. R., 469, is cited in support of the position. It will be a sufficient answer to this case to quote the remarks of Shaw, C. J., in relation thereto, made in Dyer vs. Clark, before cited. "The court," says the learned Judge, "were dealing solely with a question of law "in determining a legal estate, and intimate that a court of "equity might make joint real estate applicable as person-"al to the payment of partnership debts;" and he does not consider the decision as opposed to the conclusion of the court in the said case of Dyer vs. Clark, on the equitable principles there laid down.

And so it is contended that the property not being absolutely necessary for the partnership purposes, but only used incidentally in the prosecution of their business, the consequences of the rule do not flow therefrom. We are Loubat vs. Nourse.—Opinion of Court.

361 not aware of any such limitation. The rule applies whenever the joint funds have been applied in the purchase for the use or convenience of the partnership, and there is no express agreement that the property shall be the individual property of the partners, each standing as a debtor to the joint fund for the cost, but it remains as part of the joint stock or fund, whether absolutely necessary to carry on the business or purposes of the partnership or not. We do not attach any importance in this case to the fact of the admission of Howell into the partnership, subsequent to the acquisition of the property; or that the debt, to discharge which it was conveyed, was contracted after he came into the concern. The witness who was examined says that Howell was admitted as a partner in the firm on his promise to bring money and business, and that no change was made except in the style of the firm, to that of Nourse, Brooks & Co. No settlement of the previous business took place, and the same books of account were continued. Now, although Howell may have failed in the performance of his promise to bring money and business to the concern, as it is stated he did fail, and while it might furnish a ground for the senior partners to rescind their agreement, yet having been admitted as such partner, during the time he continued a member of the firm, the real estate standing in the names of the two senior partners, became subject to a trust for the new partnership, consisting of themselves and the incoming partner. It is never necessary that the conveyance should be taken in the names of all the partners. It is sufficient if it be in the name of one, or more, or in the name of a stranger. Hoxie vs. Carr, 1 Sumn. R., 173, 182, 183.

The facts of this case bring it within the equitable rule before laid down. The Wharf-lot was purchased, and the Wharf erected thereon, out of the joint or partnership 362 funds; it was held and owned as joint property, for the use and convenience of the partnership, the partnership alone having the perception of the rents and profits issuing therefrom; and therefore the application of it to partnership purposes, such as the satisfaction of creditors, against the dower of the widows of the partners and the claims of the heirs at law, is clear beyond a doubt.

The remaining point to be considered is as to the effect of the act of November 7, 1828, entitled an act concerning dower, (Thomp. Dig.,) which provides that when one dies intestate, or testate, without making provision for the wife which shall be satisfactory to her, she shall be entitled to be endowed of "one third part of all the lands, tenements "and hereditaments of which her husband died seized and "possessed, or had before conveyed, whereof said widow "had not relinquished her right of dower, as heretofore "provided by law, which third part shall be and enure to "her proper use and behoof, in and during the term of her "natural life." This act is in affirmance of the common law, and indeed, from the use of the term "as heretofore provided by law," it is evident the Legislature designed to exclude the idea of any new law, or to make any change in the quality or quantity of interest which a dowress would take in the estate of her deceased husband. As a statute, we do not think it has any greater effect upon the equitable rule laid down herein, than it had standing as a rule of common law. She is to be endowed as theretofore provided by law, and no new right or interest is created. In other words, the old law is simply re-enacted.

But we are not dealing with a question at law in determining a legal estate. We are deciding how far a Court of Equity will control a legal estate for the purpose of doing equity. As upon the death of one member of a partnership. his share or interest in the real estate held and owned by the partnership, as a part of the joint stock or fund, 363 is, at and by the strict rule of law, cast by descent upon the heirs at law, and such heir at law becomes tenant in common of such property with the surviving partner, so the widow of a deceased partner may at law be endowed of one third of his interest; yet in both cases, though seized at law, they will hold the lands precisely as the ancestor and husband held them, clothed with the same trust, and they will, in a Court of Equity, be deemed to be trustees for those who, in equity and conscience, are entitled to the beneficial interest—the surviving partner, or creditors, or both. And such must be the case here. If Mrs. Nourse had preferred her claim at law, and dower had been assigned her, a Court of Equity, on the complaint of the parties beneficially interested, would cause her to execute the trust. But she having sought the aid of a Court of Equity to enforce a supposed legal right to dower, although she may have had that right, yet the court, finding it subject to a trust for the surviving partners or creditors of the partnership, and finding also that the property has in fact been used and applied to the purposes of the trust, namely, the satisfaction of a partnership debt, her application must be denied. The creditor took the property conveyed, in the consideration of a Court of Equity, free from claim of dower.

The conclusions we have arrived at, show that the court below erred in the decree rendered in this cause on the 9th February, 1852, and the same should be and is hereby reversed and set aside; and proceedings to render such decree as the court below should have rendered, we order and decree that the respondent's bill of complaint, as against the appellants, and seeking to be endowed of the Wharf-lot mentioned in the proceedings, be and the same is hereby dismissed with all costs.

Per totam curiam. Decree reversed and bill dismissed, 364 so far as it seeks dower of the Wharf-lot.

ANTONIO COLLINS, APPELLANT, VS. NICHOLAS H. MITCHELL, APPELLEE.

1. In an action against C. as a surety for S. in a replevin bond, conditioned for the re-delivery of the property attached, to abide the final order of the court, he pleaded that at the time of, and prior to the institution of the original suit by attachment, S. the defendant therein, and the principal in the replevin bond, was dead: HELD, That the matter set up in such plea does not constitute a sufficient bar to the action; that C. is estopped by the bond, as well as by the judgment in the original suit, to aver the death of S. prior hereto.

2. Estoppel, by deed, concludes the party executing it, not only as to the very point intended to be effected by the instrument, but also as to any fact stated or recited in it.

3. Judgments and decrees, as estoppels, conclude parties and privies only. The ground on which persons standing in the relation of privity to the litigating party are bound by the proceedings to which he was a party, is that they are identified with him in interest; and whenever this identity is found to exist, all alike are concluded. Where, therefore, one binds and obliges himself that the defendant in an attachment suit would cause the property levied upon, and replevied by the said bond, to be forthcoming to abide the final order of the court in the said suit, he connected himself in privity with the proceedings therein, and made the record of the judgment conclusive evidence against him.

4. Wherever the matter of the estoppel is apparent on the face of the record, advantage may be taken thereof upon demurrer.

5. The death of a party defendant pending the suit and before judgment therein, does not render such judgment void, but merely voidable, upon a writ of error coram vobis.

Appeal from Escambia Circuit Court.

This was an action of debt upon a replevin bond, insti-

365 tuted by the appellee against appellant. The material facts presented by the record will be found in the opinion of the court, to which reference is made.

Long and Baker for appellant.

Campbell for appellee.

THOMPSON, J.:

This was an action of debt, which was prosecuted in the court below by the respondent against the appellant, as one of the sureties in a replevin bond. The original suit was brought by the appellee against the firm of John N. C. Stockton & Co., and the attachment issued therein was levied upon certain slaves, as the property of the defendants, which slaves were replevied upon a bond executed by the said firm of John N. Stockton & Co., by their attorney W. T. Stockton, and by Hanson Kelly and the appellant as sureties thereon. The declaration in the present case is in the usual form, setting forth the issue and the levy of the attachment upon certain slaves, specified by name; the release of the property upon the bond; the prosecution of the original suit to find judgment and execution; a return of nulla bona by the proper officer on the writ of fieri facias, and the breach of the condition of the bond, "that the said John N. C. Stockton & Co. did not "cause the said slaves (therein named) to be forthcoming, "to abide the final order of the Superior Court for the "County of Walton, according to the tenor and effect of "the writing obligatory, &c., although often requested, &c."

The appellant, inter alia, craved oyer of the bond, and the same being set out, pleaded "that at the time of and "prior to the institution of the said suit by attachment, in "the said Superior Court of Walton county, to wit: on 366 "the 20th day of November, A. D., 1839, the said John "N. C. Stockton had departed this life; absque hoc, that "there was any other suit or proceeding in the said Supe-"rior Court of Walton county against the said John N. "C. Stockton," and concluded with a verification.

To this plea the plaintiff below replied, "that Richard "C Stockton and William B. Stokes, as surviving part-"ners of the firm of John N. C. Stockton & Co., appeared "and pleaded to said attachment suit in the plaintiff's "declaration mentioned, and that the judgment in the "said plaintiff's declaration mentioned was rendered in "the said attachment suit against the said surviving part-"ners, in and by the name and style of John N. C. Stock-"ton & Co." To this replication there was a demurrer and joinder therein, on which the judgment of the court below was against the demurrer, and it is upon alleged errors in this judgment that the present appeal is founded.

No attempt is made in this court to sustain the replication against the force and effect of the appellant's demurrer; but the respondent, invoking the familiar principle that a demurrer opens all the previous pleading, avers that the plea is insufficient upon various grounds, some of which will be noticed hereafter.

In like manner the counsel for appellant, in addition to his support of the plea, contends that the declaration does not show a sufficient cause of action, because of the uncertainty and consequent invalidity of the defeasance or condition of the bond, which point being considered first in order, will be first disposed of.

It is argued that as the recital in the condition of the bond does not mention the number, names, sex or ages of the slaves levied upon, but simply recites "that whereas "the said Nicholas H. Mitchell has sued out of the Supe-"rior Court of Walton county an attachment against the Collins vs. Mitchell—Opinion of Court.

"said J N. C. Stockton & Co.," it is void for uncertainty. 367
We do not regard this objection as well taken. The slaves levied on were sufficiently described by their names in the levy of the officer, which was endorsed upon, and as his return, to the writ of attachment, and according to the familiar rule of logic, as well as law, in the interpretation of all writings, id certum est quod certum reddi potest. The condition of the bond is made perfectly certain and definite by a reference to the return to the writ of atttachment, which shows what slaves and how many were levied upon. The writ of attachment, the action of the officer endorsed thereon, and the replevin bond, when executed, are all integral parts of the record of the suit, and the former may be referred to, for the purpose of rendering certain anything which is uncertain or indefinite in the latter.

We now proceed to the consideration of the plea. It is urged by the counsel for the appellant, in support of the plea, that the fact alleged therein, namely, the death of John N. C. Stockton, before the institution of the suit, renders the judgment void for want of notice; that if void as to him, it is void as to his co-partners, even if they had been sued in the original action properly, by their individual names, and not under the terms "& Co.," as he supposes the record to be, and therefore there has not been any "final order of the court," which, according to the condition of the bond, the appellant had covenanted to abide by. And on the other hand, it is contended, on the part of respondent, that the appellant is estopped by his bond, as well as by the judgment rendered, to allege the fact of the death of John N. C. Stockton before the institution of the suit; and that, if he is in a position to make the defence, still it does not render the judgment void, but voidable only; and that the effect of the judgment cannot be voided thus collaterally, but only the regular modes of examination which are provided for the investigation of 368 real or imputed error in judicial proceedings.

The law of estoppel, says Mr. J. Taunton, in Bowman vs. Taylor, (2 Add. El. R., 278,) is not so unjust or absurd as it has been too much the custom to represent. The principle is, that where a man has entered into a solemn engagement, by and under his hand and seal, as to certain facts, he shall not be permitted to deny any matter which he has so asserted. And not only is the deed conclusive, on the party executing it, as to the very point intended to be effected by the instrument, but also as to any facts stated or received in it. 2 Smith Lead Ca., 456, and authorities cited. The party is denied the right of setting up the truth whenever it is plain and clear contradiction to his former allegations and acts.

The appellant here, on the 13th January, 1840, and after the institution of the original suit, and the levy of the attachment, joins with John N. C. Stockton & Co., and as one of the sureties, in the making and delivery of the replevin bond, as if the said John N. C. Stockton was in life and being, and thus procures the release of the property levied upon under the attachment; and shall he be permitted now to aver that the same John N. C. Stockton was not only then dead, but was so before the institution of the suit? The inconsistency and contradiction between this allegation and the act of joining with John N. C. Stockton in the execution of the bond, is so glaring that it need only be stated to be apparent. Counsel have endeavored to avoid the effect of this estoppel by urging that the bond does not profess to be executed by John N. C. Stockton in his proper person, but that John N. C. Stockton & Co., executed it by their attorney, W. T. Stockton. This fact makes no difference. A dead man can no more have an attorney in fact that he can be a party to a suit

Collins vs. Mitchell—Opinion of Court.

369 in court. As a prudent man, it is to be presumed the appellant was careful to see that the agent or attorney was duly constituted to act for his principal, and ignorance of the rule of law, that death revoked the power, will not excuse him. Such an excuse is not permitted to be alleged in a Court of Justice.

The doctrine of estoppel by deed is generally recognized and enforced in the United States, as well as in England. See cases collected in 2 Smith Lead. Ca., 555. Thus in Cutler vs. Dickinson, 8 Pick. R., 387, the obligors in an administration bond were held to be estopped by the recital therein that their principal had been regularly appointed administrator. The replevin bond being the foundation of the action, and the declaration alleging, in the terms of the instrument, that it was made and delivered by the defendant, and the other obligors, the estoppel is apparent on the fact of the record, and advantage may therefore be taken of it on the demurrer. Browman vs. Taylor, 2 Ad. & E. R., 278; Hill vs. Manchester Water-works Co., 2 Barn. & Ad. R. 244; and see Veale vs. Warner, 2 Wms. Saunders R., 325, a. n. The conclusion therefore, which we have reached is, that the appellant is estopped by his deed from asserting the fact, although it may be true, that before and at the time of the execution of the bond, John N. C. Stockton was dead. And this relieves the court from the necessity of considering the question so elaborately discussed at the bar, whether the judgment of a Court of general jurisdiction may be collaterally impeached by matters dehors the record, as to its jurisdiction of the person of the parties; or whether the defect of jurisdiction of the person must appear on the face of the record, to entitle it to consideration; or whether, if such court of general jurisdiction assumes authority to act, and pronounces a judgment, such authority can be inquired 370 into at all, but is absolutely binding on the parties, &c., until set aside by the tribunal in which it was rendered, or regularly reversed on error. We therefore pass them by, without intimating any opinion how far the decisions of the American Courts have innovated upon the rule of the common law, and to what extent they should be considered as persuasive arguments in the estimation of this court. We will simply remark that the decision of this court in Carter vs. Bennett, (4 Fla. R., 345,) cited and relied upon by counsel for appellant, does not, in our opinion, touch the question discussed. In that case the question was whether a decree rendered in a foreclosure suit against the mortgagor was conclusive against Bennett, who claimed to be the assignee of the right or equity or redemption in the mortgage property, and who was not a party to the suit. Judgments and decrees are conclusive only as against parties and privies, and the court in the case cited, deeming the assignee a stranger to the record, held that the proceedings were open to his impeachment. The difference, is too obvious to need further remark.

The appellant being estopped by his deed from asserting the death of his co-obligor, John N. C. Stockton, before and at the time of its execution, and as the Superior Court of the late Territory of Florida was a court of general jurisdiction, this court, acting upon the maxim, omnia presumuntur rite esse acta, must presume a jurisdiction of that court over the persons of John N. C. Stockton & Co., up to the time of the execution of the replevin bond, and we will now proceed to the consideration of the plea, as an averment of the death of John N. C. Stockton, intermediate the execution of the bond and the rendition of the judgment in the attachment suit. It is considered by respondent's counsel that in this view the plea is liable to two objections.—1st. That the appellant is estopped by the judgment; and 2d. If he is not so estopped, the fact 371 asserted as to the death of John N. C. Stockton before the judgment, does not render it void, but voidable merely.

Both objections we think well taken, and either would suffice to prove that the plea in this regard is bad in substance. It is true as urged by the counsel for the appellant, that he was not a party to the judgment, but it is equally true that he was in privity with the defendants therein, and concluded with them by its force and effect. The ground upon which persons standing in the relation of privity to the litigating party are bound by the proceedings to which he was a party, is, that they are identified with him in interest, and whenever this identity is found to exist, all are alike concluded. Thus, if one covenants for the results of consequences of a suit between others, as if he covenants that a certain mortgage assigned by him shall produce a specific sum, he thereby connects himself in privity with the proceedings, and the record of the judgment in that suit will be conclusive evidence against him 1 Greenl. on Ev., §523; Rapelye vs. Prince, 4 Hill N. Y. Rep., 119. So, in the case at bar, the appellant bound and obliged himself to the respondent, and covenanted with him, by the writing obligatory sued upon, that the said defendants in the attachment suit, John N. C. Stockton & Co., would cause the said slaves levied upon, and replevied by said bond, to be forthcoming to abide the final order of the court in the said suit, and thus connected himself in privity with the proceedings herein, and made the record of the judgment conclusive evidence against him. In Bacon's Abr., tit. Error, A., it is laid down, "if a man recovers against "the principal, and sues a scire facias against the bail, "they cannot say the principal died before the judgment, "and so by plea avoid the judgment, for it is against the "record."

The death of a party before the judgment rendered, does 372 not make the judgment void, but it is an error of fact, for which the same may be recalled or revoked by writ of error, returnable to the same court where the record remains, called a writ of error coram vobis, or qua coram vobis resident, for error in fact is not the error of the Judges, and reversing it is not reversing their own judgment. 2 Tidd Pr., 1136-7; Com. Dig. Pleader (3B. 1:) Day vs. Hamburg, 1 Browne Pa. R., 75, 82; Dewitt vs. Post, 11 Johns R., 460. The distinction between a thing, whether record or deed, &c., which is void and that which is voidable, is familiar to every one. The judgment which is voidable, is a subsisting judgment, good and effectual until revoked or reversed, which cannot be done collaterally, but only by a direct proceeding instituted for the purpose. "If a judgment is only voidable, the party shall not void "it without writ of error; as if in a cui in vita the tenant "dies, and afterwards judgment is against him, which is "erroneous, and execution is sued against the heir, he "shall not avoid the judgment in assize without error. 1 "Rol. 742, l. 12; so, in a scire facias by executor upon a "judgment in ejectment by his testator against B., execu- "tion shall not be avoided, nor judgment stayed, by say- "ing that the tenant died pendente lite; for he ought to "avoid it by error. 1 Rol. 742, l. 18; so, error in the "principal judgment is no plea in a scire facias against "the heir or bail. 1 Rol. 742, l. 26, 30." See Comyn's Dig., Error (D.)

There are other objections to the plea, some of which have been presented in the argument, and others have suggested themselves to the court in the consideration of the case, but as those which we have passed upon go to the very substance of the matter pleaded, it is deemed unne-

373 cessary to notice any other. There is no error in the judgment of the court below, and it should be affirmed.

Per totam curiam. The judgment of the Circuit Court of the Western Circuit, sitting in the county of Escambia, rendered in this cause, is hereby affirmed, with costs.

RICHARD MCGRIFF, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF RICHARD DAWSON, DECEASED, APPELLANT, VS. WILLIAM G. PORTER, JOHN G. RUAN AND RICHARD G. PORTER, APPELLEES.

1. Where, to secure a loan of money, the borrower executed an instrument of writing authorizing the lender, upon default in payment of the money borrowed, to enter upon the premises of the borrower, and take and carry away certain slaves specified therein, and sell and dispose of them, and from the produce of the sale to pay himself the money due, and all expenses, returning the overplus, if any: HELD, That such instrument was not a mortgage, but a power.

2. A power is simply collateral, and without interest, or a mere naked power, when to a stranger, authority is given to dispose of an interest, in which he had not before, nor has by the instrument creating the power, any estate whatsoever; but when the power is given to a person who derives, under the instrument creating the power, or otherwise, a present or future interest in the property which is the subject of the power, it is then a power coupled with an interest: HELD, therefore, in the present case, that the power given or created is a mere naked power, unconnected with any interest or estate in the property, the subject of the power; and though founded upon a consideration, and therefore irrevocable by the grantor in his life time, yet that it was revoked by his death before the execution thereof.

3. The act of January 30, 1838, entitled an act to amend an act to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages, (Thomp. Dig., 376. ch. 3, §1,) considered and interpreted to be intended to limit and restrict the operative force of certain classes of conveyances therein mentioned, and not to extend or enlarge the effect of others.

The appellant filed his bill in Franklin Circuit Court, 374 against the appellees and the Sheriff of Franklin county, as ex-officio administrator of the estate of Archibald R. Ridley, deceased, to foreclose as a mortgage a certain instrument, which is set out at length in the opinion of the court delivered in this case.

It appears from the record that Archibald B. Ridley, in his life time, executed a note, payable on the first day of January, 1836, to Richard Dawson, since deceased, of whose estate said appellant is administrator, for eleven hundred dollars, and at the same time executed and delivered to said Dawson the instrument of writing which is set up as a mortgage, and claimed to have been intended as a security for said note.

The property mentioned in the instrument of writing remained in the possession of Ridley till his death, and there is no evidence that any effort was made prior to the death of Ridley, to execute the power granted to Dawson by the instrument in question.

To establish the character claimed for this instrument, the appellant examined John J. Edwards, one of the subscribing witnesses, who stated that he and Thomas Edwards, the other subscribing witness, arrived at the house of Dawson, and found Dawson and Ridley there alone; that they were informed by Ridley that he had borrowed or wished to borrow money from Dawson, and had made a mortgage to secure its payment, and asked them to witness the execution of the instrument, then already prepared, which they did. Here, another witness for appellant, says, Ridley, in a conversation with him, told him that he had mortgaged the slaves mentioned in said instrument to Dawson.

The appellees claimed title to the slaves in their possession through one Isaac Brown, and assert that they had no knowledge or notice of any incumbrance, by way of mortgage, or otherwise, on said slave. The court below dis- 375 missed the bill of complaint with costs.

Davis for Appellant.

Baltzell and A. H. Bush Appellees.

THOMPSON, J.:

This is a suit for foreclosure of mortgage, which was instituted by the appellant, who was complainant in the Circuit Court, and the decision of the case turns upon the character of the instrument set up in the bill, and a copy of which is exhibited therewith, whether it is a mortgage as is asserted by the complainant, or a mere naked power as contended for by the respondents.

The instrument is in the following terms, viz:

"Alabama, Henry county. To all to whom these pres"ents may come, greeting: Know ye, that I, A. B. Rid"ley, for and in consideration of the sum of eleven hun"dred dollars, forever defend by these presents, and it is "hereby agreed by the parties to these presents, that if I,
"the said A. B. Ridley, my executors or any of us, do and "shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the "said Richard Dawson, his executors, the sum of eleven "hundred dollars, according to a certain bond bearing
"even date herewith, given by me to Richard Dawson,
"then these presents, and every thing herein contained,
"shall be void; and I, the said A. B. Ridley, for myself,
"my heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, do agree "with the said Richard Dawson, his heirs, executors, ad"ministrators and assigns, that in case default shall be "made in payment of said sum of money, at the time lim"ited for the payment, then it shall and may be lawful for
"the said Richard Dawson, his executors, administrators "and assigns, with any person or persons he or they shall "think fit, to enter into the dwelling house and premises 376
"of said A. B. Ridley, wherein said negroes may be lodg"ed, to-wit: Isabella and her two children, Mary and her "two children, and John, a mulatto boy, about fifteen "years old, thence to carry away the said negroes, and "sell and dispose of them for the best price which they can "obtain, and of the money to arise by such sale thereof to "pay and return to him and themselves the said sum of "eleven hundred dollars, and all charges touching the "same, they returning to me, the said A. B. Ridley, my "heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, the overplus,
"(if any such shall be,) any thing herein to the contrary
"notwithstanding; and until default be made in the afore"said sum of money at the time fixed for the payment
"thereof, I, the said A. B. Ridley, my executors, adminis"trators and assigns, are to remain in the quiet possession of "the aforesaid, and to the full and free enjoyment of the "same."

This instrument was executed under the hand and seal of the said Archibald B. Ridley, on the 16th January, 1835, and the execution thereof is attested by two witnesses, Messrs. J. J. Edwards and Thomas Edwards. There is no doubt but that the instrument was executed simultaneously with a bond of eleven hundred dollars made by Ridley to Dawson, and that it was intended to be a security for the repayment of the money so borrowed, but it is equally clear that, although the said instrument was spoken of by the parties thereto at and after its execution, and since by the attesting witnesses, as a mortgage, yet it cannot be regarded as such a security. A mortgage of personalty is a conveyance of the absolute property and interest therein, defeasible on the performance of some condition subsequent, such as the payment of money, doing some act by the mortgagor, or the like. By the common law, possession being regarded as the indicium of ownership of personal property, it was required that it should accompany and follow the mortgage, and on default of the mortgagor in the performance of the condition mentioned in the defeasance, the estate or interest of the mortgagee, became absolute at law, the mortgagor having nothing left therein but a right in equity to redeem, if asserted and claimed within a reasonable time. In this and other States of the Union the rule of the common law has been so far changed as to permit the mortgagor to retain the possession of the mortgaged property, upon a record of the conveyance in mortgages, in which case, in default by the mortgagor, the mortgagee is driven to his suit for foreclosure, or other appropriate remedy, to obtain satisfaction out of, or the possession of, the mortgaged property. In the instrument under examination, there are no words of transfer or conveyance of the property mentioned, or of any interest therein; neither does it provide that the creditor shall have the possession thereof, but on the contrary, it is expressly stipulated that the possession is to remain with the owner, the debtor, until, by default in the payment of the money, the authority and power shall accrue to the creditor to enter upon the premises of the debtor and take and carry away, and sell and dispose of, the property, pay himself the debt due, and all costs, &c., and return the overplus, if any. The instrument confers simply an authority, unconnected with any right in the property which is mentioned and specified therein.

It is, however, argued with much ingenuity by the counsel for the appellant, that whatever may be the construction of this instrument, at and by the rules of the common law, yet when it is interpreted with reference to the act of our Legislature of January 30, 1838, amendatory of the act regulating the foreclosure of mortgages, &c. (Thomp. Dig. 376, ch. 3, § 1,) it amounts to a mortgage. The act referred to is in the following terms: "All deeds of conveyance, bills of sale, or other instruments of writing, conveying or selling property, either real, personal or mixed for the purpose or with the intention of securing the payment of money, whether such deed, bill of sale or other instrument, be from the debtor to the creditor, or from the debtor to some third person or persons, interested for the creditor, shall be deemed and held as mortgages, and shall be subject to the same rules of foreclosure, to the same regulations and restrictions as now are, or hereafter may be prescribed by law, in relation to mortgages." This act was so designed to operate on and control mortgages with power of sale, and deeds of trust to third persons with like powers of sale, which, at the time of the passing of this statute, were much used in some parts of the then Territory, and which was considered to operate oppressively upon the debtor, the provisions of such deeds of conveyance ordinarily stipulating that after default made by the debtor in the payment of the debt, the mortgagee in the one case, and the trustee on the requisition of the creditor in the other, should proceed upon some short notice to sell the property conveyed and hypothecated for cash, and to apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of the debt. But independently of this consideration, the particular mischief which this statute was intended to remedy, and considering the instrument in question as if made in Florida, and with reference to its laws, it seems very clear that it cannot and does not receive any aid from this statute. The act mentions "deeds of conveyance and bills of "sale," and although it uses the terms, or "other instru-"ments of writing," yet these terms, upon a familiar rule of interpretation, must be taken to mean instruments ejusdem generis, of a kindred character to those which are specifically designated, and this is fully sustained by the description which is contained in the statute, which shows that it was designed to operate on those instruments alone which have the effect of "conveying or selling property, 'real, personal or mixed, for the purpose or with the in-"tention of securing the payment of money." The instrument of writing which is attempted to be set up in this case as a mortgage, neither conveys nor sells the property mentioned and specified therein, for the want of any operative words of conveyance or transfer, any form of expression, which, without wresting the language employed from its fair and legitimate import, can be construed to evince any design whatever, on the part of Ridley to divest himself of the legal title and vest in Dawson, or any other person. Hence the instrument is not within the act, which, from its whole scope, is clearly designed to limit, restrict and control the operation of certain classes of conveyances described therein, and not to enlarge or extend the operative force and effect of others.

As before remarked, the instrument before the court creates a power only, not coupled or connected with any interest in the property. A power is simply collateral and without interest, or a naked power, when, to a mere stranger, authority is given to dispose of an interest, in which he had not before, nor has by the instrument creating the power, any estate whatsoever; but when the power is given to a person who derives, under the instrument creating the power, or otherwise, a present or future interest in the property, the subject on which the power is to act, it is then a power coupled with an interest. Co. 1st Inst., 342, l. n. 1; Bergen vs. Bennett, 1 Caine's Cas. in Er., 1. It is true that Dawson had an interest in the money which was to be produced by the power, and which was to be applied to the discharge of the debt due him by Ridley, the donor of the power, but as is justly remarked by C. J. Marshall, in the case of Hunt vs. Bousmaniere, (8 Wheat. R., 174, 5 Peters' Cond. R., 405,) in such a case the power and the interest can never be united. The power to produce the interest must be exercised, and by its exercise is extinguished. The power ceases when the interest commences, and therefore cannot, with accuracy, be said to be coupled with it. This power, however, forming part of the contract of loan between Dawson and Ridley, and having the security provided for its re-payment is founded upon a valuable consideration; and although there is no stipulation that it shall be irrevocable by the grantor, or constituent, yet it is deemed in legal view to be beyond his control, and to be irrevocable by him in his life time. But Ridley, the grantor, having died, the question here arises as to the effect which that event had upon the power so created.

That a mere naked power, whether founded upon a valuable consideration or not, is revoked by the death of the party creating it, is not only well settled upon authority, but it results as a necessary consquence from the nature and character of such power. Thus in the case at bar, an authority is given to Dawson to dispose of an interest and property in the slaves specified, which he had not before, and which has not been conferred upon him by the instrument which gives or creates the power. Apply now the test. If the power is executed by the donee or grantee thereof, it must necessarily be executed in the name of the donor or grantor, who alone possesses the title and estate in the property, he not having parted with it by any transfer or conveyance thereof, and he being dead it would be simply an absurdity to execute a sale and conveyance in the name, and as the act of a dead man. The death of the party, therefore, in such case, operates as a revocation, be-

McGriff, Adm'r., vs. Porter et al.—Opinion of Court.

381 cause, by the happening of this event, the power has become impossible to be executed.

The only exception to this is the case of a naked power or authority given by one by his last will to his executors to sell his estate for the payment of debts, &c., in which case the authority is expressly given, to be executed after his death, and the act may be done in the name of the executors, and not in the name of the testator. The case of Hunt vs. Rousmaniere's administrator, before cited, is precisely analagous. In that case a power of attorney was executed by Rousmaniere to secure a loan of money, which authorized Hunt, the lender, to sell the vessels mentioned therein, on default in the payment of the debt, and pay himself the amount due, &c., and Rousmaniere having died before the execution of the power, it was held to have been revoked by his death.

The case of Knapp vs. Alvord, cited from 10 Paige R., 205, by the counsel for appellant, is readily distinguished from the case before cited, as well as the case at bar. A person who was indebted, upon going abroad put an agent in possession of his stock in trade, and gave him a written power to sell, &c., any part of the goods, &c., and apply them to the payment of the debts, and to the security or payment of any notes for which such agent might become responsible on his account. The principal having died, it was held that the power of sale given to the agent was a power coupled with an interest, and that he had power to sell and retain for the amount of his advances, notwithstanding the death of the principal.

The court has not had access to the report of the case, so as to ascertain the grounds of the decision, but presume it must have been for the reason that the property, which was personalty, being delivered to the agent simultaneously with the creation of the power, was a sufficient transfer 382 thereof to create an interest in connection with the power. Such would have been the effect in the present case, if the slaves had been delivered by Ridley to Dawson at the time of the execution of the instrument; the latter would have acquired, by such tradition of the property, an interest commensurate with the power which was created, and in the execution thereof he would have acted in his own name.

Upon these considerations, it is clear that the prayer of the bill cannot be sustained. The instrument set up is not a mortgage, but a mere power, not coupled or connected with any interest in the property which is the subject thereof; and having arrived at this conclusion, it becomes necessary to examine and pass upon the position assumed by appellant's counsel, that it appearing from the evidence a mortgage was intended by the parties, but which failed through the ignorance of the draftsman, the court should not affirm the decree of the court below, but should modify the same by granting leave to appellant to amend his bill so as to obtain a reformation of the instrument.

The principle is undeniable that where an instrument of writing which proposes, or is intended to carry into effect a previous agreement between the parties, but which, by some mistake in its preparation, either as to fact or law, does not fulfil, or which violates, the manifest intention of the parties to the agreement, equity will correct the error so as to make the instrument conform to the agreement, such imperfect execution being considered as no execution at all. Without adverting to the frame and structure of the appellant's bill of complaint, and considering whether he is justly entitled, in view thereof, to claim the favorable interpretation of the court, as is contended for, the court cannot satisfactorily ascertain from the evidence in this record, that the instrument which was executed does not fulfil, or that it violates the intention of the parties thereto. 383
There is very little testimony in relation to the execution of the instrument, and none as to the previous agreement between the parties, or the negotiations which led to the execution of the deed, save what may be derived from the brief statement of John J. Edwards, one of the subscribing witnesses. He states, that having arrived at the house of Dawson, in company with Thomas Edwards, the other subscribing witness, they found Dawson and Ridley there, and alone; that they were simply informed by the latter, that he had borrowed, or wished to borrow, money from the former, and had made a mortgage upon negroes to secure its payment, and requested them to attest the execution of the instrument, then already prepared, which was done. Another witness, (Hare,) detailing a conversation with Ridley, says he told him he had mortgaged said slaves to Dawson. No witness speaks of the negotiation between the parties, as to the precise character of the security which was stipulated for. Indeed it appears that no one was present during the treaty for the loan; nor is there any evidence showing by whom the instrument was prepared, whether by one of the parties, or by another person by the direction of both or either of them. The witnesses found it already prepared to be executed, and it was executed in their presence.

Stress is laid upon the use of the term "mortgage" by the witnesses. Indeed the hypothesis of a mistake in the preparation of the instrument, is wholly founded upon this fact. But if reliance could be placed upon the accuracy of the recollection of the witnesses, as to the use of the precise terms employed by the parties, after the lapse of thirteen years, which had intervened between the date of the transaction and the time of their examination, still the court cannot conclude that in this case the term "mortgage" was used in its technical sense. This identical in- 384 strument is called a mortgage, and we have no assurance that the term is not used as a generic term, and in the contemplation of the witnesses would be considered to embrace every species of security, whether a technical mortgage, a vivum vadium, or, as in the present case, a power to seize and sell the property. We may add here that the instrument is termed a mortgage by lawyers as well as laymen. The attorney employed in Alabama, in his deposition, calls it a mortgage, and the counsel for appellant not only sets it up in the bill of complaint as a mortgage, but gives it that appellation in the interrogatories propounded to the witnesses in relation thereto; and it is possible the latter may have been thus inadvertently led to the use of the term, supposing them to be sufficiently acquainted with the legal character of the different securities before enumerated to distinguish between them.

If conjecture is to be resorted to as to what the parties intended, it may just as fairly be presumed that, inasmuch as it is evident Ridley did not design to part with the possession of the property during the time the loan was running to maturity, and as, in such event, if a mortgage had been executed, the creditor, in case of default, as we have before seen, would be put to his suit for foreclosuse, he may well have considered that the power to seize and sell the slaves, to redress himself by his own act, without resort to litigation, would be the best form in which the security could be framed, the remedy thus provided being so simple and so summary in its character as to compensate most amply for the risk incurred of the contingencies of the death of the grantor, or constituent, before the execution of the power, or of a sale by him to bona fide purchasers, for value, without notice of the existence of such power.

385 As there is not sufficient evidence to satisfy the court that the instrument in question violates the manifest intention of the parties, or that it is not the precise security which they contemplated, and conforming in every respect to their agreement, and as the court deems it hopeless that at this late day, eighteen years having passed away since the date of the transaction, and both the parties dead, there is any possibility of obtaining further and more precise information, and as the decree rendered herein will oppose no obstacle to the prosecution of the appellant's claims as a general creditor against the estate of Ridley, the court feels constrained to deny the application to modify the decree of dismissal rendered by the court below.

Per totam curiam. The decree of the Circuit Court of the Western Circuit, sitting in equity in and for the County of Franklin, is in all things affirmed, with costs.

THOMAS ORMAN, ADMINISTRATOR OF SIMPSON, APPELLANT, vs. J. & D. J. DAY AND THE APALACHICOLA LAND COMPANY, APPELLEES.

The building of a party wall by the owner of a lot gives him no right to claim contribution from the owner of the adjoining lot, without express agreement of the parties.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

The facts presented by the record will be found em-386 braced in the opinion of the court, to which reference is made.

Baltzell for Appellant.

At the sale of front or water lots in the City of Apalachicola in the year 1836, the purchasers of lots, with the sanction and approval of the owners of the city, (the Apalachicola Land Co.,) agreed upon a plan by which the owners of adjoining lots should so build as that each should have the benefit of his neighbor's wall—in other words, that instead of each owner of a lot erecting two full side walls, in brick, on his own lot, one wall should be erected, covering a portion of each lot, at the joint expense. In other words, party walls made. As the buildings were to be of brick, three stories high, fire-proof, and only thirty feet in front, the arrangement was highly advantageous, giving a greater extent of front, enlarging the building, and diminishing very greatly the expense and cost of the construction.

Simpson built after this mode. The Land Co. owning the adjoining lot on the Western side, lease to Day and afterwards sell to him, providing, however, in their deed for the contingency of a recovery by Simpson. The Days build, uniting their roof and outer walls to those of Simpson, and the party wall erected by him is made and used as one of the walls of their building.

They refuse to pay him any portion of the expense of the erection of the party wall, and both he and the Apalachicola Land Co. resist the claim on the ground of its injustice and illegality—the statutes of fraud and of limitation are also relied upon. There is no dispute about the right of Simpson to build upon the lot of the Land Co.; no dispute as to their right and that of Day to the support of Simpson's building—both these have been conceded and are admitted. The sole question is whether the Land Co. 387 and Day, using and having the benefit of the wall erected by Simpson at his own expense, thus enhancing the value of their property by relieving them of the expense of the erection of a separate wall, shall pay for the benefit and advantage thus derived. The right of Simpson's estate then accrues. If there is merit in the decision of Chan. Kent in 4 John. Chy. R., 334, then there is in our case Qui sentit onus debet sentire commodum. The cases in Sanford and from Alabama are of owners in severalty, having no privity, unconnected with each other and wholly inapplicable. Our case comes rather under the denomination of "disposition of the owner of the tenements," as treated by Gale and Whatley, in their work on Easements, 157, 38, 39, 49, 53; 3 Kent, 436.

It is said, however, that the Land Co. did not know, nor sanction, nor approve this arrangement as to the mode of building—a supposition only maintainable on the ground that they were grossly negligent, ignorant or stupid, both as to their rights and interests. They had sold near $100,000 of these lots, reserving the ownership of some of them. They were the owners of nearly two-thirds of the remainder of the city unsold; they are proved to have had an agent on the spot, Mr. Nourse, superintending, arranging and directing. The contract as to the peculiar mode of the construction of these buildings shows that their mind was specially addressed to the subject. How, then, could they know nothing of it? Nor is the assertion of the defence made by them in that case calculated to elevate their character greatly in the moral scale. They have done and are doing what no respectable purchaser of their lots in that city, merchant or not, has ever done. They are the lords of the city—its founders!

Davis for Appellees. 388

The bill seeks to recover the half of the value of the wall standing on the land of defendant.

The relief sought is based upon an agreement asserted to have been made between Curtis and Delafield, the vendors of Simpson's lot, by which Simpson was to build his wall partly on his own land, and partly on that of C. & D. adjoining, and C. & D. covnanting to use the wall so built, and pay Simpson for its use.

The agreement set up amounts, first, to a covenant by C. & D. to permit Simpson to erect a part of his wall on the land of C. & D., and if valid at all, gave Simpson such an interest in the land as would protect him from a trespass suit.

This kind of agreement is of itself void as being against the statute of frauds. 4 Sanford, 485.

The agreement set up is void, because it seeks to establish in Simpson a greater interest in land than that conveyed by his deed and the contract of purchase.

The evidence which was offered to sustain the agreement was illegal, because it was offered to enlarge the estate of Simpson beyond the terms of the deed. A condition was attempted to be proven, which was repugnant to the written contract.

If the agreement as to the wall and its use was a valid one, and in writing, it would be a covenant running with the land, and would continue forever. Can there be such a thing as a covenant running with land, resting upon parol? If it was such a covenant, it would bind purchasers, and this cannot be where there is no writing and no record. In this case, the agreement set forth claims a right to payment for the wall from the time at which the building is erected by Day. Suppose the wall had been 389 built for an hundred years, how absurd would be an attempt to establish by parol and enforce such an agreement after so long a time.

If the agreement set up does not amount to a covenant running with the land, and as such to be performed by the assignee or purchaser, then it was the personal covenant of C. & D., and if so it is void, because it was in writing, and is barred by the statute of limitations.

The covenant on the part of Simpson to erect a house, was a part of the consideration of the sale. The contract is that he shall build on the lot sold him, and not on that of C. & D. There is no covenant by C. & D. as to any right or benefit to accrue to Simpson, as a duty to be performed by C. & D., other than such as is expressly confined to the lot sold Simpson.

Suppose that the wall, when built by Simpson, was erected under an agreement such as made it a party wall. In such case each would own the half of the wall standing on his own land, without regard as to which one paid for the work. If the whole price was paid by one, the other would be debtor to him for half the cost.

But secondly, the agreement set up, if sustained, conveys to C. & D., and their assigns, an interest in the land of Simpson so long as the wall stands. This sort of agreement is also void, for the reason before given.

Thirdly, the agreement not only protects Simpson's occupation of the land of C. & D., and affords him a defence to any action of ejectment or trespass, but it goes still further, and limits and controls the use and enjoyment by C. & D. of their land. But for the agreement, C. & D. could build on their land and use all erections upon it—"cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum," the well known maxim of law, excludes all right to control the use of land by its owner.

390 By the agreement, C. & D. can only use their land, and all standing upon it by paying to Simpson a sum of money. This amounts to a conveyance to Simpson of an interest in land, by parol agreement, and as such is void.

WRIGHT, C. J.:

This is a cause brought up on appeal from a decree in the Circuit Court of Franklin county, dismissing the bill of complaint therein. The facts disclosed by the pleadings and the evidence are as follows:

On the 18th April, 1836, the Apalachicola Land Company, by their directors, entered into a written agreement with Samuel Simpson, since deceased, whereby they undertook to convey to Simpson lot No. 2 in the plan of the city of Apalachicola, complete and perfect titles to the said Simpson to be made, on his paying for the property the purchase money agreed on, and on condition also that Simpson should erect upon the lot in question a substantial brick building of a size, character and description particularly set forth.

On the 13th of January, 1838, a complete and perfect title was made to Simpson, he having in the meantime performed the conditions imposed by the above written agreement. Lot No. 3, adjacent to Lot No. 2, remained undisposed of by the Land Company until 1st October, 1846, when a lease was made of Lot No. 3 to Jeremiah Day and Daniel J. Day, by which lease this lot was demised for the term of seven years, at an annual rent of $300. The Days proceeded at once to erect a brick store-house on lot No. 3, using the wall of the building previously erected by Simpson as the partition wall between Simpson and themselves, which partition wall had been built six inches on each of the lots Nos. 2 and 3.

The relief sought by the bill is that the Apalachicola 391
Land Company, or the Days, whichever may be liable therefor, should be decreed to pay to the complainant the one half of the expense of the building of said partition wall.

The depositions of a number of witnesses were taken in the cause, and the substance of the evidence thus obtained is, that the buildings erected on Water street, (where lots 2 and 3 are situate,) were of uniform size, 30 feet front by 80 feet deep, and three stories high; that party walls were left in a rough, unfinished state for the adjacent owner to build against, and that such was the case with the wall between lots 2 and 3; that adjacent builders paid each one half the expense of the partition wall; that by the conditions of sale, buildings were required to be of brick; that the Land Company had an agent at Apalachicola, who was cognizant of these arrangements; that the usual mode of building was to place half of the partition wall on the adjacent lot, &c. Each of these witnesses had himself built on Water streeet.

The use intended to be made of this evidence is not very clear. If it was designed to establish an usage in the matter of building partition walls at Apalachicola, in 1836 and '7, and thereby to show that there was an implied obligation upon the Land Company, or their lessees, to contribute to the party wall erected by Simpson, it is scarcely necessary to say that no such obligation could arise—certainly not upon the Land Company, whose business was the selling of lots, not building on them; and certainly not upon the other respondents, the Days, for nearly eight years elapsed after the building of Simpson's store before the date of the lease to the Days, and there is no proof that they had any notice of such usage. Judging from the course of the argument, however, the object of this testimony would seem to be to fix upon the Land Company a participation, agency and control in these building arrangements, out- 392 side of their written contracts. But the evidence proves nothing of the sort, and if it did it would be met by the familiar principle, as true in equity as at law, that no parol evidence can be received to alter, vary or contradict the terms of a deed. It is upon the deeds, then—the conveyance to Simpson and the lease to the Days—that we are to consider this case.

Reduced to its simple elements, the case made for the consideration of the court is this: Simpson was owner of lot No. 2. He built on his whole front, and encroached six inches on lot No. 3. The Days afterwards leased and built on lot No. 3, and availed themselves of the partition wall which Simpson had thus supplied.

The principal authority relied on for the complainant, is the case of Campbell vs. Mesier & Dunstan, 4 John. Ch. R., 334. In that case an old party wall, standing between two houses which were in a ruinous condition, was taken down by the owner of one of the houses, to enable him to build his house anew. He gave notice of his intention to the owner of the adjoining house, and requested him to contribute to the work. It was decided by the learned Chancellor that the owner of the newly built house was entitled to contribution in the building of the wall.

By a careful comparison of the case above cited with the case at bar, it will be seen that there is but little analogy between the two. The mere existence of an old party wall between two adjoining lots, in a town or city, built equally on both lots, carries along with it the idea of joint ownership in the wall, and a common obligation to keep it in repair; for though upon the principle that the owner of the soil owns all above it, the property in the wall follows the property in the land, yet the common users of a wall adjoining lands belonging to different owners, is prima Orman, Adm'r., vs. Day et al.—Opinion of Court.

393 facie evidence that the wall and the land on which it stands belong to the owners of the adjoining lands in equal moities as tenants in common. See Gale and Whatley on Easements, 296. And this is in effect the principle established and enforced in the case of Campbell vs. Mesier & Dunstan. But it by no means follows from this that when the owner of a lot builds upon it a new party wall, and places one half of it upon the lot of his neighbor, he thereby acquires any right to claim contribution for the building of the wall. It is every way right to build upon his land or not to build upon it, and to permit or forbid any other person to build upon it; and if it be built upon in any way or to any extent, without the consent of the owner, such building upon it is a trespass. It is alleged, however, that the Land Company had their agent on the ground, and that he made no objection to the building of the wall in question. This makes no difference, whatever may have been the relative rights of the purchasers of lots who built in 1836 and '37, under the general consent proved in the case in regard to party walls. That understanding could not affect the Land Company, whose business, as has been already said, was the selling, not the building on, the vacant lots of the city, and who, so far as appears, gave their agent no authority in the matter. The case of Sherrod vs. Cister, reported in 4 Langford, 480, is full upon the point involved in this cause, and its reasoning commands the entire assent of this court. The principles of law and equity arising in that case, were, in all respects, identical with those which govern the case before us. There the decision of Chancellor Kent in Campbell vs. Mesier is carefully reviewed, and it is clearly shown that its reasoning has no application to a case like the present.

Cases were cited in argument to show that where the owner of the adjoining lot was applied to by the person who 394 was about to build a party wall, to contribute to the expense, and such person assented, and signified that he would pay his proportion, the same might be recovered at law. Of this there cannot be a doubt. The mutual convenience of the parties would be an adequate consideration for such a provision; but then the promise must be express. Upon the whole, it seems very clear that the Apalachicola Land Company was at no time bound to contribute to the expense of erecting the party wall built by Simpson, and it follows with stronger reason that the other respondents are not responsible. The lease to them covered the whole of lot No. 3, and upon the principle of law that the owner of the soil is the owner of everything built upon it, carried with it also the one half of the wall.

Other points were made in the record and in the argument, and numerous authorities were cited to sustain them. It is sufficient to say, however, that the whole case is against the complainant, on the merits.

Let the decree below be affirmed.

DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of Florida,

AT

JANUARY TERM, 1854.

HELD AT TALLAHASSEE.

DANIEL LADD, APPELLANT, VS. THOMAS B. CHAIRES AND JAMES L. TOMPKINS, APPELLEE.

Misrepresentation in a material point, innocently made, will vitiate a contract, and be ground for setting it aside, or giving compensation to the extent of the mistake.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit for Leon county, Hon. J. Wayles Baker presiding.

The appellees, who were complainants below, filed their bill, alleging that they applied to the appellant to purchase three eighths of land in Wakulla county; that the appellant agreed to sell said land to them, but stated that with these three eighths they must also purchase another eighth immediately adjoining, the title to which he held; that appellees objected to the taking of this additional eighth, but appellant representing that said eighth was attached 396 to the other eighths by a title that made it necessary to sell them altogether, they were finally induced to include this additional eighth in the bargain. They further allege that this additional eighth was not desired by them for the purpose that moved them to the purchase, and that but for the representations of said appellant, they would not have included it in their purchase; that appellant, after entering into the contract for the sale of said land, and after having given bond for titles to the same, in order to obtain a title to said additional eighth, entered the same at the U. S. Land office at Tallahassee; that as soon as it was ascertained by appellees that appellant had no title to said additional eighth, except that acquired as aforesaid from the United States, they remonstrated with him upon the manner in which he had induced them, against their will and wishes, to include said additional eighth in their purchases, and at the same time proposed either that they should not be required to take said tract at all, or that said appellant should, in good faith, let them have it at the price it cost him, both of which propositions he declined. They charge that, under the facts and circumstances, it would be a fraud upon them to require them to pay the full amount agreed upon, and that it would be aiding appellant, against good consecience and fair dealing, to take advantage of his own wrong.

The bill further alleges that in the bond for title given by said appellant, there is included a small tract of land on which was a valuable mill seat, but to which appellant could make no title, the same being the property of other parties; that as it was not intended to include this tract in the purchase, appellees procured an endorsement to be made on said bond, after its delivery, excluding said tract from its operation; but they claim that it is not binding in law upon them. Nevertheless, they are not disposed to 397 avail themselves of this mistake, and are willing to release appellant from so much of the bond as pertains to said parcel of land, but insist that they cannot be required to do so save in a Court of Equity, and they submit that before such relief would be granted, the court would require appellant to do equity, by allowing an abatement equal to the difference between the contract price of said additional eighth, and the amount paid for it at the U. S. Land Office. The bill concludes with a prayer that the contract be reformed so as to require the appellant to execute titles to all said lands, excepting the mill seat parcel, upon his being paid the amount of the purchase money, less the difference between the contract price of said additional eighth and the amount paid for it by appellant at the U. S. Land Office.

The appellant, in his answer, states that he did represent that he was authorized to sell all said lands, for the benefit of J. and N. Hamlin, who had held the title, and were largely indebted to him, and desired him to sell the lands for their benefit. To this end, they had made a deed to appellant, conveying said lands to him, with a view to enable him to make sale of them; that in the negotiations for their sale, he was governed by a map in his possession, prepared by N. Hamlin for his private use, which represented all the lands included in the aforesaid bond for titles as the property of J. and N. Hamlin; that N. Hamlin was and is a man remarkable for accuracy in all business transactions, and especially in matters of this nature, inasmuch as he was a practical Surveyor, and well acquainted with all the country in and about and including the lands referred to; that appellant was ignorant at the time that the title to the additional eighth was in the United States, and acted in good faith in all his negotiations; that some time after the execution of his bond for titles, he 398 ascertained to his surprise that the title to this additional eighth was in the United States, and that therefore, to enable him to convey the same, he entered it at the U. S. Land Office.

The appellant, in his answer, further alleged that two eighths of the land were intersected by the St. Mark's River, and were deemed valuable in consequence mainly of the water power and privilege which appertained to the same; that the object and design of the appellees was, as commonly understood, to erect a factory upon part of these lands; that these lands had been held by the Hamlins at ten dollars per acre, and only through the agency of appellant could appellees have effected a purchase on the favorable terms agreed on; that he refused to sell the two eighths upon the river without including the eighth not so intersected, because, in point of fact, the outside eighths were worth nothing, except in connection with the others; that appellees did propose to exclude one of the eighths from the contract, and pay him for the remainder, and that he refused to accede to such a proposition because he was ready to comply with his contract in good faith, and because the eighth objected to was not worth an equal proportion of the purchase money, and because appellant could, at the time of the sale, have sold the lands at the same price to other persons, and because, also, the accident with reference to the title to the additional eighth resulted in no damage to appellees, and furnished no ground for any complaint on their part.

The principal facts stated in the bill and answer were admitted to be true by the parties, and the Circuit Court pronounced a decree in conformity to the prayer of the bill, from which appellant took an appeal to this court.

James T. Archer for Appellant.

Mariano D. Papy for Appellees. 399

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The contest in this case arises from an alleged misrepresentation in the sale of a tract of land Complainants, Tompkins and Chaires, assert that they made application to Ladd for the purchase of a tract of land containing 240 acres, which he expressed a willingness to sell, but insisted upon their taking with it a tract of eighty acres adjoining, which he said he owned. This they objected to, alleging that it is not suited to the objects they had in view —the erection of a mill and factory. Ladd insisted on the sale of the entire tract, and refused to sell unless the whole was taken; that they purchased, under these circumstances, and afterwards finding that he was not the owner, as he had represented, of this 80 acre tract, they applied for an abatement of the price on the last note remaining unpaid, and he refusing, their application is now to a Court of Equity for relief. The court below sustained the bill, and decreed in their favor, from which Ladd has appealed to this court.

It is distinctly admitted that Ladd represented himself authorized to sell the contested eighth, being described by a map in his possession, prepared by a former proprietor, whose accuracy he had reason to confide in, and that it did not belong to him. After discovering this fact, he bought the land, and insists on their taking it agreeably to the bargain. He resists their claim for release on the ground of their having sustained no damage or injury, and that the subject in contest was not material or essential to the agreement. We do not think the latter objection comes with propriety from a party who made the sale of this tract the turning point of the bargain, in express terms—complainants being told he would not sell any unless the entire tract was sold. It was to buy this with the other, or buy none. 400
If not material, why insist upon this condition to the sale? The only motive we can conceive, was to prevent the loss of the 80 acre tract, which might be the case if the other part was sold without it. We can regard the sale of this tract as immaterial and indifferent only on the supposition the defendant could have got as much without its sale as with it, which is not very likely, considering that the whole tract was sold at five dollars per acre. The price of the 240 acre tract, upon that supposition, would have been $6.66 per acre, and the price of the former proprietor, who held it at $10 per acre, would have been $13.33 per acre for the 240 acres, which we must presume he would have asked, if not the owner of the 80 acre tract. So that we think the addition of this tract must have been regarded as essential and material by the parties in framing their contract. A mistake, then, having been made, of a material character, in the formation of the contract, the question arises as to its effect in point of law.

"Where there is an error in the thing for which an individual bargains, by the general rules of contracting the contract is null, as in such cases the parties are not to be supposed to have given their assent." 1 Fonb. Eq., 114; Allen vs. Hammond, 11 Peters, 72.

"Contracts made in mutual error, under circumstances material to their character and consequences, seem, on general principles, invalid." 1 Story Eq., 154.

The same principle will apply to all other cases where the parties mutually bargain for and upon the supposition of an existing right. Ibid 164, § 143; Hitchcock vs. Giddings, 4 Price, 135.

The case in 11 Peter's Supreme Court reports illustrates the rule. There the parties bargained for the collection of a claim vs. the Portuguese government, and under the ex-

401 pectation that very great expense, trouble and delay would attend the business, a very extraordinary compensation was agreed upon. It turned out that the claim was allowed eight days before the agreement, though unknown to the parties. The court say: "The contract was entered into through the mistake of both parties, it imposes great hardship and injustice on the appellee, and is without consideration." Nevertheless they allowed him compensation for services rendered. Mr. Webster, one of the counsel, puts the doctrine, with great force, in this language: "Where a fact of leading importance to parties entering into a contract was supposed to exist, and did not exist, the contract formed in the belief that it was in existence, should be set aside." P. 68.

The rule appliles to cases of purchases where the parties have been innocently misled under a mutual mistake as to the extent of the thing sold. 1 Story, 166, § 144.

In the present case, Ladd no doubt was under the honest and sincere conviction that he was the owner of the eighty acres, and acting on that belief, it was not improper for him to treat it as his, by making it the subject of sale. With a knowledge of the fact that he was not owner, it would have been improper for him to represent himself as such, and a contract so made would be regarded as fraudulent. Having induced complainants to bargain with him, under an impression discovered afterwards to be false, can he hope to hold them to the agreement? We think not. If no agreement as to this tract was originally made, as we have seen by the authorities was clearly the case, it was not for Ladd, by a change of his position, to give validity to it. This would be to make a new bargain; to allow him to contract for them. But this cannot be. The error was his, and his must be the loss, according to every principle of right and propriety. We have alluded to ca-402 ses in which the contract was rescinded on account of the mistake. This is not asked by complainants. Indeed, it is questionable whether they would be entitled to it, as they got what was the main object of their contract—the site on the river, and the land they bargained for and desired to buy.

The party may be relieved on the principles of compensation, which is thus explained: "Where there are no indicia of fraud, and the misdescription goes only to part of the estate, and is of such nature as not to prejudice the full enjoyment of the residue, or the objects the purchaser, had especially in view in making the purchase, then the court will enforce the contract, with compensation." Atkinson on Titles, 100.

In our view the agreement must be regarded as if the eighty acre tract had not formed part of the sale, and the 240 acres had been sold without it. This would have been the case if there had been no mistake as to the ownership.

An abatement of the price should then be made to the extent this tract entered into the consideration agreed to be paid. This is the damage complainants would sustain if compelled to pay for the whole tract. Although the rate was five dollars per acre, we by no means conceive that this should be the rate of deduction. The tract containing the site was the one of value, and the eighty acre tract comparatively of much less value. So far as its addition extended the price that would have been given for the other tract, if it can be ascertained, the complainants are entitled to have a credit for on their note. We do not perceive in the record the materials for ascertaining it. Possibly it may be done through means of a Master, to whom the matter may be referred by the court below, with power to call for the estimate and papers, and examine the parties and witnesses.

The court below, concurring in disaffirming the sale of 403 the contested eighth, allowed the difference between $1.25, the price paid for it per acre, and $5, with directions that title should be made to them for the entire tract. We are of opinion that complainants are under no obligation to take it, and should not be compelled to do so by decree of the court.

Complainants insisted that the contract as to this eighth was illegal and invalid, on account of champerty. We think they are not entitled to raise this question; for giving judgment at law by consent, they reserved their equitable rights. If this defence be available, it is legal, and not equitable.

The decree of the court below will be affirmed so far as it declares the contract invalid as to the eighty acres, but will be reversed and set aside so far as it directs title to be made thereto, and fixed the damage at the sum of $300.

And the said court will proceed to appoint a Master, whose duty it shall be to proceed, in conformity with this opinion, to ascertain, as near as may be, the sum or amount for which a deduction should be made from the contract price of the land sold in consequence of the addition of the 80 acres, with power to call for estimates and papers, and examine the parties and witnesses, and for such other proceedings as may not be inconsistent with this opinion, and the rules and principles of equity and justice

DuPONT, J., delivered the following dissenting opinion:

I concur with a majority of the court in overruling the decision in this cause pronounced by the Chancellor in the court below, but dissent from so much of the order as directs the case to be sent back for further proceedings.

It is admitted by the defendant below that he did make a misrepresentation in regard to his ownership of the land in controversy, at the time of and during the treaty for the 404 sale to the complainants; but he expressly states in his answer that this misrepresentation was the result of an innocent mistake, and there is no charge or pretence in the bill that he meditated any fraud in the transaction. "Mistake" is one of the well defined and admitted grounds of Equity jurisdiction, but it is not every mistake of fact that will induce the equitable interference of the court. The doctrine upon this subject is so lucidly stated by Story, in his admirable Treatise on Equity Jurisprudence, that it seems impossible to mistake it. He says: "The rule as to ignorance or mistake of facts entitling the party to relief, has this important qualification, that the fact must be material to the act or contract; that is, that it must be essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction. For though there may be an accidental ignorance or mistake of a fact, yet if the act or contract is not materially affected by it, the party claiming relief will be denied it." Story Eq. Ju., §141, 5.

Applying the rule to the facts in this case, the question arises, what was the fact in reference to which the mistake occurred? The allegation and admission is that Ladd represented himself to be the owner of the eighth of land in controversy, when in fact and in truth the title was in the government. Was the mere fact as to who held the title at the time of the treaty, a matter "material" to or the "efficient cause" of the contract? It would seem not, for the purchasers took good care to provide against a failure of title, by taking the covenant of the vendor to perfect the same, and he is now able and ready to comply with that covenant. Wherein, then, consists the "materiality" of the mistake? I am at a loss to perceive It certainly did not affect the value of the purchase, for it is strongly intimated in the bill, if not expressed in so ma-

405 ny words, that the particular eighth of land in controversy was wholly valueless. Now, upon the subject of "materiality," I take the rule of equity to be this: that no misrepresentation or mistake of fact will be deemed "material" which does not affect the value of the thing contracted for. The representation that he had the title to this particular eighth, was doubtless a potent argument in the mouth of Ladd why he would not consent to separate it from the other three; but as a matter of argument merely, I do not think it comes up to the rule. At most, it can only be received as "damnum absque injuria," and equity never interposes except to remedy or prevent injury. Story Eq. Jur., §151; 2 Bibb, 474, Crittenden vs. Craig.

But the rule of equity proceeds further, and sometimes refuses its interference even where the mistake is of a material fact. This occurs when there has been a strict observance of perfect good faith between the parties, and the mistake complained of is the mistake of all. Story Eq. Ju., §147; Fonb. Eq., Chap. 2, §7, (note v.)

"Where the mistake is not the occasion of the promise, the act is valid, there being nothing wanting of the true assent on all sides." 2 Pow. on Con., 263.

I can discover nothing in the facts of this case which calls for the interference of a Court of Equity. A vendor, supposing himself to be the owner of a tract of land, contracts to sell the same, and executes a covenant to perfect the title. He afterwards discovers that he was mistaken as to his ownership, and that the title is in fact in another. He forthwith purchases the title, and thus puts himself in a position to comply with his covenant, and it is now claimed that instead of thus acting, he ought to have communicated the fact to the vendees, and left it to their option to have rescinded the contract. I do not think he was bound by any principle of equity or good morals voluntarily to 406 place himself within the power and consequently at the mercy of the vendees, who held his covenant for title, and might, upon a demand or refusal, have proceeded against him for damages, in a court of law, or for a specific performance in a Court of Equity. In cases where there appears no meditated fraud, equity is as observant of the mutuality of rights in the enforcement of contracts, as it is of the mutuality of assent in their concoction, and a very simple test of the principle involved in this controversy is this: Might the vendor have been compelled to respond in damages for a non-compliance with his covenant for title? Evidently he might. If, then, he might have been thus compelled, I am at a loss to discover the principle upon which it can be ruled to be iniquitous in him to place himself in a position to make good his legal obligation. The vendees are now tendered all they contracted for—the title—and with that I think they ought to be satisfied.

I am the more decided in my dissent in this cause because of the apprehension that by making the Courts of Equity Jurisdiction too easily accessible, parties may be induced to abate that vigilance and caution in the concoction of their contracts, which affords the surest guarantee against litigation. Whilst Courts of Equity should be ever open to rebuke fraud in all its aspects, they should nevertheless be careful not to encourage negligence by a too ready interference in the business transactions of individuals. Pothier has expounded this subject with his usual force and sterling sense, and given to us a well defined line of demarkation. "As a matter of conscience," says he, "any deviation from the most exact and scrupulous sincerity, is repugnant to the good faith that ought to prevail in contracts. But in civil tribunals, a person cannot be allowed to complain of trifling deviations from good faith in the party with whom he has contracted. Nothing but what is plainly in- 407 jurious to good faith ought to be there considered as a fraud sufficient to impeach a contract." With how much greater force is this doctrine applicable to a mere mistake of fact, unaccompanied by any pretence of fraud. I am of opinion that the facts of this case do not afford sufficient ground for the interference of equity, and therefore think that the bill ought to have been dismissed.

JOSEPH DAWKINS, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, VS. CURTIS CARROLL, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

An Appeal or Writ of Error does not lie to an order granting a new trial in a common law case.

This was a Writ of Error, under the act of 1852-'3, to an order of the Circuit Court of Leon county, granting a new trial to the defendant in error. The Writ of Error was issued, and the cause taken to the Supreme Court, before it was finally decided in the court below upon the new trial granted.

Archer and Papy for Plaintiff in Error.

D. S. Walker for Defendant in Error.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

It was not the design of the Legislature, as we conceive, in the passage of the act of 1852-'3, "in addition to and amendatory of the several acts concerning Writs of Error and Appeals to the Supreme Court," to allow a Writ of Error to an order granting a new trial. That act provides "that orders and judgments wherein the Circuit Court shall 408 allow and grant, or shall refuse to allow and grant any motion for a new trial, or any motion to amend the pleadings, or to file new and additional pleadings, or to amend the record of any cause during the term of the court at which it was determined, or shall refuse to allow and grant a motion for the continuance of the cause, shall and may be assigned for matter and cause of error, upon any writ of error sued out, or appeal taken to the Supreme Court."

By the original act, an appeal or Writ of Error lies only to a final judgment, and it is upon the trial of a case so brought up that the grant or refusal of any or all these motions may with propriety be determined. To allow the appeal during the progress of the case, as the pleadings are amended, or a motion for a new trial, or a continuance is granted or refused, would be to protract and delay a case, at the caprice of either party, to the almost entire defeat of justice. We are not aware of any such course in any of the States where these orders are the subject of revision; indeed, are confident that the opposite practice universally prevails.

In the succeeding section of the same act, we find a provision "that appeals may be taken and prosecuted from an interlocutory order, decision, judgment, or decree of the Circuit Court, sitting as Courts of Equity." Why this change of language, unless to intimate a different purpose on the part of the Legislature in the two classes of cases?

The Writ of Error will be dismissed, with costs.

7. A deed by a President of the Bank should conform to the order of the Board of Directors, but it is not, on account of a deviation, void, especially after a lapse of ten years, and the bank has received and retained money under it: nor does it lie with a stranger to raise the objection.

Appeal from Leon Circuit Court.

This was a motion in the nature of an audita querula to quash an execution issued on a judgment in favor of the Union Bank, against R. K. Call, on the ground of a release subsequent to the rendition of the judgment. Morrison, who claimed to hold this judgment by assignment from the bank, appeared and opposed the motion.

On the twenty-fifth day of February, 1842, the Union Bank recovered against Richard K. Call a judgment for $4080 40.

The notes upon which this judgment was obtained, were secured by a mortgage, executed by R. K. Call and George K. Walker, dated 14th April, 1840, and also by a mort-410 gage executed by R. K. Call, President of the Tallahassee Railroad Company, dated 20th April, 1842.

On the fourth day of April, 1843, an indenture was entered into between the Union Bank of Florida, of the first part, Daniel Meinertzhagan, (as partner of the commercial House of Frederick, Huth & Co., in London,) in behalf of himself and said house, of the second part, and Richard K. Call and George K. Walker, of the third part, by which said bank assigned to Meinertzhagan sundry notes of Call and Walker, amounting to $88,292.24, for a full and valuable consideration, and also assigned to said Meinertzhagan the mortgages executed by Call and Walker on the 14th April, 1840, and by Call, as President of the Tallahassee Railroad Company, on the 20th April, 1842. By this indenture, the bank, for the purpose of making the security of Meinertzhagan full and complete for the payment of the notes so assigned, agreed to release and did thereby release all lien, whether created by judgment, mortgage, or otherwise, on the property embraced in the said mortgages so assigned, and every part thereof, to secure any other liability whatever of Call and Walker, other than the liabilities so therein transferred to Meinertzhagan. And it was further agreed that the bank would look to the other parties on the notes described in the mortgages aforesaid, whether they have been prosecuted to judgment or not, for which Call and Walker are responsible as endorsers or sureties, in any manner, and in case it became necessary, on failure to collect said notes from the principal parties thereto, to resort to the securities thereon, the bank agreed to receipt to said Call and Walker for their proportion of each of said notes, according to the number of endorsers respectively, &c. Under this deed, Call claimed to be released from the judgment in question.

Union Bank of Florida and Morrison vs. Call—Statement of Case.

On the 22nd day of February, 1843, the Union Bank of 411
Florida, by an instrument signed by John G. Gamble, President, assigned to Charles Morrison the notes upon which this judgment was obtained. By this instrument, it appears that R. K. Call, with several other parties, were endorsers of these notes, and that judgment had been recovered against them respectively by the bank.

Call, by his attorneys, moved the court to exclude this deed of assignment from the consideration of the jury, because there was no proof to show that John G. Gamble was authorized to execute the same, and to affix thereto the seal of the bank, by any resolution of the Board of Directors, and the court thereupon refused to allow said deed to go in evidence, without such proof, to which Morrison, by his attorney, excepted. Morrison, by his attorney, thereupon renewed his offer to introduce said deed in evidence, in connection with certain testimony which it was expected would be given in evidence, to show that said deed was executed by authority of the Board of Directors, or that the said board ratified the same subsequent to its execution; whereupon the said deed was then permitted by the court to be read to the jury, subject to its charge as to its legal effects as evidence.

Morrison then offered in evidence the following entries in the minute book of the proceedings of the Board of Directors of said Union Bank, for the purpose of proving the authority to Gamble, the President, to execute the assignment to Morrison, or its subsequent ratification:

The General meeting convened on Thursday, the 9th February, pursuant to adjournment, and the Chairman having called the meeting to order, the minutes of the General Meeting from its commencement, were read and adopted.

"The resolution reported by the committee again coming up, it was adopted, after being amended so as to read as follows:

Resolved, That the directors of the bank be authorized and instructed to transfer and assign any of the assets of the bank, other than the stock notes, in payment of any of its endorsed liabilities: Provided, That any of the holders of any such liabilities, shall, upon receiving such assets, for any part of their debt, surrender an equivalent amount of Territorial bonds, which they may hold as collateral security.

"The meeting after deliberating on other matters, adjourned over to the next day, the 10th, at the conclusion of the session on which day, the minutes read as follows:

Extract from the minutes of the Board of Directors of the Union Bank of Florida, at a meeting held at the banking house, in Tallahassee, on the 1st of January, 1843.

"The following resolution was moved and carried, viz:

"Resolved, That the President, C. H. DuPont, R. W. Williams and R. H. Bradford be appointed a committee

(any two of whom to act,) to confer with the partners of the House of Huth & Co., of London, on the subject of their claim upon the Union Bank of Florida, and in their absence, with the agent of the house in Tallahassee, to ascertain and report upon the sum due on the 1st of January, 1843, and to arrange some mode of paying the interest now due, and providing for the payment of the principal and interest of said claim hereafter, and that the same committee have power in like manner to confer with any representative of the house of Morrison, Sons & Co., in relation to their claims upon the Union Bank.

"The Board then adjourned.

(Signed,) "C. F. MERCER."

Wednesday, 22d February, 1843, the President submitted the following resolution to the Board, which, after they had unanimously stricken therefrom the proviso requiring the guarantee of the Cashier, was, by a majority, adopted, viz:

"Resolved, That on the certificate of the Cashier of the Union Bank of Florida, that the endorsed sterling bonds and the hypothecated Territorial bonds, held by the house of Morrison, Sons & Co., of London, are committed to the care of their agent, Samuel Jaudon, of the city of New York, the order of Charles Morrison, representative of that house, now in the city of Tallahassee, upon Samuel Jaudon, for the delivery of said bonds, or any part thereof, to John Palmer, President of the Merchant's Bank of New York, for the use and benefit of the Union Bank of Florida, shall be taken from the representatives of the house of Morrison, Sons & Co., as equivalent to the delivery of said bonds, or such part thereof as the said order may comprehend, to this bank: Provided, the Cashier of this bank shall guarantee the delivery of the bonds for which such 414 order may be given to the said John J. Palmer, on the presentation of the order to S. Jaudon, Agent as aforesaid of the house of Morrison, Sons & Co."

Extract from the minutes of Board of Directors:

"On Thursday, 11th January, 1844, we burned the following sterling bonds, which were received from James Morrison & Sons, viz:

"WEDNESDAY, 21st February, 1844.

"The President read and signed the minutes of the last meteing of the Board. He then exhibited to the Board the receipt of R. K. Call, Governor of the Territory of Florida, for seventy-one bonds of the Territory, which the President of the bank had delivered to him, for the purpose of being cancelled, each bond being for one thousand dollars, dated 1st of January, 1838, signed R. K. Call, Governor, and countersigned T. H. Austin, Treasurer, of which bonds there were of "Letter A, No. 1497 to 1500, both inclusive, 4 bonds 1st January, 1864, 34 bonds.

"Letter B, Nos. 1936 to 1969, both inclusive, payable payable 1st January, 1862.

"Letter C, No. 2468 to 2500, both inclusive, payable 1st January, 1866, 33 bonds—Bonds 71."

NOTE.—These bonds are entered in register, received 415 from Charles Morrison.

"10th July, 1844, the Board also burned the coupons of interest upon the following Territorial bonds, which bonds have been received by the bank from various parties, viz: Nos. 2, 11, 22, 246, 247, 287, 288, 289, 402, 414, 434, 435, 666, 667, 689, 705, 711, 712, 713, 720, 721, 722, 723, 731, 732, 733, 861, 1497, 1498, 1499, 1500, 1827 to 1862, inclusive, 1936 to 1969, both inclusive, 2359 to 2395, inclusive, 2468 to 2500, inclusive, 2855 to 2865, inclusive, 2889 to 2913, inclusive.

In the book which contains a register of the bonds received from the Territory, will be found minutes of what relates to the reception, cancelling, &c., of said bonds, in full detail.'"

Morrison then offered to read in evidence, for the same purpose, certain entries in the book of accounts of said bank, accompanied by the testimony of a witness, to prove that said books of account were at all times subject to the inspection of the Board of Directors, and that an examination of said books had been made by a committee of the said Board, and that said book and its entries had never been disavowed by said Board; to the introduction of which, said Call, by his attorney, objected, and the court sustaining said objection, said Morrison, by his attorney, excepted.

Morrison then offered the deposition of Charles F. Mercer, who testified that as attorney of Charles Morrison, he received an assignment, from the Union Bank to said Morrison, of certain notes and judgments, which was made to satisfy a debt due to said Morrison, and that said assignment included two notes of C. E. Bartlett, endorsed by Call. These are the notes upon which the judgment in question was rendered. That he accepted the trust of Morrison with 416 the intention of performing all its obligations in good faith, and that he believes he gave all the notices which his duty as such attorney required of him, and doubts not that R. K. Call knew at the time, or shortly after, of the said assignment to Charles Morrison. He gave written notice of said assignment to George K. Walker. He was appointed attorney of Charles Morrison in February, 1843, at the date of the assignment to him as aforesaid. He was appointed attorney of Frederick Huth & Co., in London, sometime in October, 1842, and regarded himself as such until he instituted a suit against them. On his return to Tallahassee, he immediately entered into negotiations with G. K. Walker, acting for himself and R. K. Call, for the payment of a debt due to Huth & Co., from the bank. Pending this negotiation, Meinertzhagan, a partner of the house of Huth & Co., arrived in New York, and instructed him, witness, to await his intended journey to Tallahassee, and to take no steps in behalf of the house prior to his arrival, so that, although appointed attorney, his functions ceased, in the opinion of Meinertzhagan, and he afterwards so insisted.

George K. Walker, a witness on the part of Morrison, testified that he had, for a long time previous to the transaction spoken of, acted as the general agent of R. K. Call; that as such agent, he transacted almost all kinds of business for account of said Call; that he had less to do with the real estate of Call than his other interests; that he had once received a power of attorney, thinks it was in 1838 or 1840, which was produced, and read as follows:

Power of Attorney.

Know all men by these presents that I, R. K. Call, of the County of Leon and Territory of Florida, hath constituted and appointed George K. Walker, of the County and Ter-

Union Bank of Florida and Morrison vs. Call—Statement of Case.

417 ritory aforesaid, my true and lawful attorney, for me and in my name to transact for me all and every kind of business whatever; to purchase or sell for me, in my name, all kinds of property, real and personal; to sign my name to any note, bond, draft, deed, or any other instrument, and to bind me thereby in as full and ample a manner as I myself could do, were I personally present and signing the same.

I hereby authorize my said attorney to fix my seal to all and every kind of instrument which he may think in any wise necessary or proper.

Hereby ratifying and confirming whatever my said attorney may do touching the premises.

R. K. CALL.

Witness further stated that he acted as the agent of Call and for himself in conducting the negotiation with the Union Bank and Meinertzhagan, which resulted in the execution of the deed signed by himself, Call and Meinertzhagan, in April, 1843; that he, witness, from time to time during the progress of the negotiation, communicated with call in relation thereto, and advised and consulted with him as to the terms thereof, and that Call took no active part in the making of said arrangement, but consented to the terms of said deed, and signed it without objection; that prior to the time at which such negotiation had commenced, he, the witness, had received notice from Charles F. Mercer, as agent of Charles Morrison, that the notes which are the foundation of the judgment in question, and on which he, witness, and Call were endorsers, together with the judgment thereon, had been assigned to said Morrison.

Witness further stated that at the time of said negotiation with Meinertzhagan, he knew of said assignment to 418 Morrison, but does not know that the fact was made known to Call at that time.

Morrison then proposed to prove further by said Walker that at the time of the execution of said deed with Meinertzhagan, and during the negotiation referred to, he, the said Walker, did not contract with the said Union Bank for a release of the judgment against him, said witness, and said Call, on the notes referred to; to which evidence so proposed to be given, Call, by his attorney, objected, and the objection being sustained, an exception was taken.

Call offered in evidence certain correspondence between Huth & Co. and C. F. Mercer, on the appointment of the latter as the attorney of the former, in October, 1842, by which it was agreed that in consideration of the allowances to said Mercer, he was to give up the whole of his time, as far as it might be necessary, to the prosecution of the claim of Huth & Co., and not to take charge of any other business which could in any way interfere with their's.

The following entries from the minute book of the proceedings of the Board of Directors of the Union Bank, were read in evidence by said Call:

"At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Union Bank of Florida, on Wednesday, the 5th of April, 1843, present, John G. Gamble, President, R. W. Williams, R. Hayward, H. W. Braden, John G. Anderson, D. C. Wilson, Esqrs., Directors.

"The President, as one of the committee appointed last week to confer with Messrs. Meinertzhagan and Huth, reported the following memoranda of what had been agreed upon by the committee:

"MEM.—The committee and G. K. Walker have agreed 'That upon Call and Walker, paying to the bank, in its endorsed Sterling Bonds, the sum of $88,292 24, the amount due for principal and interest upon nine notes described below, and upon payment by them, (in bonds of the 419 Territory of Florida, which have been sold by the bank, or by the payment in any other of its liabilities,) of five notes of Samuel Reid, amounting $8,711 70, and one note of R. K. West, amounting $1491 16, with the interest due upon said notes, upon which said notes said Call and Walker are endorsers, the bank agrees to look to other parties, (payers and endorsers,) upon other notes endorsed by said Call and Walker, now belonging to the bank, described in the mortgages which were executed by the Tallahassee Railroad Company and by said Call and Walker, on the 20th of April, 1842, for payment of said notes; and in the event of the failure to collect the amount of said notes or obligations from the original parties thereto, and recourse to the endorsers and securities thereon becomes necessary, the bank will receipt to said Call and Walker for their proportion of each of said notes or obligations, said Call and Walker covenanting and agreeing to assign and transfer to the bank all the securities under their control, given for the security of the payment of said endorsed notes, and at all times to give their aid in the collection of said endorsenotes.

At the close of meeting signed, 420
"JOHN G. GAMBLE,
"President."

The foregoing is correctly extracted from the book of minutes of the Board of Directors of the Union Bank of Florida, by C. G. ENGLISH, Solicitor.

Call further produced Thomas Brown as a witness, who stated that he, witness, was a party endorser on the notes of C. E. Bartlett, on which the said Call and Walker were also endorsers, and on which the judgment in question was rendered against said Call and Walker, and that he was not notified by Charles Fenton Mercer, or by any other person, of the assignment of said notes to said Morrison, by the Union Bank of Florida, by the deed of , 1843.

No other testimony being introduced, the said Morrison, by his attorney, moved the court to instruct the jury as follows:

1. That the release given in evidence is upon its face not binding on the corporations, and unless there is proof that some other security was given than that stated in the deed, it does not amount to a release to Call and Walker of the debts covenanted in the deed to be released, because the directors could not lawfully release the debts due the bank, unless the debtor gave some consideration for the release.

2. If the deed of release was not made in conformity with the resolution of the Board of Directors, and not upon the consideration required in the resolution to be paid by Call and Walker, then such release is not binding on the bank, without evidence to show that the Directors consented to the deed of release in the form in which it was made.

421 3. A resolution framed by the Board of Directors, authorizing the release of Call and Walker from notes and judgments, which resolution contained the words "now belonging to the bank," does not authorize the execution by the president of the bank, under the seal of said corporation, of a release, without any exception, such as the resolutions contain. The words, "now belonging to the bank," if found in such resolution, are to be considered as being intended by the Directors to have the legal effect to exclude from the release all notes and judgments which had been assigned by the bank, if any such had been assigned.

4. If the jury find that Mercer has sworn, on his cross-examination, that he never did agree to any release of the judgment against Call, such evidence is entitled to more credit than any inference drawn from any agreement made by Mercer with Huth & Co. The positive testimony of Mercer that he did not assent to any release of the judgment, is entitled to more weight than inferences based upon promises of Mercer to Huth & Co., to do no business for any other person.

5. The books of account of the corporation, with proof that they are such books, and without evidence to show that the entries were improperly made, are evidence to prove the acts by the entries in such books stated to have been done. Such entries, when shown and proved to have been made before the date of the deed of release to Call and Walker, are competent testimony for the jury to consider in determining whether the assignment given in evidence, was made by authority of the directors.

6. If the jury find from the evidence that Walker acted as the agent of Call in making the negotiation and arranging the terms, which are evidenced by the deed of the 14th of April, 1843, signed by said Call and Walker, and others,
422 and given in evidence, and the jury find from the evidence that Walker had knowledge at the time he made such negotiation, and whilst he so acted as agent of Call in respect thereto, that the judgment in question had been assigned to Morrison, such proof of knowledge on the part of Walker, is evidence of knowledge by Call of the assignment aforesaid.

Which instructions the court refused to give to the jury, as prayed for, and said Morrison by his attorney, excepted.

The jury having returned a verdict in favor of Call, judgment was rendered thereon, from which Morrison appealed.

T. Randall for Appellants.

J. T. Archer and M. A. Long for Appellee.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

On the 25th day of February, 1852, the Union Bank recovered judgment against Richard K. Call for the sum of $4080 40, on which an execution issued the 29th day of February, 1851. On the day of , Call filed his audita querela, claiming that the judgment was released and the execution discharged, and praying that it might be so declared.

The bank disclaimed any interest in the judgment and execution, having, as they stated, resigned the same to Charles Morrison. He files his answer and states that on the 22d February, 1843, the bank, for a full and ample consideration, actually paid, assigned to him the said judgment, with other claims; so that the controversy is, in fact between Call on the one side, claiming under his release, and Morrison under his assignment, and it has been so treated on both sides.

The case was tried by a jury, who found for the plaintiff,

Call. On the trial, Morrison excepted to various rulings 423 of the court, which are now presented for consideration. His assignment of errors embraces the instructions given to the jury, but we are of opinion that these are not properly before the court, and cannot be considered. Although copied into the record, they form no part of it, as they were not excepted to at the trial, nor embodied or referred to in the bill of exceptions. It is perhaps not very material in this case, as the instructions refused and the other rulings properly objected to, present the material questions in the case.

Morrison offered in evidence a deed of assignment from the bank to him, signed by the President, and under the corporate seal, which the court rejected, because there was no proof that it was authorized by the Board of Directors, but afterwards permitted to, on the representation of the defendant that he expected to show that the deed was executed by authority, and that the board ratified it subsequent to its execution; the court saying it might be read, subject to its charge as to the legal effect. This is complained of as erroneous. It is difficult to perceive the injurious effect this ruling had during the progress of the trial, as no further notice was taken of it. No instruction of the court was given in reference to it, and defendant seems to have had the benefit of his assignment before the jury. There is no question, we think, that the deed should have been admitted, without qualification, as conveying the right of the bank prima facie, throwing upon the adverse party the burthen of showing that the seal was fixed improperly—surreptitiously as some of the authorities say; through fraud and without authority, according to others. Angel & Ames, 194; 6 Paige, 56, 60.

Morrison then offered in evidence certain entries in the book of accounts of the bank, admitted to be kept by the Cashier and other officers of the bank, which the court re- 424 jected, and this is assigned for error. We think the court decided correctly. Whatever weight these may have as against the bank or its members, they are no evidence of right against strangers; it was not a public but a private entry. Angel & Ames, 606-'7; Archd. Pl. and Ev., 415; 1 Greenl., 415.

Nor do we think the court erred in rejecting the questions proposed to George K. Walker that were objected to. The contract was for the construction of the court, and not of a witness, however intelligent; nor was it proper to ask his designs in its execution. The object of reducing the deed to writing, was to prevent a reference to parol testimony, so that the instrument should speak for itself, according to the fair construction of its terms.

The counsel for Morrison then proposed certain instructions to the jury, which were refused, which we now propose to consider.

The first instruction is for want of consideration on the part of Call, in the part of the contract embracing this judgment, and the want of authority of the Board of Directors to release debts without consideration. The instrument is under seal, and this imparts consideration. "If a creditor signs a release to his debtor, this is sufficient." Bull. N. P., 153; Forsyth Comp. Cred., 17.

"A creditor cannot preclude himself, by simple agreement (not under seal,) to take less than the whole amount of his debt, from using the whole of his demand. But if a man acknowledge himself to be satisfied by deed, it is a good bar, without anything received." Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke, 117; Forsyth, 17.

In this case, Call paid $88,200 for his own debt, and secured $10,000 for the debts of Reid and West. Now what is to prevent this from operating as a consideration for the 425 whole? There is no evidence that he was able to pay more, or that more could have been made by the rejection of this arrangement, and a course of greater severity and exaction. It may have been to the interest of the bank to accept this much, even if it were one third or one half only of the indebtedness, in preference to a resort to legal proceedings. We take it for granted the Board of Directors were acquainted with the facts, and competent to judge of the propriety of the act, and as they do not complain, and have not alleged any exception, that there is in truth no valid cause of objection. We do not think there was error, then, in refusing this instruction.

The second instruction is predicated upon the difference between the resolution, or rather the report of the committee to the Board of Directors, and the deed of the President, the latter providing security for payment of the debts of Reid and West, whilst the former directs their actual payment. There is no proof of non-payment of these, nor of dissatisfaction by the bank on their account. It is supposed, and the instruction is based on the ground, that the deed of the President is void, because it does not pursue the order of the Board. We do not think so. It is not every deviation that makes such a deed void. It might have justified the Directors, perhaps, in rejecting or refusing to execute and declaring it a nullity. But it is their option to do so, or they may act upon and adopt the contract in its new shape. The presumption from receipt of the $88,000, from call, and the release of the bank as to the $10,000, is that it was not disagreeable to them, and they ratified it. Certainly after the lapse of near ten years, this would be the case. The bank could only disaffirm the contract by dissent in a reasonable time, and returning the amount received. But there is a very decisive answer to a declaration of the court that the deed is "not binding"
426 at the instance of Morrison. It is not for him to set up the invalidity. The bank is the party making the complaint, and if she waives or surrenders her rights, it is not for others to assert them. Whilst satisfied with the view thus taken, it may be appropriate to refer to authorities on the subject. In Burnett vs. Nahant, the Directors "authorized two of their Board to sell and transfer any estate or property of the bank," and they mortgaged the banking house, which was objected to as unauthorized. The proof was that there was no vote of the Board, and the witness, an officer of the bank, understood from the Directors individually that they were to make the mortgage; that they received from the party a bond not to put in circulation a certain sum in bills of the bank, and that the Cashier paid costs of suit as part of the adjustment, but that the bills were not given up. The court say that "this shows a ratification, without enquiry whether the act pursued the authority." 2 Met., 167.

Clarke vs. Imperial Gas Light Company, was the case of contestation of a corporate seal, on the ground of want of authority, and other irregularity. The court, Denman C. J., say: "It is enough, however, to observe that proof of this irregularity does not appear in plain terms upon the case, and the company, seeking to set aside its own formal act, on the ground of irregularity in the preliminary proceedings, ought to make out such a defence by the most cogent proof. If this (alluding to same act,) were regularly done, before affixing the seal to the instrument, all would be right, and inasmuch as the seal was set by those who had the power of affixing it to an instrument, to give effect to a bargain which the company had power to make, and no fraud is found in the case to attach to the plaintiff, and there is a "possibility," upon the facts set forth, that the apparent irregularity may not have occurred, we think the plaintiff is entitled to judgment." 1 Neville & Mann, 427 218.

Union Bank of Florida and Morrison vs. Call.—Opinion of Court.

In Lowell vs. Steam Mill Company, the court held the mortgages executed by the President, who had the legal custody of the seal, were prima facie evidence that the whole amount secured thereby was justly due, and it lay on the defendant to establish the fact by legal proof that there was fraud in obtaining it, or that the seal was improperly placed on the bonds and mortgages, without authority. 6 Paige, 61. These are cases between the party and a corporation.

The third instruction is too indefinite. Admitting that the deed executed was not authorized by the resolution, and that the construction of the words "now belonging to the Bank," was as contended for, what follows? Were the jury to find for defendant, or to infer that on this account it was void, or passed no interest? If given, it might have misled the jury, without enlightening them. Even if asked in the manner supposed, we do not think, for the reasons already assigned, the instruction should have been given.

The sixth instruction relates to notice by Call of the assignment of Morrison, and is predicated on the evidence in the record to that point.

G. K. Walker deposes that "he was general agent of Call, and transacted all kinds of business for him, and produces a power of attorney to that effect, authorizing him to purchase and sell for him all kinds of property, real and personal, and to sign his name to any note, bond, draft, deed, or any other instrument, and to bind him thereby in as full and ample a manner as he could, if he were present." He, Walker, was party with Call in the deed with the Bank, and equally bound with him in its covenants; was defendant in the execution and judgment obtained on the 428 notes of Bartlett, and alike interested to procure its release; was joint mortgagor of the property mortgaged to the Bank which was assigned to Huth & Co.; was joint promisor and endorser on other notes enumerated in the deed of the Bank, which were transferred to Huth & Co. He says "that he acted for himself and as agent for Call in the negotiation, and communicated with him in reference thereto, and advised and consulted with him as to the terms of the negotiation; that Call took no active part in making the arrangement, but adopted and consented to the terms of the deed when finally settled, and signed it without objection. He says further, that he, Walker, prepared the deed himself."

It appears further, that Walker's name was signed, with that of Gamble, to the report made to the Bank of a Committee appointed to adjust the terms of the settlement. He also proves that prior to the time at which the negotiation commenced, he, Walker, received notice from Mercer, attorney of Morrison, of the assignment of the judgment on the Bartlett notes, and produces the notice, but does not know that he made the fact known to Call. Under such a state of facts, would a jury have been justified in finding, as prayed by the instruction, that Call had knowledge of the assignment? We think very clearly they would. "The general rule is that notice to an agent is notice to the principal himself." Story on Agency, 132.

It has been argued that Call was on the spot, and was able to and did in fact attend to the business himself, by signing the deed, and on that account is not subject to the operation of the rules applicable to agencies. We do not think so. It may be a question, indeed, whether he is not held more strictly liable for failing to use the diligence a prudent man should exert in the conduct of his 429 affairs. If attending personally to the negotiations, he could not have failed to inform himself of the assignment of this judgment equally with Walker, who conducted the negotiation.

The principles of law are too well settled to admit of a doubt even on the subject. The leading case is that of Le Neve vs. Le Neve, decided by Lord Hardwicke, after very mature consideration. In this case, the party was held liable to notice on account of information possessed by her solicitor, although there was no proof of knwledge on her part; and he notices the decision of a previous case of a contract made by an agent who was cognizant of a previous settlement, and his principal was held liable, although there was no proof of any communication to him of the fact. 3 Atkins, 646. Again, Walker was co-obligee with Call as to the covenants in this deed, and notice to him is sufficient. White & Tudor Case Eq., 214; 2 C. & M., 231 2 Keen, 35.

It is a material fact that the report of the Committee of the Board of Directors, appointed to negotiate the terms of settlement, agreeing in other respects with the deed made by the President, has the words, "Notes endorsed by said Call and Walker now belonging to said bank, described in the said mortgages." They are omitted in the deed. This report is adduced by the plaintiff, Call, himself, in its support, and it is contended that these words are without force or meaning, and would not have varied the deed, if introduced into it. We do not think so. The effect of the omissions is not before us. We are clear in the opinion, however, that it is important as far as the question of notice is concerned. It is signed by Walker, and may be regarded as additional notice in the course of a transaction in which he was acting on behalf of his principal. The fair presumption is that it was communicated to 430 Call, as the omission to do so would hardly comport with the duty of the agent or the natural desire of the principal to inform himself of the terms on which the bank was willing to contract.

We are of opinion, then, that the 6th instruction should have been given to the jury, and that the court erred in rejecting it.

The question of preference of a subsequent purchaser, or release without notice, over a prior assignee of a judgment and execution, has been argued before us with masterly ability, but as the question is one of great difficulty, and there is a painful conflict of authority about it, we have thought it most prudent to defer its consideration and decision to a more appropriate occasion, especially as this case may be decided in the court below without it.

It is therefore considered by the court that the judgment of the court below be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to give the sixth instruction, as asked by the defendant, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

HANNAH S. CRAIG, BY HER NEXT FRIEND, &C., APPELLANT, vs. JAMES B. GAMBLE, APPELLEE.

1. A debtor in embarrassed circumstances will not be permitted to make a voluntary assignment or gift of his property, to the injury and detriment of his bona fide creditors.

2. The case of Mercer vs. Hooker, (5 Florida Reps., 277,) referred to, and the doctrine of the same sanctioned and affirmed, viz: "That where a bill of sale for property was taken in the name of the wife, but the purchase money had been paid by the husband, in the absence of proof that the money so paid belonged to the wife, neither her title nor the title of any one claiming through her, will be permitted to defeat the lien of an execution against her 431 husband."

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of Leon county sitting in chancery.

The appellant filed her bill in the court below, alleging that she owned and possessed, in her own right, fifteen hogsheads of sugar, which were levied on by the Sheriff of Leon county, under and by virtue of an execution in favor of James B. Gamble, against William P. Craig; that the said sugar was stored in the ware house of the Tallahassee Railroad Company, in her own name, and while there, was taken by the Sheriff. She claimed that the same was not subject to said execution, and prayed for an injunction, and that the levy might be dismissed.

The defendant, Gamble, in his answer, denied that the sugar was the property of complainant, and he insisted that if she did own the sugar, she did not own it to her separate use, free from the marital rights of her husband, (William P. Craig;) that William P. Craig raised and made the sugar, and originally owned it, and if any pretended sale or transfer of it to complainant was made by him, it was voluntary and without valuable consideration, or it was intended to hinder and delay creditors. The defendant further alleged, by way of demurrer, "that by complainant's own showing, the said sugar being her property, and not being alleged to be held by her to her separate use, became by law vested in her husband, subject to his debts."

The complainant offered in evidence a bill of lading, acknowledging the receipt, of William P. Craig, at Manatee, in South Florida, by William Blakeney, of nineteen hogsheads sugar, for and on account of Mrs. William P. Craig, care of Beard & Denham, St. Marks, and also an assignment by John G. Gamble to Hannah S. Craig and John 432
A. Craig, of certain judgments against William P. Craig.

At the hearing of the cause, the following agreement in writing was entered into, viz: "That the sugar in controversy in this cause, was raised by William P. Craig, husband of complainant, at Manatee, with the labor of himself and servants; that it was shipped by him to Mrs. Craig, complainant, and was stored in her name at the railroad depot at Tallahassee; that it was shipped in 1852, and reached the Tallahassee depot before the 3d day of December, 1852; that John G. Gamble, who executed the transfer (in evidence) of judgments to John A. Craig and Hannah S. Craig, was duly empowered to transfer those judgments, and that the title and right thereto was and is legally vested in said John A. and Hannah S. Craig.

The court below dismissed the bill, and the complainant prayed an appeal to this court.

DUPONT, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This cause is brought up by appeal from a decree pronounced therein by the Hon. J. Wayles Baker, Judge of the Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit of Florida.

The complainant, Hannah S. Craig, by her next friend, Henry L. Rutgers, filed her bill in the Circuit Court of Leon county, on the 18th day of June, A. D. 1853, against the defendants, James B. Gamble and Haley T. Blocker, setting forth amongst other matters, that the defendant, Gamble, had caused an execution at law, which he held against one William P. Craig, (the husband of complainant,) to be levied upon fifteen hogsheads of sugar, belong-

Craig vs. Gamble.—Opinion of Court.

433 ing to complainant "in her own right," and praying that the defendant Gamble, as plaintiff in execution, and the defendant Blocker, as Sheriff, to be perpetually enjoined from further proceedings under the said levy, and that the same be dismissed. In accordance with the prayer of the bill, a writ of injunction was granted, directed to the defendants, and restraining them from any proceedings until the further order of the court.

The defendant, Gamble, filed his answer on the 28th day of June, A. D. 1853, in which he denied all the material allegations contained in the bill, and particularly traversed the title of complainant to the hogsheads of sugar levied upon. This defendant also set forth in his answer special matter to be insisted upon by way of demurrer, at the final hearing, under that provision of the statute which recognizes and allows such practice; but in view of the decision to which this court has come upon the merits of the case, it has been deemed unnecessary to consider those matters, or to pronounce an opinion in relation thereto.

A final hearing of the cause was subsequently had upon bill, answer, replication and proofs, and the evidence relied upon is to be found incorporated in the following agreement of counsel, which forms a part of the record before us, viz:

"MEMORANDUM.—At the hearing of this cause before Hon. J. Wayles Baker, at Chambers, on the day of , 1853, it was admitted by the parties, by their counsel, as follows, to-wit: That the sugar in controversy in this cause, was raised and made by William P. Craig, husband of the complainant, on his plantation at Manatee, with the labor of himself and his own servants; that it was shipped by him to Mrs. William P. Craig, the complainant; and was stored in her name at the Railroad depot at Tallahassee; that it was shipped by him on the day of , 1852, as shown by the bill of lading in evi-434 dence, and reached the Tallahassee depot on or before the 3d day of December, 1852; that John G. Gamble, who executed the transfer (in evidence) of judgments to John A. Craig and Hannah S. Craig, was duly empowered to transfer those judgments, and that the title and right thereto was and is legally vested in said John A. Craig and Hannah S. Craig."

The "bill of lading" referred to in the foregoing agreement, is a simple shipping receipt, signed by one William Blakeney, acknowledging to have received of "William P. Craig," "for and on account of Mrs. William P. Craig," certain hogsheads of sugar, together with some other articles of merchandise; and the "transfer of judgments," also referred to, is in the usual form, assigning certain judgments at law, which had been obtained in favor of the Union Bank of Florida, against William P. Craig, to Hannah S. Craig and John A. Craig.

This is all the evidence that was adduced at the final hearing of the cause, and upon this evidence, the Judge in the court below, sitting as Chancellor, was called upon to determine whether or not the injunction which had been temporarily granted, should be made perpetual.

We are of opinion that he decided correctly in refusing the prayer of complainant, and in ordering the bill to be dismissed with costs.

It is clearly manifest that, in the then state of the pleadings, the title to the sugar levied upon was the only point at issue. If it had been shown by the proofs that Mrs. Craig, the complainant, had legally acquired the ownership of the property, then might her title have been protected by virtue of the provisions of the statute enacted by our Legislature for the protection of the rights of married women. But we are of opinion that the evidence to this point entirely fails to show such a title in her as will override the rights of creditors, and especially the lien of an execu- 435
tion creditor. What are the facts of the case, as admitted at the hearing? Why, that "the sugar in controversy was raised and made by William P. Craig, (the defendant in execution,) on his plantation at Manatee, with the labor of himself and his own servants." This, then, according to the well established principles of law, invested him with the absolute title to the same, as the fruit of his labor. When and by what means did he divest himself of that title? In looking into the record, we can find no evidence of a purchase by or sale to the complainant, or indeed to any other person; there is no proof of consideration or value passing from her to the owner, William P. Craig, and the only intimation of an intended change of property is to be found in the terms of the bill of lading, or shipping receipt, given by William Blakeney for the sugar in controversy. Now, by the very terms of the bill of lading, it is shown that the sugar was received of William P. Craig, the defendant in the execution, but for and on account of the complainant, his wife. This bill of lading, or shipping receipt, however, it might tend, as a matter of evidence, to induce the impression that there had been or was to be a change of property in the sugar, from William P. Craig to his wife, certainly does not of itself afford any proof of a sale. The essential element of a bona fide sale is wanting —the consideration, and this is not supplied by any proof aliunde, so far as we have been able to discover. It is true that in the argument by counsel, it was insisted that the complainant, being a creditor of her husband, by virtue of the several judgments assigned to herself and John A. Craig, it was legitimate presumption that the shipment of sugar embraced in the bill of lading was intended as a payment on account of that demand; but we can discover in the record no evidence which in the remotest degree tends to connect those judgments with the shipment of the 436 sugar. There is no evidence that any credit for the value of the sugar, was ever entered upon those demands, or ever intended so to be. Neither the transcripts of the judgments nor the copies of the executions issued thereon are before us, but the transfer from John G. Gamble to the complainant and John A. Craig, stands in the record isolated and alone, unconnected by a particle of proof with the only point in issue, to-wit: The title to or ownership of the property in controversy.

If it be assumed that the shipment of sugar was intended as a pledge, the proceeds of which, when sold, were to pass to the credit of the transferred judgments, the reply is obvious—the bill contains no allegation of the kind, nor is there any proof in the record tending to support such an assumption.

In view, then, of the entire absence of any proof to show a sale or pledge of the sugar in controversy, from William P. Craig to the complainant, the court is constrained to arrive at the conclusion that the title of the complainant is not of such a character as will defeat the lien of the execution held by James B. Gamble, the defendant. Giving to the bill of lading the utmost effect contended for by the counsel for complainant, it can at most only be viewed as a voluntary assignment, without consideration—a gift from the owner of the property embraced therein; and it requires no citation of authority to show that a debtor in embarrassed circumstances may not give away his property, to the injury and detriment of his bona fide creditors. The maxim that "a man must be just before he can be permitted to be generous," finds as ready a response in the breast of the moralist as it does in that of the enlightened jurist. It is based upon and finds its sanction in the purest morality—the fountain of all law.

437 However needless it may seem to attempt to fortify our conclusion in this case, by the citation of authority, yet it may not be improper briefly to refer to a recent adjudication by this court of the point now under consideration. In the case of Mercer vs. Hooker, (5 Florida R., 277,) an execution at law in favor of William B. Hooker vs. Edward T. Kendrick, had been levied upon a horse in the possession of Mercer, as the property of the defendant in execution. Mercer interposed his claim under the statute, and upon the trial, traced his title from the wife of the defendant in execution. In the course of the trial, it was proved that the horse in controversy had been received in exchange for one for which Mrs. Kendrick held a bill of sale, and was afterwards sold to the claimant. It further appeared that although the bill of sale for the first horse was given to the wife, yet that the purchase money had been paid by the hands of the husband, and in the absence of proof that the money belonged to the wife, the court very properly ruled that neither her title nor the title of any one claiming through her, would defeat the lien of the execution against her husband.

It will be perceived that in the view which the court has taken of this case, it has not felt itself called upon to consider any one of the very interesting questions presented by counsel, as growing out of the act of the General Assembly entitled, "An act for the protection of the rights of married women," and however irrelevant to the merits of the present case, it is gratifying to reflect that the time consumed in listening to the very able arguments of counsel engaged on either side, has not been misspent. The very agitation of the subject will lead to useful results, in provoking investigation, and we may confidently hope that whenever a case shall arise bringing legitimately in review before the appellate tribunal this very important statute, 438 both the bar and the court will be so much the better prepared to give such an interpretation to the act as shall command not only the sanction but the cordial approbation of the entire community.

Let the decree of the court below be affirmed, with costs.

Thomas Randall vs. James T. Archer.

1. An attorney or solicitor who conducts a suit, has a lien for his fees upon the fund recovered as long as it remains within the custody or control of the court.

2. Where a solicitor had been employed, under a special agreement, to conduct a suit, and during the progress and pendency of the suit, the owner of the demand assigned his interest in the same to a third party, no stipulation entered into between the assignor and assignee, in regard to the amount of fees to be allowed the solicitor, will be permitted to affect his rights which had accrued in virtue of the special agreement.

3. Where a client employs an attorney, for a stipulated fee, to institute and conduct a suit, and during the progress of the same he employs additional counsel, this gives the client no right to insist upon a reduction of the amount of the stipulated fee; but any abatement thereof, in view of the additional charge imposed upon him, must be a matter of agreement—it is not a matter of right.

This was a rule against James T. Archer, solicitor of Robert Lumpkin, to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay to Thomas Randall the sum of $667.93, for his fees in the case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. Augustus H. Lanier, in which case final judgment was rendered in this court.

Notice of this motion was duly served on all the parties interested.

The following answer was made by James T. Archer: 439

The answer of James T. Archer, an attorney of this court, to the rule of Thomas Randall, Esq., served upon him in relation to the claim of the said Thomas Randall to commission and fees, out of the proceeds of a judgment rendered in this court in favor of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. Augustus H. Lanier, which judgment is for the use of Robert Lumpkin.

This respondent answers and says that he was a solicitor in said cause, and received a notice from the said Randall to retain of the proceeds the amount of his claim; that Thurston Lumpkin, agent of Robert Lumpkin, claimed to have received the claim against Lanier in payment of liabilities of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company held by said Robert Lumpkin, and that the commissions of said Thomas Randall ought to attach to the moneys received by the company, and not the proceeds in the hands of the purchaser. He also claimed that he knew nothing of the claim for commissions by said Randall.

The respondent further answers that said judgment was settled without the payment of money, and by securities, payable on time, the first instalment, for $8,000, including interest, falling due 15th January, instant; that said Lumpkin has paid to W. G. Davis, as solicitor, the sum of two thousand dollars, for his professional services, and to James T. Archer the like sum, the said last mentioned solicitor having been employed by Robert Lumpkin after the said assignment of said claim.

This respondent further says that he received the notes and securities taken in payment of said claim, and held the same at the time of the notice by said Randall to him to retain and this respondent now has in his hands, of said claims, securities to the amount of six hundred dollars, falling due and payable, in New York, the 15th January, in- 440 stant.

This respondent submits to the court what should be done by him in the premises, and is ready to abide the order to be made. JAMES T. ARCHER, 9th January, 1853. For himself.

The following agreement between the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company and Randall & Hagner, attorneys, of whom said Thomas Randall is survivor, was offered in evidence to the court, viz:

In the cases of Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, complainants in foreclosure of mortgages, &c.:

The undersigned agree as follows:—We will file the bills in chancery and direct issuing of process and docketing the cases, for fifty dollars for each bill filed.

If the case is compromised before decree, an additional charge of twenty-five dollars, in full for all services rendered in such cause.

If the decree is rendered and prosecuted by sale, then three per cent. is to be allowed, in lieu of the twenty-five dollars above in case of compromise, for all moneys realized, or if no sale is had upon the property, to fix the value, then the commission to be allowed upon the cash value to be determined.

(Signed) RANDALL & HAGNER.

Tallahassee, May 30, 1846.

The foregoing is a copy of original in my possession.

ROB. LYON, Cashier.

Approved June 3, '46.

It was further shown to the court that Randall & Hagner filed the bill for the foreclosure of mortgage in the case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. A. H. Lanier; that they were solicitors of record, and there 441 was nothing to show that they ever abandoned the case or were discharged therefrom. It further appeared that the moneys in the hands of James T. Archer were received under a decree rendered in the case. During the progress of the cause, the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company assigned all its interest therein to Robert Lumpkin, who employed other counsel.

M. D. Papy for Randall.

J. T. Archer contra.

DuPONT, J. delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a rule nisi, moved at the instance of Thomas Randall, against James T. Archer, an attorney and solicitor of this court, to show cause why he should not be compelled to pay over to the said complainant the sum of six hundred and sixty-seven dollars and ninety-three cents, which he claims to be due him as solicitor's fees, for services rendered in a certain cause decided at the last January term of this court, wherein the "Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company" was plaintiff and Augustus H. Lanier was defendant, and in which cause a final decree was rendered in this court against the defendant.

The answer of the respondent discloses the following state of facts, viz:—That the claim which constituted the cause of action in the said suit, had been assigned by the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company to Robert Lumpkin, the present owner, in payment of certain liabilities which he held against said Company; that respondent and W. G. M. Davis, Esq., were employed by the said assignee to conduct the prosecution of the said cause, and for which service they each received from Lumpkin the sum of two thousand dollars; that upon a final decree being rendered in said cause, the same was settled by the defendant, La-442 nier, by certain "securities," which were in the hands of respondent, as solicitor, at the time that the notice to retain was served upon him by complainant, and that he now has in his hands of said securities the amount of six hundred dollars, falling due and payable in New York, on the fifteenth day of January, instant.

It was admitted at the hearing that the original bill of complaint was filed by the late firm of Randall & Hagner, of which complainant is the surviving partner, and that all the testimony used in the trial of the cause, was prepared under their professional supervision; that the assignment to Lumpkin and the employment of Archer and Davis took place during the pendency of the suit in the Circuit Court; that complainant had never been formally dismissed from the cause, but continued to consult and advise with the newly employed solicitors down to the final decision of the cause in this court. The complainant exhibited a written contract with the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and relied upon the same as evidence of the amount of his bill for solicitor's fees in that particular case.

It was further admitted, in the course of the argument, that the securities received from Lanier, in settlement of the decree, had been in the hands of the receiver appointed in the case, and that they were afterwards, by the consent of parties, transferred to the custody of the respondent, to abide the order of the court in the premises, touching the claim of the complainant.

Upon this state of facts, three questions were presented by the respondent, viz:

First.—Whether the "attorney's lien" followed the proceeds of the decree in the hands of the assignee of the debt?

Secondly—Whether the complainant, under the terms of his agreement with the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company ought to be allowed "commissions" upon the amount recovered, or be confined to the stipulation for 443 a specific fee for filing the original bill of complaint?

Thirdly.—Whether, if "commissions" be allowed, the same ought to be calculated on the gross amount of the recovery, or only on the net amount, after deducting the four thousand dollars paid by the assignee to his solicitors?

We shall consider each of the questions in their place, and in order the more lucidly to present our views, it is necessary to promise that by the agreement entered into between Randall & Hagner and the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, they were to receive for the filing of the original bill and the issuing of process, the stipulated sum of fifty dollars. If the case should be compromised before final decree, then an additional fee of twenty-five dollars, in full satisfaction for all services; and if a decree be rendered, and the same be prosecuted by sale, then three per cent. on all moneys realized, to be allowed in lieu of the stipulated amount of twenty-five dollars; and if no sale be had, to fix the value, then such commissions to be allowed upon the cash value of the property, to be determined.

Upon the first point, it was contended by respondent, (who also appeared for and represented the interest of Lumpkin, the assignee of the debt,) that the assignee took the claim free from any lien save to the amount of seventy-five dollars, which amount he had stipulated in his agreement with the company to pay to their attorneys, as their full demand for professional services, arising under the second clause of their contract, and that if there was any claim for "commissions," by virtue of the terms of said contract, the claim was rightfully against the company, and the lien attached to the "liabilities" received by the company as the consideration of the sale of the debt to the assignee, and not upon the fund in court. We are of a different opinion.—To drive the attorneys to a resort to the fund received by 444 the company in consideration of the assignment, is effectually to deprive them of even the semblance of a "lien"—their demand in such case becomes simply an ordinary debt against the company; for of what avail is their right of lien when the fund upon which it is to attach is out of and removed beyond their control? The corpus of their lien was the bond and mortgage of Lanier, which had been placed in their custody for suit, and the consummation of their right, was limited only by the termination of the suit and the realization of its proceeds.

It was further contended upon this point that by the terms of the agreement between the assignor and assignee, for the sale and purchase of the debt against Lanier, it was stipulated that the assignee was to take the debt, subject only to a charge of seventy-five dollars, to be paid to the attorneys who had instituted this suit. To this we say that no arrangement entered into between the assignor and assignee, and to which the attorneys were not a party, will operate to divest their lien, and that in all assignments, whether legal or equitable, the assignee takes, subject to existing rights.

But upon a full review of the facts in this case, Lumpkin has no just cause to complain of this assertion of the right of lien. He had not only constructive but actual notice of its existence. The public records and files of the court furnished ample evidence of the relation which these attorneys bore to the claim which he was about to purchase, and his own stipulation to settle with them the amount of seventy-five dollars is proof conclusive that he had actual notice of that relation. As a cautious and prudent man, he ought to have sought from the proper source the extent of the attorneys' lien. It was his misfortune to have relied too implicitly and exclusively upon the repre-

Randall vs. Archer.—Opinion of Court.

445 sentations of the officers of the company, (doubtless growing out of a misconstruction of the contract which they had entered into with their attorneys,) and whatever right these representations may give him to claim re-imbursement from the company, they certainly cannot be permitted to operate to the detriment and injury of an innocent third party.

Upon the second point raised by the respondent, we are clearly of the opinion that the complainant is entitled, under the terms of his contract, to compensation by way of "commission." By reference to the written argeeement, it will be seen that the stipulation for the specific fee of seventy-five dollars, was to operate only in the event of "a compromise of the case before decree," and to sustain the position taken, it must be established that the case was so "compromised." We do not agree with the counsel that the arrangement entered into between Lumpkin and the company was a "compromise" within the spirit and meaning of the contract. Indeed, there was no compromise of the case before decree. The arrangement was simply an ordinary "assignment" of the debt upon which the suit had been brought. The first and most essential element of a compromise is lacking—the participancy and assent of Lanier, the debtor—and no arrangement to which he was not a party can bear that interpretation. But for the subsequent employment by the assignee of additional counsel, this controversy would probably never have arisen; and in view of the fact that the complainant was never dismissed from the cause, but continued his relation thereto as counsel and solicitor, to its termination, we are of opinion that he is equitably entitled to the full benefit of the agreemnt entered into with the original owners of the debt.

We feel no difficulty in ruling the third point also in favor of the complainant. It would be establishing a dangerous doctrine to admit the right of a client, at his own 446 option, by the employment of additional counsel, to reduce the amount of the compensation or fee which he had stipulated to pay to the original attorney. It is true that it not unfrequently happens that in the progress of a cause unforeseen difficulties arise, which make it advisable to call in the assistance of other counsel, and that in such cases the original attorney consents, in view of the additional charge upon his client, to abate the amount of compensation originally stipulated, but this, whenever it does occur, must be matter of agreement—it is not a matter of right.

It may be proper to be noted that the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, upon notice of this rule, appeared by attorney and disclaimed any interest in the controversy.

Upon a full view of the whole case, we are of opinion that the rule must be made absolute, and do therefore order that the respondent, James T. Archer, do pay to the complainant, Thomas Randall, out of the securities in his hands, when realized, the sum of six hundred and sixty-seven dollars and ninety-three cents, the amount of his bill for attorney's fees, due in the case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. Augustus H. Lanier. The costs of this rule to be paid by complainant.

DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of Florida

AT

FEBRUARY TERM, 1854.

HELD AT JACKSONVILLE.

WILLIAM D. BRANCH, ADMINISTRATOR, &c., APPELLANT, VS. LITTLEBERRY BRANCH, APPELLEE.

1. It is irregular in an action of replevin, to make an order for the issuing of a writ of return and restitution before final judgment. Such an order, when a party is entitled to it, should form a part of the final judgment.

2. In an ordinary case a judgment dismissing a suit is a final judgment, but an action of replevin is an extraordinary remedy, and in such action a judgment dismissing the suit is not final, and error cannot be assigned upon such an order until after final judgment.

3. The 11th section of the act of March 11th, 1845, provides that if it shall appear, upon the non-suit of the plaintiff, or upon trial, or otherwise, that the defendant is entitled to a return of the goods, he shall have judgment therefor accordingly, with damages, &c., unless he shall elect, &c.

4. By a judgment dismissing the suit, it does otherwise appear that the defendant is entitled to a return of the goods, and the necessary proceedings to enforce such return may be had on such judgment.

5. A writ of error will only lie (under our statute) on a final judgment.

Motion to dismiss the appeal in this cause, on the ground that it was taken from a judgment which is not final.

448 Rogers & Sanderson for the motion.

Pearson & McIntosh contra.

DOUGLAS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an action of replevin, instituted in the Circuit Court for Marion county, by William D. Branch, administrator, &c., of Samuel E. Swilley, deceased, against Littleberry Branch, to recover a stock of cattle numbering about eighteen hundred. An affidavit and bond were filed, whether in accordance with the provisions of the statute or not is a question not presented for our consideration. The writ was issued and levied, a summons was served upon defendant, a declaration was duly filed, and at the last term of said court, the cause came on to be heard, when the defendant's counsel "moved the court to quash the writ and declaration, for a variance between the writ and declaration," and also moved the court to dismiss the suit, for want of a sufficient affidavit and bond, and because a pluries writ had been issued in said cause before declaration filed. Whereupon the court, having heard the argument of counsel, and having considered the matter, overruled the motion to quash said writ and declaration, but sustained defendant's motion to dismiss said suit, for want of a sufficient affidavit and bond. Whereupon the plaintiff, by his counsel, prayed an appeal, in open court, and the said plaintiff, having executed a bond, according to law, and paid the costs, the same was allowed by the court. After the appeal was taken, the next step in the case, as appears by the record, was a judgment, of the court, in the following words, to-wit: "It appearing to the satisfaction of the court, by the order heretofore entered, dismissing said cause, that the defendant is entitled to a return of 449 six hundred and thirty-eight head of cattle, taken and detained by the plaintiff, under and by virtue of the writ of replevin in this cause, whereupon it is ordered, considered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff do return the said six hundred and thirty-eight head of cattle to the defendant; and it is further ordered, considered and adjudged that a writ of return and restitution thereof be and the same is hereby awarded to the defendant, and the defendant do recover his costs in this behalf expended, taxed, &c." Here would seem to be an irregularity, either of the court or the Clerk who made up the record, for the matter should make a part of the final judgment of the court, whenever a writ of return and restriction is awarded; but instead of that, it was immediately followed by the calling and empanneling of a jury, to assess "the damage the defendant had sustained by reason of the wrongful taking and detention of the stock of cattle, under and by virtue of the said writ of replevin," who found that the defendant had sustained no damage by reason of the said taking and detention, which verdict was, on motion of the said defendant, set aside and annulled, and a new assessment of damages was ordered. These are all the facts of the case which are deemed necessary to a decision upon this motion, and the question now presented for our consideration is, can this appeal be sustained? If it can, this motion should fail; otherwise it must prevail; and this raises the question whether the judgment of the Circuit Court dismissing the suit was or was not a final judgment. This court has already ruled, in a late case at Tallahassee, (Carroll vs. Dawkins.) that notwitstanding the provisions contained in the first section of the act approved January 7th, 1853, Pamphlet Laws 1853, page 100, entitled "an act in addition to and amendatory of the several acts concerning writs of error and appeals to the Supreme Court," which, amongst other 450 things, enacts that the granting of a new trial may be assigned for error, that a writ of error cannot issue on such assignment until there has been a final judgment entered in the case, and the counsel who argued this case for the defendant, seemed to recognize the ruling as correct, by contending, (as he did with great zeal and energy) that this was a final judgment. We entertain a different view of it. "A final judgment is one that puts an end to the suit." Bouvier's Law Dict., title Judgments Final, page 550.

A judgment is defined to be the sentence of the law pronounced by the court, upon the matter appearing from the previous proceedings in the suit. Har. Law. Dict., title, Judgment, page 255, 256. It is the conclusion that naturally and regularly follows from the premises of law, and fact. Jacob's Law Dict., title, Judgment, page 551.

The action of replevin, (the defendant's counsel very properly said,) is an extraordinary remedy, given by the statute to establish the right of possession, and to whomsoever the court awards the possession, whether plaintiff or defendant, that is the conclusion of law, and it matters not whether that right of possession is established either by a trial upon the merits or by a default of the plaintiff. Suppose we admit the premises, does the conclusion that this is a final judgment follow? It is precisely because this is an extraordinary remedy that it does not; it will be readily admitted that in an ordinary case a judgment dismissing the suit is a final judgment, but the 11th section of the act of March 11th, 1845, the act under which this suit was brought, (Thompson's Digest, page 390, No. 4,) declares that if it shall appear upon the non-suit of a plaintiff, or upon trial, or otherwise, that the defendant is entitled to a return of the goods, he shall have judgment therefor accordingly, with damages for the taking thereof by the 451

replevin, with costs, with a writ of restitution thereupon accordingly, unless he shall elect to waive such return, as in the next section provided. That next section provides that whenever the defendant shall be entitled to a return of the property replevied, instead of taking judgment therefor, he may take judgment for the value of the property replevied, to be assessed by the jury. Now it does not appear by the non-suit of the plaintiff, or upon trial, that the defendant is entitled to a return of the goods; yet it does, we think, otherwise very clearly appear that he is thus entitled, viz: By the dismissal of the suit for want of a sufficient affidavit and bond, (if, indeed, it was for that cause properly dismissed,) a matter which, in the present aspect of the case, for the purpose of this motion, we are obliged to assume. This must be so, or the plaintiff, by putting in an insufficient affidavit and bond, might obtain possession of the property, accomplish the object of his suit, and perhaps leave the defendant remediless, or if not entirely remediless, he would entail upon him a long and tedious litigation to obtain the possession of his property, of which he had been wrongfully dispossessed, through the instrumentality of the law, or the value thereof. If these views are correct, (and we believe them to be so,) then upon the dismissal of the cause, subsequent proceedings material to the cause, and the interest of the parties, could properly have been taken, unless by the appeal the case was removed beyond the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, a question which we are not called upon to decide, and if we were, a decision of it would not affect the interest of the parties upon the present motion, or under our statute in relation to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court. (See Thompson's Digest, page 446, Sec. 1.) An appeal only lies upon a final judgment. That statute, Sec. 1, contains the only provision of the law of this State authorizing 452 an appeal to this court in a case at law, and it only authorizes an appeal in cases where "a party in either of the Circuit Courts of this State shall feel aggreived by a final judgment, sentence, or decree made or pronounced by and or either of said courts." The judgment from which the appeal in this case was taken, is (as we have shown) not final. The motion therefore is sustained. Let the appeal be dismissed and the cause be remanded to the Circuit Court from which it came, for further proceedings, in accordance with this opinion. Per totam Curiam.

Wiley Daniels and Nehomi Daniels, his Wife, Appellants, vs. Henry Henderson, Appellee.

1. By our Statute of December 11,1824,providing for the foreclosure of mortgages, an anomalous proceeding is authorized, partaking partly of Chancery and partly of common law principles.

2. Under it,upon a petition for the foreclosure of a mortgage given by husband and wife, to secure the payment of a note of the husband, and for judgment on the note, a judgment or decree of foreclosure may be entered against both husband and wife, and a judgment may be entered against the husband only upon the note, as in other cases.

3. In such a case,it is error to enter a joint judgment against the husband and wife.

4. The wife is a necessary party to the proceeding so far as regards the foreclosure, but not as to the note.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of Putnam County.

The facts in this cause are fully set out in the opinion of the court, to which reference is made.

Daniels and Wife vs. Henderson.—Opinion of Court.

453 B. M. Pearson for Appellants.

McQueen McIntosh for Appellee.

DOUGLAS, J., delivered the oponion of the court.

This is a suit instituted in the Circuit Court for Putnam county, by Henry Henderson, against Wiley Daniels and Nehomi Daniels, his wife, under the act of December 11, 1824, "To regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the courts of common law," Acts of 1824, page 161; Thompson's Digest, page 376-'77. A petition was filed in accordance with the provisions of the statute, and a copy of the original mortgage is set out in the record, from which it appears that the said mortgage was executed by said Wiley Daniels and Nehomi Daniels, his wife, to one R. R. Duke, on the 5th day of August, 1852, conveying to the said Duke a negro fellow, named Alexander, to secure to him the payment of a promissory note of the same date, given by the said Wiley Daniels, for the sum of six hundred and five dollars and sixty-three cents, which note was executed by the said Wiley Daniels only, to the said Duke, who endorsed it to petitioner, Henderson, to whom he also assigned the said original mortgage, which had been duly acknowledged by the said Daniels and Nehomi, his wife, before a Justice of the Peace, who examined the latter separate and apart from her husband, when she acknowledged that she "executed the same freely, and without fear, persuasion or compulsion of her husband," after which the said mortgage was, in due time, recorded in the proper office, a summons issued and duly served upon the said Wiley Daniels and Nehomi Daniels, his wife, but they put in no objection or plea in the case. At the late term of the Circuit Court, holden in and for the county of Putnam, the cause came on for trial; the defendants, were then and there three times 454 solemnly called, and came not, but made default. Whereupon an affidavit of the amount then actually due was made a decree or judgment of foreclosure of the equity of redemption in the mortgage was pronounced by the court, and a judgment was entered upon the said promissory note, against both the said Wiley Daniels and Nehomi, his wife, From this decree and judgment, the defendants have brought the case, by appeal, to this court, upon the following grounds, to-wit: The judgment should have been ordered to be levied first against the goods specifically mortgaged; 2. The judgment should have been confined to the goods and chattels, &c., mortgaged, and not allowed to travel in its lien beyond, so as to reach other property of the defendants; 3. The judgment should not have been against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of Wiley Daniels and Nehomi, his wife, but only against the goods and chattels of Wiley Daniels.

That there is manifest error in this record, no one, we think, will deny; but we have been in some difficulty in arriving at a conclusion how this error should be corrected. Were this a suit in chancery, the difficulty would not exist. There are many cases of foreclosure to which the statute mentioned is entirely inapplicable and inadequate. For instance, in the case of Wilson, administrator, vs. Hayward, 1 Florida Reports, 27, this court held "that this act may afford a remedy against the mortgagor, but not against the assignee of the mortgagor," because the statute gives judgment for the debt, which cannot be rendered against the assignee of the mortgagor, and that the party claiming the foreclosure, under the statute, should be the owner of all the demands secured by the mortgage; and in the case of Manley and Moseley, administrators, &c., against the Union Bank, it held that where the mortgagee has elected to proceed at law, and has obtained judgment there upon his debt, he cannot proceed under the staute, 455 but should go into chancery to obtain a foreclosure of his mortgage; and owing to the anomalous character of the case now presented for our consideration, much doubt was at first entertained whether this court could do otherwise than to remand this case to the court below, with directions to dismiss the petition. The wife is a party to the mortgage, which makes her a necessary party to the suit, so far as the mortgage and foreclosure are concerned, but she is not a party to the note, and therefore is by no means a necessary party so far as it is concerned, and no judgment upon that should have been entered against her. Were this a case in chancery, the rights of all the parties could be adjusted without difficulty, and were it a case at common law, this joinder would have been fatal to it. We often hear this statute spoken of as providing for the foreclosure of mortgages at common law, but it only provides for the foreclosure of mortgages in the common law courts, and does not require us to apply to it the strict technical rules of the common law, and in the case of Manley and Moseley, administrators, vs. the Union Bank, above cited, this court so adjudged, and treated it accordingly. At page 185, in discussing a question of pleading under it, the court used the following language, viz: "We do not consider the ordinary rules of special pleading or the technical rules of practice in ordinary cases at law, applicable to a proceeding under our statute of foreclosure. The proceeding is an anomalous one, for which neither the courts of common law or equity furnish a precedent. And so the appellee has treated it, for his petition neither contains the essential requisites of a declaration at law nor of a bill in chancery. It contains something of both, but not enough of either to stand the test of scrutiny, by the rules of pleading which prevail in either of those tribunals; and were we to apply that strictness to it which is demanded in re- 456 lation to the pleas or objections, the appellee must fail on that ground alone, if on no other. But we are not inclined to apply a greater degree of strictness to either than is necessary to subserve the principles of justice and equity. Indeed, a more liberal spirit than prevailed in times gone by in regard to special pleading, one more consonant with the spirit of the age, seems everywhere to be gaining ground, and we feel warranted in departing from those strict, technical and rigid rules which were formerly applied to this science, whenever such departure may facilitate the attainment of justice, without endangering any of its principles, and our Legislature has left us an open door for so doing." Were this case to be sent out of court, it would be in compliance with some of those strict and technical rules; but we think we can avoid that, without endangering any of the principles of justice, and we are therefore disposed to carry out in this case the principles enunciated in the one last cited.

We have said that the wife is a necessary party so far as the mortgage and foreclosure are concerned. Making her a party to the judgment on the note, and a note, too, in the execution of which she never joined, is an error that most surely would strike any lawyer at the first blush, and must, we think, have escaped the notice of the learned Judge who rendered the judgment.

There is also error in the direction of the court as to the property on which the execution that should issue on the judgment was to be levied. The statute expressly provides that "the judgment of the court on the foreclosure of a mortgage, shall in all cases be entered up and filed, and execution shall issue thereon as in other cases." The safest course is to follow that express provision.

457 The judgment should have been against Wiley Daniels only, and entered up as in other cases.

Let the judgment or decree of foreclosure be affirmed, and the judgment on the said promissory note be reversed, and the cause be remanded to the court below, with directions to enter up a judgment on said note against Wiley Daniels only, in accordance with this opinion.

The appellee to pay the costs to be taxed. Per totam Curiam.

JOHN M. PONS, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, VS. ISAIAH D. HART, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

1. Where a party has substantially the benefit of a paper as evidence before the jury, the case will not be reversed because it was not formally read, or because the court had rejected it as evidence in the previous progress of the trial.

2. If a particular defence be relied upon as conclusive, it should be presented in the court below, by pleading, instructions to the jury, or motion for a new trial, and not originally in this court, as a ground of reversal.

3. The Supreme Court have no power to consider the weight of evidence as if they were a jury, and can only do so when the question is presented to them on motion for a new trial, or other appropriate manner.

4. The facts of the case are brought before this court by the Bill of Exceptions, and the court is confined to the questions presented by it.

This was a writ of error to a judgment of the Circuit Court of Duval County, rendered Fall Term, 1853.

Hart instituted in the court below an action of replevin against Pons for the recovery of three negro slaves. The transcript of the record does not embrace a copy of the writ, but it appears that a declaration was duly filed, and that Pons, the defendant, appeared and pleaded "not 458 guilty." A trial was had and judgment rendered in favor of Hart. The following bill of exceptions was signed by the court and made a part of the record:

Upon the trial of said cause, the defendant, to maintain the issue on his part, offered to give in evidence the writ of replevin in the case of William Proctor vs. Isaiah D. Hart, and the return of the Sheriff thereon, and to prove by the evidence of George H. Smith that the slaves in controversy in this case, are the identical slaves taken out of the possession of the said Isaiah D. Hart, by the said writ of replevin; that they were delivered to the said William Proctor by virtue of said writ and in obedience thereto; to which evidence and every part thereof, the counsel for the plaintiff objected. The court sustained the objection and ruled out the evidence, and the counsel for the defendant excepted.

And hereupon an agreement was entered into and signed by the counsel of both plaintiff and defendant in the cases of I. D. Hart vs. Pons and William Proctor vs. I. D. Hart, as follows, viz:

William Proctor, vs. Isaiah D. Hart. } Replevin for Slaves.

It is agreed between the counsel in this cause that the jury now empanneled in the case of Isaiah D. Hart vs. John M. Pons, be also sworn in this cause, and that the same be submitted to them, and that the court render such judgment in both causes as may seem right and proper from the finding of the jury.

SANDERSON & CALL,
For Isaiah D. Hart.
PHILIP FRASER,
For Proctor & Pons.

Under which said agreement both the said cases were submitted to the same jury which had been sworn in the 459 case of I. D. Hart vs. Pons, and in the progress of the trial George H. Smith was introduced and sworn as a witness, and upon the writ of replevin in the case of William Proctor vs. I. D. Hart being placed in his hands, he testified that he executed the same, as Sheriff of Duval county, by taking the said negroes mentioned therein and delivering them to said Proctor, and that they were the same negroes mentioned in the writ of replevin in the case of Hart vs Pons, and thereupon, after hearing the other evidence in this cause, the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, the counsel for the defendant prayed the court to sign and seal this bill of exceptions, which is done accordingly.

The following assignment of errors was filed by the plaintiff in error:

The court erred in entering judgment on the verdict of the jury in the court below, because it does not appear by the record that any writ of replevin was issued in this case, or that the negro slaves in controversy were taken by the Sheriff in the execution and service of such writ.

The court below erred in ruling out the evidence offered by the defendant, to-wit: The writ of replevin in the case of William Proctor vs. Isaiah D. Hart and the return of the Sheriff thereon, and the evidence of George H. Smith, showing that the slaves in controversy in this case were the identical slaves taken out of the possession of the said Isaiah D. Hart by the said writ of replevin; that they were delivered to the said William Proctor by virtue of said writ and in obedience thereto.

Philip Fraser for Plaintiff in Error.

G. W. Call for Defendant in Error.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court 460

This was an action of replevin, instituted by Isaiah D. Hart, to recover from John M. Pons three negro slaves, which he alleges he took from him and unjustly detains. On the trial defendant, "to maintain the issue on his part, offered to give in evidence the writ of replevin in the case of William Proctor vs. Isaiah D. Hart, and the return of the Sheriff thereon, and to prove by the evidence of George H. Smith that the slaves in controversy are the identical slaves taken out of the possession of Hart by the said writ of replevin, which were delivered to Proctor by virtue of the writ; but the counsel of plaintiff objected, and the court sustained the objection."

This is assigned for error in this court by Pons, and has been pressed with some zeal on the part of counsel. It is insisted on the part of Hart that if there was error in this ruling, it was cured by the action of the court in the further progress of the trial, "as Smith was introduced as a witness, and upon the writ of replevin in the case of Hart and Proctor being placed in his hands, he testified that he executed the same, as Sheriff of Duval county, by taking the negroes mentioned therein and delivering them to Proctor, and that they were the same negroes mentioned in the writ of replevin in the case of Hart and Pons.

There is no complaint as to the non-admission of Smith's testimony; the objection is that the writ of replevin was not read in evidence.

It is true, this does not appear in express terms to have been read, yet defendant seems to have had the benefit of it before the jury. It was "placed in the hands of the witness, the Sheriff, and he testified that he executed it," &c. Now it is scarcely credible that in this state of the case defendant was prevented from availing himself of the fact that 461 there was such a writ. Moreover, the admission of Smith's evidence, with the use of the writ, was such an indication of the disposition of the court to admit the writ also, that if there was a failure to get it before the jury more fully, it can scarcely be regarded as the fault of the court, or an error for which the judgment should be reversed. In the case of Morrison vs. Call, recently tried at Tallahassee, the court decided that the admission of testimony rejected at a former stage of the trial, cured the error, and we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the ruling. We are of opinion, then, that there is no error in this assignment. It is proper to remark that appellant's counsel contend that Smith's evidence was not introduced at their instance, but in this we suppose they are mistaken. It is certainly not in favor of Hart. It forms the ground of defence of Pons; indeed, the only position assumed in his behalf.

It is also said that this evidence was applicable to the case of Hart and Proctor, and not designed for that Pons vs. Hart.

If so, the bill does not present that aspect, and the question naturally arises why evidence used in the one case is incorporated into and made part of the other? Whether the writ and evidence of Smith should have the effect contended for, of concluding the case, is not for our consideration. We are confined to the questions made by the bill of exceptions. See Gray vs. Belden, 3 Florida Reports, 114; Exparte Crane, 5 Peters, 199; 4 How., 298, 401, 292, 418, 541; 1 Leigh, 86; 1 Wend., 418; 14 John., 804; 1 Cowen, 622, and the opinion pronounced in the case of Proctor vs Hart at the present term.

A party having a defence has the right, through his pleadings, and through instructions proposed during the trial, to obtain a decision as to its effect. If conclusive, (as alleged in the present instance,) he may insist on the 462 court's so declaring, and if they refuse, or make an erroneous decision, he may appeal to the Supreme Court to correct the error.

He may, however, if he prefers, submit the matter to the arbitrament of the jury, taking the chances of their deciding in his favor. Nor is he confined even to this; for if the jury find against him, he may apply for a new trial, and present the decision on this also to the appellate court for review. Such is the mode and process by which the rights of the citizen are asserted and maintained in the courts. If none of them are adopted, he may be regarded as waiving his objections, or as being content with the decision. In the present case we perceive no plea, no instruction proposed, nor any motion made for a new trial. In the absence of all these we are asked to regard a piece of testimony introduced by one of the parties as conclusive, without any knowledge or information as to that produced by the other, and to reverse the case on that account. If the whole testimony were before us in the bill of exceptions, we have no such power. To an application of like kind, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Hapburn vs. Dubois, made this response: "In urging upon this court a review of the parol evidence in the record, we think the counsel of the plaintiff in error have asked us to transcend the limits prescribed to our action on questions of fact, by an uniform course of decision from the first organization of this court, which has been repeatedly defined in our opinions during this term, unanimous on the law, though sometimes differing in its application to particular cases.

"If our past course of adjudication has not sufficed to satisfy the bar as to what we have considered our most solemn duty, and if it is yet an open question as to what is the line which the law has drawn between those questions of fact cognizable only by the jury below, and questions arising 463 on the joint action of the court and jury in that court, whose record we judicially inspect, on error, it will be useless to close it by any opinion to be delivered in this case."

They then assert, that they are expressly prohibited by the provision of the Constitution of the United States securing the right of trial by jury, from considering the subject in the manner proposed. 12 Peters, 375-'6.

This court has also declared its deliberate purpose to maintain the like provision in our State Constitution. Flint River Steam Boat Co. vs. Roberts & Co., 2 Fla., 102.

In addition to this, it is very clear that such a review by an Appellate Court invokes the exercise of original jurisdiction, whilst that of this court is carefully declared by the Constitution of the State to be "appellate only," original jurisdiction being conferred upon the Circuit Courts. See Constitution of the State.

We have not thought proper to decide the point, argued with great force and ability on the part of defendant in error, that under no circumstances was this writ of replevin admissible in evidence, being satisfied with the conclusive view already taken of the subject.

This case has been argued as if a cross replevin had been issued, and complaint is made of the hardship and irregularity of the proceedings, but the record does not present it in that light. The appellant shows no connection with Proctor, nor interest, nor right in him, nor anybody else. If in fact, a cross replevin had been issued, the remedy and power of the court might have been complete to prevent injury. The Supreme Court of New York superseded a writ of replevin issued by defendant to obtain a re-deliverance of the property taken from him by writ of replevin. Morris vs. DeWitt, 5 Wend., 70.

It is not necessary to decide that a like course would be appropriate under our statute. We may be permitted to 464 say, however, that the statute in our opinion is very imperfect, and to express the fear that it may be made the instrument of great injury and injustice. To allow the possession of personal property to be taken from a defendant under a mere affidavit, and to remain with plaintiff until after trial, under our tardy system, is to give a decided advantage to one party. The New York statute provides for an immediate trial when a claim of right is put in by the defendant, and prevents also the change of possession until after the decision.

The writ of replevin is not copied into the record, and counsel for appellant taking it for granted that none ever existed, now insists that the judgment, on this account, is invalid. In this we think he is mistaken. That there was a writ, is very manifest, from the whole record. The affidavit and bond on which it was issued are before us, and it is very clear if there was no writ plaintiff effected no object of this suit, and there was actually no contest between the parties. But the Sheriff, Smith, whose testimony we have already given, speaks of the writ and of the negroes mentioned in it, as being the same as in the case of Proctor and Hart. If there was no writ, and it was important, defendant should have filed his plea to that effect, or moved to set aside the proceeding. Instead of this, he has plead in chief, thus avoiding all objection to the preliminary proceeding. Nor do we see how the writ is material to the questions presented in this court, no motion having been made connected with or dependent upon it. But supposing it to be material to some question to be decided in this court, and it was apparent that it had been lost from the files, would the court on this account reverse the judgment? Obviously not. It would be opposed to every sense of propriety to make the rights of parties dependent upon mere accident or chance. Papers when filed with the clerk, are in the custody of the law, and if lost or mislaid, the court will exert itself to have them replaced, or to have a substitute for them, so as to prevent injury. If this paper were at all material to any question before us, we should not hesitate to continue the case, to enable the parties to supply the deficiency.

We are therefore of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the court below, and that the same be affirmed, with costs.

WILLIAM PROCTOR, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, VS. ISAIAH D. HART, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

1. A refusal to give instructions on a mere abstract proposition, not based on any color of evidence, affords no ground of exception.

2. And even where a charge is given to the jury which is entirely abstract, or out of the case, so as not to affect it, although the charge be erroneous as a proposition of law, yet this will not constitute a ground of exception.

3. The party excepting must, at his peril, place as much in his bill as shows that the court did err to his prejudice; for the presumption is in favor of the rectitude of their proceeding, and all decisions made will be presumed correct until the contrary appear.

4. Wherefore if the evidence on which instructions to the jury were intended to bear, be not presented by the bill, the court will not adjudge such instructions erroneous.

5. While the court recognizes the doctrine that upon a writ of error it is within its province to look beyond the bill of exceptions, and to consider errors apparent upon the face of the record, yet this must be limited to such errors only as have not been waived by the pleadings.

6. And therefore where a plaintiff, instead of demurring to a plea, replies to the same, it is too late to make the objection in this court that the plea is bad.

MEM.-It is the exclusive right of the clerks of the Supreme Court to furnish the 466 copies of the record required by the rule to be prepared for the use of the Judges, and the compensation thereof constitutes a perquisite of their offices.

This was a writ of error to a judgment of the Circuit Court of Duval county.

The errors assigned in this case are based upon the charges given by the court below, and upon the refusal of the court to give in charge to the jury instructions asked for by Plaintiff in Error. The bill of exceptions, which was made a part of the record, does not embrace the evidence upon which the charges given by the court were predicated, nor is there any evidence in the record to show that the instructions asked for by plaintiff were relevant or material, or other than abstract propositions.

The fourth plea of defendant, which is alleged to be had, was replied to by plaintiff, and no objection thereto, by demurrer or otherwise, seems to have been made in the court below.

Philip Fraser for Plaintiff in Error.

G. W. Call, for Defendant in Error.

DUPONT, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is brought up from the Circuit Court of Duval county, by writ of error, and the only errors assigned are the exceptions set forth in the bill of exceptions, which constitutes a part of the record before us. In looking into the record, a difficulty is presented at the thresh-hold, which, in the opinion of the court, is decisive of this case. The matters complained of as error, are confined exclusively to the several "charges" of the court below, as given and refused, and the bill of exceptions incorporates no portion of the evidence upon which the charges were predicated. If in this state of the record the court were to proceed to examine the propriety of those charges, they could view them only as abstract propositions; but it is a well 467 established principle that a refusal to give instructions prayed for on a mere abstract proposition, not bottomed on any color of evidence, will be no ground of exception, (Hamilton vs. Russell, 1 Cranch, 309 and 318; Greatham vs. Brown, 5 Munroe, 280, 282;) and even where a charge is given to the jury which is entirely abstract, or out of the case, so as not to affect it, although the charge be erroneous as a proposition of law, yet this will not constitute a good exception. Vide 3 Philips on Evidence, (Cowen and Hill's Notes,) 787, citing the following cases: Clarke vs. Dutcher, 9 Conn. R., 674; Smith vs. Carrington, 4 Cranch R., 62; King vs. Kinney, 4 Hamm., 81; Wardell vs. Hughes, 3 Wend. R., 418; Broffit vs. Williams, 1 Yerger, 89; Norton vs. Saunders, 1 Dana R., 14, 15. "At common law, a writ of error lay for error in law apparent on the record, and not for error in law not apparent upon the record. If a party allege any matter of law at the trial, and was overruled by the Judge, he was without redress, the matter not appearing" on the record. (2 Institutes, 42.) To remedy this evil, the statute was passed which gives the "bill of exceptions," through the instrumentality of which the party aggrieved is entitled to make such rulings of the Judge matter of record, which but for the statute would have remained in pais. The office of the bill of exceptions is very clearly defined in 3 Philips on Evidence, (Cowen & Hill's Notes,) at page 790, and it is there stated as follows: "If the bill be not tacked to the record, it should set out the whole proceedings previous to the trial, but otherwise it begins with the proceedings, after issue joined, and in either case it goes on to state the circumstances upon which it is founded, as that a witness was called to establish certain facts, or evidence offered, or challenge made, or demurrer tendered; the allegations of counsel respecting the competency of the witness; the 468 admissibility of the evidence, or legal effect of it, &c.; the opinion of the court or judge; the exception of the counsel to the opinion, and the verdict of the jury," (citing Bul. N. P., 317, 319; Tidd Prac., 788; 2 Dunlap Prac., 643; Swift's Ev., 168.)

The consequence to the appellant of a defective bill of exceptions, is also stated in the same authority, and is thus set forth: "The party excepting must, at his peril, place so much in his bill as shows that the court did err to his prejudice, for the presumption is in favor of the rectitude of their proceeding, and all decisions made will be presumed correct until the contrary appear. (Citing Richardson vs. Dennison, 1 Aik., 20; Adams vs. Ellis, ib., 24; Eaton vs. Houghton, ib., 380; Stearns vs. Warner, 2 ib., 26; Snowden vs. Warder, 3 Rolle, 1; Harrison vs. Baker, 1 J. J. Marsh., 317, 318; King vs. Kinny, 4 Hamm., 81; McDougal vs. Fleming, 4 ib., 388; Ingraham vs. White, 2 Miller, 294-'8; Reynolds vs. Rogers, 5 Ham., 169, 171.) "In other words, nothing must be left to conjecture, and if the bill be so loosely drawn as to leave the matter in doubt, the proceeding below will be sustained, notwithstanding there be some reason to suspect that error might have intervened." Citing Adams vs. Ellis, 1 Aik., 24; Eaton vs. Houghton, ib., 380. And again—"Most of our courts have acted upon the principle above stated, of presuming that the court below did right until the contrary expressly appear. Accordingly it has been held that if the evidence on which instructions to the jury were intended to bear be not presented by the bill, the court will not adjudge such instructions erroneous. (Citing Harrison vs. Baker, 1 J. J. Marsh., 317, 318.) And again—"When instructions were asked for upon certain facts, it appears necessary to set forth in the bill that evidence of such facts

469 was given to the jury. (Citing Vasser vs. Smith, 6 Cranch R., 226, 233. Note.)

We have not had access to all of the cases cited, but so far as we have, we find that they fully sustain the principles enunciated. And, indeed, if there ever was any doubt as to the correctness of these principles, that doubt, so far as it might affect this cause, has been removed and the doctrine settled, by the ruling in the case of Dorman vs. The Executor of Francis Richard, (1 Florida Reps., 297.) In that case the court say—"For aught that appears to the contrary, other proofs besides the note in question may have been presented on the trial below, and such as may have influenced or determined the verdict and judgment; and there is nothing to show that such proof, if so presented, was inadmissible, or otherwise exceptionable at law. In the absence, therefore, of a bill of exceptions showing the testimony exhibited, the presumption is that there was full and adequate evidence before the jury to warrant and support the verdict," &c.

But if we were without precedent or authority on the point, the doctrine is too obviously based upon sound reason to admit of a doubt. As a jury cannot be called upon to render a verdict but upon the facts of the case, as made known to them through the evidence, so every charge of the Judge, if applicable, must be predicated upon those facts; and in order to obtain the benefit of the supervisory power of the appellate tribunal, the party invoking the same must put the court in possession of those facts, duly authenticated. This brings us to the consideration of the question as to what may be deemed a due and proper authentication of the evidence used upon the trial in the court below. It seems to have been taken for granted by the counsel who prepared the bill of exceptions, and who superintended the making up of the record for the court, 470 that it was sufficient if the evidence used or alleged to have been used upon the trial should appear in and form part of the record so certified to by the clerk of the Circuit Court, without having the same incorporated or even referred to in the bill of exceptions. Such a practice, if sanctioned, would obviously lead to great looseness and uncertainty, and might work irreparable injury to parties litigant; for it would be to substitute the testimony of the clerk as to what evidence was submitted to the jury, for that of the Judge, who, and who alone, (except in the case provided for in the statute, vide Thomp. Dig., 351, Sec. 3, part 1,) is authorized to attest that matter. Indeed, it is wholly beyond the province of the clerk, in the exercise of his official duty, to certify to the existence of any matter which is not a matter of record, and it will scarcely be pretended that the evidence given in the trial of a cause is a matter of record until it shall have been made so by being incorporated into a bill of exceptions, duly signed and sealed by the Judge, or by three by-standers, as is provided for in the statute. The danger of adopting so loose a practice is forcibly illustrated by an inspection of the record before us. To several of the interrogatories it appears that exception was taken in writing, before the issuing of the commission, but there is nothing in the record to show whether those exceptions were sustained or overruled by the court, and it is therefore left in doubt whether the entire depositions, or only a portion, were used as evidence on the trial.

It was further contended by the counsel for the appellant that this case having been brought up by "writ of error," it is the province of the appellate tribunal to look beyond the bill of exceptions, and to consider any error which might be apparent upon the face of the record, and the attention of the court was called to the fourth plea, which it was insisted was bad.

The court fully recognizes the doctrine, that upon a writ 471 of error it is its province to look beyond the bill of exceptions and to consider errors apparent upon the face of the record; but while they recognize the doctrine, they do not think that the error complained of, (even if it is an error,) is such as would justify a reversal of the judgment. At most the plea, if bad, was so only in presenting an immaterial issue, which did not affect the merits of the cause. If the plaintiff below was desirous of obtaining the judgment of the court upon the plea, his proper course of proceeding would have been to have demurred to the same, and this would have raised a question of law, of which he might have availed himself in this court; but by replying to the plea, he waived his demurrer, and consequently lost any benefit which might have otherwise resulted to him. Vide Mitchell vs. Chaires, 2 Fla. R., 18, and Mitchell vs. Cotten's Ex'r., ib., 136.

We are of opinion that as the cause is presented to us by the record, there is no error in the judgment of the court below; therefore let the judgment be affirmed with costs.

Mem.—Upon this case being called, the court was presented by the counsel for the appellant with three copies of the record filed in this court, which were made out and certified to by the Clerk of the Circuit Court. A question was thereupon raised by the clerk of this court as to his right to furnish the copies required by the rule to be furnished to the Judges. The court decided that the furnishing of the copies is not only a perquisite of his office, but that his certificate is necessary to give authenticity to them.

DECISIONS
OF THE
Supreme Court of Florida
AT

MARCH TERM, 1854,

HELD AT TAMPA.

CRAWFORD AND SEAT, APPELLANTS, VS. JOHN WATERSON, APPELLEE.

1. Trespass will lie in favor of one having possession against a wrong doer.

2. Trespass vi et armis, and not case, is the appropriate remedy, where the injury is immediate and direct.

3. Where there is a wrong there is a remedy, and the State Courts are competent to give redress in all cases in which exclusive jurisdiction is not given to Federal Courts.

4. If a wrong or injury be done by an officer of the General Government, without authority, he is liable, like any other citizen, to be sued in the State Courts.

This was an action of trespass on the case. The injury complained of, was the unlawful seizure and taking away of sixty thousand feet of lumber. The allegation in the first count of the declaration is, "that under the authority of the Quarter Master of the United States, they received permission to cut lumber off the military reserve, and in pursuance of such order, they did cut sixty thousand feet

Crawford & Seat vs. Waterson.—Opinion of Court.

473 of lumber, when defendant, without authority, took the same and held the same in his custody until sold."

The second count alleges that "when the seizure was made, the plaintiffs cleared by their mill $25 a day, and would have continued to do so for a long space of time, had they not been compelled to desist, by the seizure of defendant and his pretended authority as timber agent."

The third count alleges that by reason of the seizure, plaintiffs incurred great expense, in going to Washington, and also that during their absence their dwelling house was destroyed by fire.

To this declaration the defendant demurred, which was sustained by the court, on the ground "that the court had no jurisdiction, for the reason that the cause of action originated exclusively under the laws and regulations of the United States." From this judgment the plaintiffs appealed.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This was an action of trespass on the case, instituted by the plaintiffs to recover damages for the injury sustained by them in the unlawful seizure and sale of a quantity of lumber.

The defendant demurred to the declaration, assigning various grounds of objection.

The court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the case, on the ground "that the court had no jurisdiction, for the reason that the cause of action originated exclusively under the laws and regulations of the United States."

We are clearly of opinion that for an injury to and damages sustained by a party, the proper remedy and redress is by suit in the State Courts, and that the court erred in dismissing the case upon this ground. The suit is based upon the allegation that the defendant, without any lawful 474 authority, seized the lumber. If this allegation be true, he was justified by no law or regulation of the United States, and was clearly liable for the injury done. If the defendant could show that in the action leading to the injury complained of, he acted under lawful authority from the United States, this would avail him as well in the State as in the Federal Courts. We know of no exemption from suit in the State Courts against individuals for wrong, except in certain cases specially enumerated in the Constitution of the United States, where exclusive jurisdiction is given to the Federal Courts. The general principle is that there is no wrong without a remedy.

Suits are brought daily in the State Courts for injuries done by officers of the Government of the United States, whether for injuries to the person or property of the citizen, and in many cases the party would be remediless, unless his action were brought there.

The Federal Courts are courts of limited jurisdiction, and their doors are closed to the citizen for most purposes; they are designed for the citizens of other States, or aliens, whose right to sue must appear by a declaration of their character on the face of the proceedings, to give jurisdiction. Our Courts, on the contrary, are courts of general jurisdiction, free to every one to obtain redress whenever injury or damage is done. We do not, then, agree to the ruling of the court below in this respect. Stewart vs. Preston, 1 Florida.

We are, however, of opinion that the demurrer was rightly decided, for other reasons. The injury complained of was a trespass, and a suit of that kind, or in trover, or replevin, should have been brought, and not an action on the case. Slocum vs. Maybury, 2 Wh., 1; Gelston vs. Hoyt, 3 Wh., 246.

The plaintiffs allege "that under the authority of the Quarter Master of the United States they received permis- 475 sion to cut lumber off the military reserve, and in pursuance of such order, they did cut sixty thousand feet of lumber, when defendant, without authority, took the same, and held the same in his custody till he sold them." Here we perceive "an injury in its character forcible, and occasioned immediately by the act of defendant, in which case the action of trespass vi et armis is the proper remedy." 1 Chitty Pl., 142.

Nor is it necessary that actual force be proved in case of trespass for the asportation of goods. 10 Mass., 125.

The distinction is between acts that are "immediate and direct," in which trespass is the appropriate remedy, and such as are mediate and consequential, in which case lies. 1 Chitty, 142.

As to the interest of the plaintiff, trespass will lie in favor of one having possession, as against a wrong doer. 1 Chitty, 196; n. 2, 202-'3.

There is no precedent in an action on the case for injury, like the present, whilst in trespass there is no lack of them. Trespass is the peculiar remedy for injuries done by persons acting under the color of authority. 1 Chitty, 210; Gelston vs. Hoyt, 4 Cond. Reps. S. C. U. S., 246; 3 Wh., 246.

It is proper to say that there is an allegation in the count alluded to that the lumber was disposed of at public sale, and purchased by defendant himself, but this does not alter the character of the injury or of the remedy.

The second count alleges that "when the seizure was made, the plaintiffs cleared by their mill $25 a day, and would have continued to do so for a long space of time, had they not been compelled to desist, by the seizure of defendant, and his pretended authority as timber agent." What effect this might have, in an action of trespass, to enlarge the damages, it is not for us to decide on the present occa- 476 sion; but this much we are satisfied, that it does not constitute a substantive ground of action, of itself. Courts give redress for injuries actually sustained, not for such as are speculative or suppositious—not for that which a party might by possibility make or have made.

We are of opinion that the third count, or remainder of he declaration also is insufficient, and does not constitute a valid cause of action against defendant, for the causes already assigned.

The expense of going to Washington, and the loss of the dwelling house by fire, are not so connected with the act of trespass or injury as to constitute a cause of action, if indeed they could be used to increase the damages in an action of trespass.

The judgment will be affirmed, with costs.

HENRY N. CLARKE, APPELLANT, VS. PERRY G. WALL, APPELLEE.

After a plea of set-off pleaded, and before the cause is submitted to the Jury, the plaintiff has a right to take a non-suit.

Appeal from Hernando Circuit Court.

The plaintiff instituted in the court below an action of assumpsit, to which the defendant pleaded a set-off. Before the cause was submitted to the jury, the plaintiff asked leave to take a non-suit, which was refused by the court. This ruling of the court is assigned for error.

DUPONT, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is brought up by appeal from the Circuit Court

477 of Hernando County, and the only question which has been submitted for our decision is as to the right of a plaintiff to discontinue his action after a plea of set-off has been filed by the defendant.

This question has already been settled, by the adjudication in the case of Buffington vs. Quackenboss, (5 Florida Reps., 196,) and we see no good reason for disturbing that decision. In the case referred to, the defendant in the court below pleaded, by way of set-off, an open account which exceeded in amount the plaintiff's demand. At the trial term, the court, upon motion of the plaintiff, ordered the cause to be dismissed, to which the counsel for the defendant excepted, and assigned the same as error. The Supreme Court sustained the judgment of the court below, and thereby affirmed the right of the plaintiff to discontinue his action. notwithstanding a plea of set-off had been filed.

Clarke vs. Wall.—Opinion of Court.

In the case now before us, the error assigned is the refusal to permit the plaintiff to take a non-suit before the cause had been submitted to the jury, and thus it will be seen that the points made in the two cases are identical.

Let the judgment be reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as may not be inconsistent with this opinion.

DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of Florida

AT

MARCH TERM, 1854.

HELD AT MARIANNA

THOMAS M. WHITE, APPELLANT, VS. GEORGE WALKER, APPELLEE.

1. A decretal order made by consent, cannot be set aside, either upon appeal or re-hearing; but an order thus made may be set aside by consent.
2. A Master must not go beyond the matters referred to him; if he does, his report, so far as relates to that matter, is a nullity.

3. A reference to the Master will not authorize a report by him more extensive than the allegations and proof.

4. A report which is erroneous on its face, may be enquired into without any exceptions.

5. It is a general and material rule in all cases of accounts, that where there has been a settlement, and the account has either been signed, or a security executed at the foot of it, a Court of Equity will not open that transaction, unless the evidence produced (founded on the charges in the bill,) shows the transaction to be iniquitous; that it ought not to be brought forward at all to affect the party sought to be bound.

6. Mere inadequancy of price, if the bargain is fair, is no ground for relief
7. If the value of a thing sold depends upon a contingency, although great advantage may be gained, yet the contract shall be sustained.

479 8. Concealment of a material fact by the party whose duty it is to disclose it, is sufficient to set aside a contract.

9. A partner purchasing must give a full account of the state of the property.
10. To these general rules there are qualifications, suited to cases of an extraordinary nature.

11. As if the party making the representation was speaking not from personal knowledge, but with reference to accounts that were equally open to both parties, and the representations were justified by such accounts.

12. A party cannot be charged against his own denial, in his answer under oath, on the testimony of only a single witness; it must, to warrant a decree, be contradicted by at least two witnesses, or by documents.

13. But the answer, to have this power, must be direct and positive.
14. Fraud is not to be presumed, but must be proved.

15. The report of a master containing upon its face material errors, should not be made by the court the basis of a decree.

16. Testimony merely conjectural is wholly inconclusive, and ought not to be received.

17. As a general rule, the prevailing party is entitled to costs, as well in equity as at law; yet costs do not always follow the decree in favor of a party They are in the sound discretion of the court, and are to be rewarded or refused according to the justice of each particular case.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of Jackson county, sitting in chancery.

The opinion of the court contains a full statement of the facts in the cause.

W. G. M. Davis for appellant.

R. L. Campbell for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The bill filed on the 23d October, 1843, in the Superior Court of Jackson county, by the appellee, charges that on the 7th September, 1838, the parties entered into a copartnership, under the style of White & Walker, for the purpose of merchandizing at Marianna, Fla.; that by the articles, which were in writing, it was agreed that the business should be under the care and management of the ap- 480 pellant, for which he was to receive a reasonable compensation; that each party should contribute the sum of $2,-757.25, as his share of the capital stock, and each enjoy an equal share of the profits, after the payment of all the debts; that the capital was paid in by the parties, and large stocks of goods were purchased, partly for cash, and partly on credit, from the fall of 1838 till April, 1843, when the stock on hand was sold to F. R. Ely; that respondent always had the exclusive management and control of the business, and complainant had nothing to do with it, whatever; that the business was eminently prosperous, the goods having been sold at large profits, and but few bad debts contracted; that respondent purchased property, and in other ways speculated with the funds of the concern, for his own benefit, and abstracted assets of the firm to a large amount, with which he failed to charge himself; that respondent did not, as he was bound and paid to do, under the articles of copartnership, devote his exclusive attention to the business of the firm, but on the contrary, gave a large portion of his time to other occupations, by which the concern was greatly injured; that the books were falsely and fraudulently kept, and presented but a partial and confused history of the business; that in the early part of June, 1843, when complainant was in a feeble state of health, respondent proposed a dissolution of copartnership, and a division of its assets, and succeeded, by presenting false and simulated accounts of the business, in procuring for the sum of 9009.23, ($1000 in cash, and the balance in complainant's account, and notes of third persons,) a receipt in full for complainant's interest in the firm, and that a much larger sum than that represented by respondent, upon said settlement, would appear to be due him upon a just and fair account, and the bill prays an account that the settle-481 ment may be set aside, his receipt cancelled, the partnership dissolved, &c.

On the 6th March, 1844, a general demurrer to the bill was filed, which being overruled, on 30th March, 1844, by consent of parties, an order was made, giving respondent thirty days to file his answer, and appointing commissioners to take and state an account.

On 20th August, 1844, respondent filed his answer, admitting the copartnership, and the articles as set forth in the bill; that the capital stock of $2,757.25 each was paid in by the parties; that large stocks of goods were purchased between the Fall of 1838 and April, 1843, when the stock on hand was sold to F. R. Ely; that the business was conducted exclusively by respondent; that he did use the funds of the firm, to a limited amount, in the purchase of property, but accounted for the same, and charged himself with everything he procured from the concern. The answer denies all fraud, and states that in May, 1843, respondent was informed by complainant that he wished to sell his interest in the concern, with the view of leaving the country, and requested respondent to make him an offer; that respondent replied he could not say what would be an equitable price for his interest, but he would "make out a full and complete statement of the assets and liabilities of the house, exhibit them to him, and if then complainant desired it, he (respondent) would make him an offer to take or give a stated sum;" that complainant said that he was willing to take less than half, as he desired to quit the country; that on 7th June, 1843, respondent submitted to complainant statements A. and B., (which are appended to the answer,) requesting him to examine them, and offering him access to the books to aid him in his examination; respondent told complainant that he would rather sell than buy, and would take $8,500 for his interest; that respon-482 dent having fully explained exhibits A. and B., told complainant that inasmuch as he, respondent, was more intimately acquainted with the business affairs of said firm, and its customers, and could make more out of the bad debts than complainant could, he, respondent, would give complainant the sum of $9,000 for his interest, in the following payments, to-wit: $1,000 in cash, $1,769.11 in his, complainant's, account, and the remainder to be selected by complainant from all the business papers, notes, and accounts, &c., of the firm, which proposition complainant accepted, and the bargain was consummated; complainant gave respondent a receipt in full, and respondent entered into an obligation to pay all the debts of the concern; that according to exhibits A. and B. all the good debts and assets of the firm amounted to $19,652.53, besides complainant's account for $1,769.11, respondent's account for $1,329.35, and that the debts due by the house amounted to $2,765.66, and the bad debts to $4,080, and the answer sets up this as a full defence to the bill.

Upon the coming in of the answer, the commissioners appointed having failed to report, the order appointing them was, by consent of parties, vacated and annulled, and 483

William Nickels was appointed Master, to examine the books and papers of said concren, and report upon them, in reference to the charges made in complainant's bill.

On the 4th day of May, 1846, Master Nickels filed his report, with accompanying schedule, stating the profits of the concern, after paying all debts and losses, at $30,872. 69. From this sum, however, the capital stock, $5,514.50, and the bad debts, amounting to $4,080, (in order to show the nett profits, according to his calculation,) to be deducted. Deduct these two items, which together amount to $9,594 50, and there remains $21,278.19.

On the 25th day of May, 1846, the appellant filed his exceptions to the report, and the same having been argued, the case was again referred to George F. Baltzell, as Master in Chancery, upon six points, viz:

1st. To ascertain the value of the bills of the Union Bank, during the existence of the firm;

2d. To take further testimony as to the sale of Union Bank money to Benjamin Wynns;

3d. To take further testimony as to the amount of goods sold for notes of third persons.

4th. To review the exchange and interest account;

5th. To take further testimony as to the sale of Union Bank money to Thomas M. Bush;

6th. To ascertain the solvency or insolvency of the persons named in exhibit A. as being insolvent.

And on the 26th of January, 1848, Master Baltzell filed his report, which, however, was attended with no definite result, except ascertaining the value of Union Bank money, increasing the interest and exchange account in favor of the concern, and proving all the persons named in exhibit A. to be insolvent at the date of the settlement.

On the 10th of May, 1848, exceptions were filed to the second report. The cause having been argued on the ex- 484 ceptions to the several reports, on the 13th day of January, 1852, an interlocutory decree was rendered, decreeing a balance of $3,720.37 to have been due complainant on the 8th of June, 1843, after allowing respondent credit for $9009.33, paid complainant at the date of the settlement, and a credit of $4,080, for the bad debts set forth in exhibit A., that the said settlement be vacated, the partnership dissolved, and the case set for final hearing on the question of interest and costs.

On the 22d day of November, 1852, a final decree was rendered, in favor of the appellee, for the sum of $6,534.22, and costs, and thereupon the appellant appealed, has brought his case up to his court, and the question now to be determined is whether that decree is right or not. The cause has been argued with great zeal and ability upon both sides.

On the one hand, it is contended that the decree of the Circuit Court is wrong; that it ought to be reversed, the settlement sustained, the bill dismissed, and the costs taxed upon the fund: on the other, that the said decree is right and proper in all things, except that it ought to be increased by the amount of $2,757.25, the portion of the capital stock furnished to the concern by the complainant.

The first and most important question presented for our consideration, is whether the sale made by the complainant of his interest in the concern, to the respondent, on the 8th day of June, 1843, should or should not be sustained, and we are met at the very threshold of this enquiry by the position that "the order of the 30th of May, 1844, for an account, established the fact that the appellant was an accounting party, and in establishing that fact, nullified the settlement."

It may be well here to remark that the transaction be-

White vs. Walker.—Opinion of Court.

485 tween the parties of the 8th of June, 1843, purported to be a sale by the complainant of his interest in the concern and a purchase of it by the respondent, and not a settlement of the matters of the partnership, any further than such a sale and purchase would have that effect. The respondent states in his answer that the complainant said that he was willing to take less than one half of the profits of the concern, and it appears, both by the answer of the respondent and the testimony of J. W. Russ, that he hurried the respondent into the arrangement, and did not give respondent time to make out a full statement of all the matters of the concern, so as to show what the amount of the nett profits were.

Now in regard to the order of the 30th of May, 1844, it is very evident that the court did not understand that it nullified this sale and purchase, or it would not (as it did,) in the same order have given to the respondent thirty days within which to file his answer. If this order established the fact that the respondent was an accounting party, all that remained to be done, was to ascertain the amount of his liability, and that was not the object of the appointment of Master Nickels. He was appointed for the express purpose of examining the books and papers of the concern, in order to ascertain whether the respondent was an accounting party or not. The respondent did not so understand the effect of the order, or he would not have set up his purchase of the interest of the complainant in his answer, as a bar to the suit; and it surely could not have been so understood by the complainant, or his learned and able counsel would undoubtedly, on the coming in of the answer, have excepted to it for that reason, and had that matter stricken out, as irrelevant and improper. It is, however, deemed a sufficient answer to the objection to say that this order, made by consent, was, after the answer was 486 filed, also by consent of parties, revoked, vacated and annulled, and that no other order for an account appears in the record. It is further insisted that a decretal order, made by consent, cannot be set aside, either upon a rehearing or appeal, and to this we assent; but we think such an order, made by consent, may by consent be set aside. The next order, the one appointing William Nickels Master, and referring the matter to him, shows that he was appointed to examine the books and papers of said concern, and report upon the same, with reference to the charges made in complainant's bill. He was not required to state an account —it was no part of the duty assigned him; and the same may be said of George F. Baltzell, who was subsequently appointed, who seemed to understand his duty, and did not attempt to state an account. So far, therefore, as regards the account stated by the Master Nickels, it was a nullity. The Master, (says Mr. Daniel, in his able work upon Chancery pleading and practice, vol. 2, page 1478,) must not go beyond the matters referred to him, and it is, he says, laid down in one of Lord Bacon's orders, Beams orders, 23, that if a master reports as to matter which is not referred to him, his report so far as relates to that matter is a nullity. It has been decided that in such a case the proper course is not to except to the Master's report, but before it is confirmed to apply to the court that it may be referred back to the master, to review his report, but that if no such application is made, and the report should be confirmed, the court will pay no attention to it, except so far as it is warranted by the decree. Jenkins vs. Briant, 6 Sim., 605. A reference to the Master will not authorize a report by him more extensive than the allegations and proof warrant, and a report which is erroneous on its face, may be enquired into without any exceptions. Levert vs. Redwood, 9 Porter, 80. If the Master has exceeded his authority, the court will either direct him to review his report, or take no 487 notice of his finding. 2 Daniel's Ch. Pl. and Pr., 1501.

Having disposed of the foregoing proposition we come now to the important question whether the sale by the complainant of his interest in the concern to the respondent ought to be set aside or sustained. It is a general and most material rule in all cases of accounts that where there has been a settlement, and the account has either been signed or a security executed at the foot of it, a Court of Equity will not open that transaction, unless the evidence produced (founded on the charges in the bill,) shows the transaction to be so iniquitous that it ought not to be brought forward at all to affect the party sought to be bound. 1 Hovenden on Frauds, 160; Chambers vs. Goldwin, 9 Ves., 266; Drew vs. Power, 1 Sch. & Lefr., 192; Farnham vs. Brooks, 9 Pick. Rep., 231. Some principles, however, (say the court in the last case cited,) may be extracted from the decisions which stand not contradicted by others, and therefore may be adopted as rules. One is that mere inadequacy in price, if the bargain is fair, is no ground for relief. Another that if the value of the thing sold depends upon a contingency, although great advantage may be gained, yet the contract shall be sustained. Another that old age or infirmity alone, without practice upon it, shall not avoid a contract. Perhaps (say the court,) the whole doctrine may be summed up in this brief sentence taken from a case in Sch. & Lefr. 209: Concealment of a material fact, by the party whose duty it is to disclose it, is sufficient to set aside a contract. And in another book, (1 Simons' Ch. Rep., 89,) it is said that a partner purchasing must give a full account of the state of the property; and in 3 Swanst., 73, it is said full information is required; and in 14 Ves., 300, that although the purchaser may not be aware of the duties of giving information, &c., which the court would require in the situation in which he stood, it is necessary to impute knowledge 488 which the party may not actually have had. We subscribe to these doctrines generally, but are satisfied that there must be qualifications suited to cases of an extraordinary nature, in which a strict application of the rule would infallibly produce injustice. If a trustee, or an agent, undertakes to purchase of the owner an estate, or stock, or debts, with the condition of which he may be well acquainted, and of which the owner may be entirely or partially ignorant, there is no doubt a sufficient disclosure should be made to enable the owner to judge of the adequacy of the offer made; and if there is anything misrepresented, or concealed, or withheld, even without a design to conceal, the bargain will be void. But suppose the subject matter of the bargain to be of a complicated nature, such as an account running through many years and many volumes of books, and relating to transactions which may in a measure have gone out of memory; in such cases, all that fairness requires would seem to be to give information sufficient to lead the party into an enquiry, a willingness to answer to all questions put, and a surrender of all the materials of knowledge by the purchaser to the seller.

The exhibit of a balance considerably larger than the sum offered for it, is of itself one pretty strong ground of enquiry, and an intimation of contingencies which may affect the bargain, and if the books and memoranda containing the elements from which the balance is composed, be offered for scrutiny, there seems to be no ground to impute fraud. If the party entering into the contract has the full means of knowledge committed to him by the other party, and does not choose or neglects to avail himself of them, it is his own fault if the bargain turns out to be unfavorable. He may have too much confidence in the party with whom he deals to think it necessary to go into a particular examination, but if that confidence is not well placed, the bargain will not be affected. Farnham vs. Brooks, 9 Pick. Rep., 233, 234.

An agreement will not be avoided by reason that representations made by one party to the other, upon the subject of the agreement, are not correct, if it be manifest that the party making the representations is speaking not from personal knowledge, but with reference to accounts which were equally open to both parties, and if the repreesntations be justified by those accounts. Harris vs. Hemble, 2 Eng. Cond. Ch. Rep., 57.

We have been referred by complainant's counsel to the case of Maddeford vs. Austwick and Austwick vs. Maddeford, 1 Simons' Rep., 89, 2 Eng. Cond. Ch. Rep., 45, to show that mhere a partner who superintended exclusively the accounts of the concern, agreed to purchase his co-partner's share of the business, for a sum which he knew, from accounts in his possession, but which he concealed from his co-partner, was an inadequate consideration, the agreement was set aside. But there are several circumstances which materially distinguished that case from the case at bar. One is that at the time the agreement was made between the plaintiff and defendant, the defendant had in his possession a private book, which contained a statement of the accounts between the plaintiff and defendant, made out by the defendant, whereby it appeared that the one thousand pounds which the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff, in addition to the money which he had drawn from the concern, would have been nearly but not quite a fair consideration, if no profits had been made from the concern of the mint; but taking the mint profits into the account, which the defendant was unquestionably bound to divide with the plaintiff, it would have been many hundred pounds less than the plaintiff would be entitled to receive. This private book he concealed. The public books of account belonging to that concern, to which all parties had access, were (as were those of White & Walker,) of an intricate nature. The respondent in this case had no such private book; and moreover, in that case the proposition to purchase was made by the defendant, and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff did not seek a full share of the profits, while in this the proposal to sell came from the complainant, who evinced a desire for an immediate close of the business, without waiting until the full statement of the matters of the concern could be ascertained, expressing a willingness to take less than one half of the profits, respondent at the same time offering him full access to all the books and papers of the concern, and suggesting the propriety of a full examination. And here it may not be improper to observe that this case was argued throughout, on behalf of the complainant, as though the respondent, at this juncture of their affairs, had undertaken to make out and present to the complainant (before he would make him an offer of what he would give for his share,) a full statement of all the matters of the concern, whereas his undertaking (and this not at the instance of the complainant,) was to make out a statement of the assets and liabilities. This he did—whether substantially correct or not will be seen hereafter. In this case, the accounts were of a complicated nature, running through four and a half years, and through many volumes of books, and relating to transactions many of which had in a measure gone out of the memory of the respondent, as appears by his examination before the Master. He gave information sufficient to have put the complainant on enquiry, advised it, and offered the books and memoranda containing the elements from which the balance is composed, for the scrutiny of the complainant. There is no pretence that he at any time evinced any unwillingness to answer any questions put to him by the complainant. Where, then, is the ground to impute to him fraud, either actual or constructive? The defendant, by his answer, denies all fraud, and, indeed, all the charges alleged, and all the facts set forth in the bill as grounds for the interference of the court. The answer is sworn to, and it is a well settled rule in equity that a party is not to be charged upon any fact stated in the bill, against his own denial, in his answer under oath, of the existence of such fact, if the proof of the fact is only by one witness, upon the equitable principle that if he is put upon his oath by his adversary, credit shall be given to his own declarations, unless they are contradicted by at least two witnesses, or by written documents, or pregnant circumstances. In every case the answer of the defendant to a bill filed against him, upon any matter stated in the bill, and responsive to it, is evidence in his own favor, and is conclusive, unless overcome by the testimony of two opposing witnesses, or of one witness, corroborated by other circumstances and facts, which give to it a greater weight than the answer, or which is equivalent in weight to a second witness. 2 Story Eq. Jur., Sec. 1528, and note 2, page 995, 5th Ed. But then the answer, to have this power, most be direct and positive. Only vs. Walker, 2 Atkyns, 407; Walton vs. Hobbs, ibid., 19; Arnut vs. Bircue, 1 Ves., Sr., 97; Lenere vs. Lenere, 1 Ves., Sr., 66; Wetmore vs. White, 2 Caine's Cases in Error; Farnham vs. Brooks, 9 Pick. Rep., 249, 250. The answer in this case is direct and positive. The question of fraud is one of motive and intent, and can rarely if ever be considered as a single fact, but a conclusion to be inferred from all the circumstances of the case. In conclusion, however, the same general rule prevails in equity as at law; it is not to be presumed, but must be proved. Wilson & Cleland vs. Luke Lott, 5 Fla, R., 316.

Where, we would ask, is the evidence to fix the charge of fraud or liability upon the respondent? We have carefully examined the testimony of every witness who was sworn to testify in the case, and have found nothing in it which establishes any such charge. We may, therefore, safely say it does not exist, unless it is to be found in the report of the Master Nickels. Hence we turn to that report, and what do we find? A document full of errors and exceedingly unsatisfactory, although it cost him about eight months' labor to prepare it, a recast of the books, in his opinion, being necessary to enable him to make out a statement of the affairs of the concern; and when it comes, what does it present? This recast of all the books, with schedules, &c., and a long report, mostly upon matters not referred to him, without a single word as to the charges in the bill, (except in the caption referring to his appointment,) in regard to which and for no other purpose he was appointed to examine the books and papers of the concern. There is presented, amongst other things, a paper marked T., called a profit and loss account, showing a balance of $30,872.67, which he reports as the net profits of the firm, and yet in this important account he forgot (or did not know that it was necessary, in order to show the net profits) to deduct the amount of the capital stock paid in and the amount of bad debts, together amounting to near one third of that sum.

Now if he committed so gross an error in an account covering less than half a sheet of foolscap paper, what errors may he not have committed in recasting the whole set of books of the firm of White & Walker, which did a large business, running through a period of four and a half years? And ought such a report to be taken as conclusive, and as sufficient evidence to establish the grave charges made against the respondent in the complainant's bill, especially after all of the books and papers of the concern have been burned up, so that they cannot be referred to for the purpose of testing the correctness of the report? We think not. In the cases of Moore & Taylor vs. Story, 8 Dana's (Kentucky) Reps., 231, in which an Auditor had been appointed to examine the books and accounts of a partnership concern, &c., and to report, &c., the books (nine in number) had been very irregularly kept, and the accounts were (as in this case) exceedingly complicated. The auditor made his report, but the court said they "could not rely upon the result of his estimates, as they had discovered several material errors in his calculations. Nor can we (said the court,) confide in data assumed by him to arrive at the amount of capital, (a question that had been specially referred to him.) We think the parol proof in the cause, strengthened by the facts deduced from the whole case, may more safely be relied on." So in the case now before us. We cannot (for a similar reason,) confide in the report of the Master Nickels, and are satisfied that it should not be made the basis of a decree against the respondent. But there are other errors in this report still more important, some of which were corrected in the Circuit Court, and others which we propose to correct here.

It may be proper to remark that we have looked into this report merely as a matter of evidence, to ascertain the fact whether respondent was an accounting party or not—the sole object of this reference to this Master.

In regard to the item in account T., charged as goods sold for promissory notes of individuals, &c., $2,500, the proof is exceedingly vague and unsatisfactory. Indeed, there is no legal proof of any specific amount. The respondent, in his examination before the master Nickels, in answer to a question put to him on this subject, said—We were in the habit of receiving promissory notes of individuals for goods; don't know the amount, but think it was not large, as we did not do much of that kind of business, and merchandise has not had credit for them. J. W. Russ, who was also examined as to this matter, before the same Master, said that while he was in the employment of White & Walker, as clerk, they did receive promissory notes of individuals in payment for merchandise, but could not tell how much. In a subsequent examination before the Master Baltzell, he says he remembered some business of the kind being done, but does not recollect any particular transaction, it being confined to limited amounts, and entries were made; the notes were put away with other notes of the firm; the practice was not common, the respondent preferring good customers' debts to notes of third persons. F. R. Pittman, who had also been a clerk of White & Walker, was examined by Master Baltzell, and in answer to a question put to him in regard to this matter, said he did not recollect any such transactions; it was not the practice of the firm, and if any occurred they were small, or he would recollect it more perfectly. M. L. Cavert, another witness, in answer to an enquiry put to him, said—I was in the habit of trading for promissory notes of individuals, and suppose I received five hundred per annum for each of these years, (1841, 1842, 1843 and 1844,) and I think this is a small estimate; and being asked as to the general custom of merchants in Marianna in regard to this matter, said—I cannot say whether it was the general custom of the merchants; I dealt in them myself, because I preferred good notes rather than charge them (goods) in account. Isaac Widgeon, another witness examined, said—I think it was the custom of merchants generally (in Marianna) to sell merchandise for promissory notes on third persons, and that he was in the habit of doing so himself, and on being asked what amount of such papers per annum would be a fair average for which merchandise was sold in such a business as White & Walker, (which question was objected to by respondent,) he answered—"I suppose five or six hundred dollars." This is all the testimony on the subject, and we may well lay out of view the testimony of the last two witnesses, there being no rule of law justifying its reception. In the case of Simpson vs. Feltz, 1 Nott & McCord's Ch. Cases, 215, an attempt was made to prove the profits of a firm by showing what profits other merchants in the same neighborhood made, but the court said:—The evidence in support of the item in the Commissioner's report is very flimsy, weak, and altogether conjectural, being founded on the opinion of merchants in the neighborhood, whose situations were entirely different from that of complainants, they being owners of new cash stores, when that of complainants was a credit store. The evidence of these two witnesses, Cavert and Widgeon, is equally conjectural; indeed, more so. There is nothing at all to show the relative business of White & Walker with any other merchant in Marianna. One, for aught that appears, may have had ten times the amount of stock of the other. Cavert or Widgeon may have had fifty thousand dollars worth; White & Walker may not have had ten thousand. The testimony shows that in 1841 and 1842 their stock of goods was small. One witness says that it had been quite low. The respondent, it will be observed, said, speaking of these notes, merchandise has not been credited for them. This he might well say, for other testimony in the case shows that White & Walker did not keep what is called by accountants a merchandise account; but Russ, the principal clerk of the house, who kept the books, and was intimately acquainted with the transactions of the concern, says—Entries were made; the notes were put away with other notes of the firm. It is very evident, therefore, that the concern had the benefit of them. Indeed, they may, and probably did, constitute a part of the very notes from which the complainant made his selection. And here it may not be improper to remark that the able and astute counsel who closed the argument of this cause for the complainant, while he earnestly contended that merchandise ought to have a credit for these notes, did not charge the respondent with having made any improper use of them, but freely admitted that they had gone into the general fund of the firm, and that it had had the use of them. Apart from this consideration, however, from the view which we have taken of this case, showing an absence of all fraud on the part of the respondent, the amount, from all the legal proof in the case, being but small, would not change the result.

The charge for profits on Union Bank money, seems to have nothing to sustain it. The testimony shows that some of it was received at its face for goods sold, and bought at a discount of fifty per cent.; that it was lent, to be paid in good money, and that it was paid, and that the amount received went to pay the debts of the concern, and Russ, their principal clerk, who was intimately acquainted with all the business transactions of the house, says expressly in his testimony, taken before the Master, that all these speculations were for the benefit of the concern. There is consequently no reason or pretence for this charge.

The Master's report affords no satisfactory explanation in regard to the item of $2731.75, found on the credit side of exhibit T. He states it thus:—"Sales made to cash which has been paid out to individuals, which I have found charged to them at sundry times in day book, but has not been entered in cash book; therefore merchandise ought to be credited." By turning to exhibit R., we find that this item is made up of 53 monthly items, embracing doubtless di-

White vs. Walker.—Opinion of Court.

497 vers small sums lent each month, commencing in November, 1838, and running on until April, 1843. This exhibit is headed thus—"Statement of entries, cash paid out, which are found on day book, posted in journal, and have never been entered on cash book, or to credit of merchandise." In this report he says—"The paper marked R., shows various cash entries on the day book and ledger, which have not been placed on the cash, or anywhere else carried to credit of merchandist." This is all that is anywhere said in relation to this item, except in the examination of the respondent before the master Nickels, to which reference will hereafter be made. It seems from all this that the master assumed the fact that these items had not been entered on the cash book. Why this assumption? It does not appear to be based on testimony, or even a reasonable probability. We have nothing before us to show that the cash book of this firm was not kept in the usual manner, and if it was, and these items were for cash received in the daily sale of goods, then they must have been entered in the cash book, and merchandise had already been credited with the amount of them; and the witness, Russ, the principal clerk of the House, testifies that a portion of the time Pittman, another clerk, kept the cash book, and squared it; that is, we understand, balanced it. Now upon the hypothesis of the Master, we are at a loss to know how this book was made to balance. The argument of counsel (as we understand it,) on this point was that these amounts were found charged in various accounts of customers, as cash loaned or advanced, and that it was a legitimate presumption that the cash so loaned was taken from the till or drawer, which contained the money received for the daily cash sales of merchandise, and therefore, in order to have full benefit of all the goods sold, it was necessary to enter the amount to the credit of merchan-
498 dise, in the account T. Now the objection to this item, as it stands in the Master's report, is that his assumption that these items were never carried to the cash book is a mere assumption, unsustained by proof, unless it is to be found in the answer of the respondent to a question propounded to him upon his examination before the Master, and not within the bounds of a reasonable presumption, and we think that to fix a charge of fraud upon a party, we ought to have something more than the mere assumption of facts.

The objection to the explanation offered in the argument of counsel, viz: That it afforded an index of the amount of merchandise sold for cash, is equally unsatisfactory; for, non constat, that the money so loaned to customers was collected from other sources than the daily sales, as for settlement of accounts previously contracted by other customers, or taken out of moneys already entered in the cash book, and which had passed into the general fund of the concern, and other monies, collected from various sources, and placed in the same fund, which is much more likely. Fraud, as before stated, is never to be presumed, but must be proved; but if facts may be assumed, and made to rise to the dignity of testimony, this sound, salutary and equitable rule of law may very easily be evaded. The question propounded to the respondent, to which his answer above referred to was given, is as follows, viz: "I find many charges of cash entered on the day book which have never been entered on the cash book; how are they to be accounted for, and to what account are they to be placed?" To which the answer was: "I presume merchandise ought to be credited with the amounts." Here, in the question put, is to be found again the same assumption. It is a mere general question; the attention of the witness is not called to any particular item; but without any particular item being brought to his notice, he is called upon to answer to a series of items, amounting doubtless to several hundreds, 499 and running through a period of four and a half years, and this, too, eight years after these entries commenced. Can it be supposed by any reasonable man that he could, when thus suddenly interrogated, recollect all or even any considerable portion of these numerous items, so as to be able to answer understandingly in regard to them? Surely not. The clerks of the house, it appears, made most of the daily entries. These items were small, although amounting to considerable in the aggregate. It is not probable, therefore, that his attention was ever very particularly called to them, and hence the general and necessarily unsatisfactory language of his answer—"I presume," &c. Nothing more than mere presumption could be expected in an answer founded entirely on an assumed fact. To what weight, then, is the answer entitled? It would seem that it should not be permitted to outweigh the defendant's answer, which is responsive to the bill, and the testimony of Russ, the principal clerk of the House, who states in substance that the books were justly kept, and all the entries in them bona fide, and honestly made.

As to the sum of $4,080 for bad debts, it is deemed sufficient to say that this item is set up in the answer responsive to the bill, that it was allowed by the court below, and has not been objected to here, even by way of argument.

We insert here a statement showing the difference between the exhibit made by White to Walker at the time of the purchase of his interest in the partnership business, and the actual condition of the business, as shown by the Master's report, after being corrected by this court.

White's exhibit, made to Walker at the time of sale, viz:

Good assets over and above the debts due by the concern, and including the private accounts of the copartners,	$19,985 33
Bad assets reported,	4,080 00 500
Totals assets due concern, over and above its liabilities,	24,065 33
Balance reported by Master, in account of profit and loss,	30,872 67
By item in account designated as "sales to cash paid out to individuals,"	2,731 75
By item in account, "Goods sold for promissory notes,"	2,500 00
By item in account, profit on Union Bank notes loaned to T. M. Bush,	935 00
By item in account, profit on Union Bank notes loaned to Wynns,	660 00
	$6,826 75
Total balance, as corrected by this court,	24,045 92
Balance in favor of White's exhibit,	19 41
To gross balance due partnership, as per above statement,	24,045 92
By amount allowed for bad debts by the Circuit Court,	4,080 00
Net balance, to be divided in equal moities,	19,965 92
Nett balance due to each partner,	9,982 96
Amount of cash and selected notes received by Walker,	9,009 00
Excess in favor of White, consisting of assets remaining after the selection by Walker, of his portion,	$873 96

It is insisted by the complainant that the decree of the Circuit Court is erroneous in this: That it does not allow him for the cash which he contributed as capital stock, with which the firm commenced business, and that this ought to be added to the amount decreed in his favor. This claim of the complainant we have maturely considered, and think that it is without foundation. The basis of the decree of the Circuit Court is the balance struck in account T., which purports to be a "profit and loss" account, but which is in fact only a "balance sheet" showing the difference between the assumed disbursements and receipts of the concern. To convert it into a "profit and loss" account, it was necessary to carry to the "debit side of the account" the whole cash capital invested, and this, if it had been done, would have reduced the balance by that amount and would then have exhibited the clear "profit" (as the Master understood it,) over and above that capital. Admitting the position claimed by complainant, the account between the copartners would stand thus:

Balance reported in account T.		$30,872 67
One moiety, or Walker's half.	$15,436 33
Add for cash contributed to capital stock	2,757 25	$18,193 58
Balance to be received by White		$12,679 09

Thus it will be perceived, upon the hypothesis on which the complainant's claim is based, of two copartners contributing equal portions of the cash capital, and to participate equally in the profits, one receives from the nett assets of the concern $18,193.58, while the other gets only $12,679.09. To meet a result so obviously inequitable, it was insisted by the counsel for complainant that $2,757.25 was to be viewed as coming not out of the nett assets of the concern, but as due by White, the acting partner, who had received it from Walker at the time of entering into the copartnership, and that he ought to be required to refund it out of his private funds. It is true, White did receive the amount, as Walker's portion of the cash capital, but it is equally true that he disbursed it for the purchase of merchandise, which very merchandise is debited in account T., and the proceeds thereof, when sold, carried to the credit side of the same account. Now if White is to be debited with the cash received, he must likewise be credited with the amount when paid out for merchandise, and the two amounts being equal, they balance each other, amounting to a cross entry, which could not in the least affect or vary the balance stated in the account. We should not have deemed it necessary to expend an argument upon this point but for the very earnest manner in which it was pressed upon us by both of the able counsel who represented the complainant. We cannot but believe that they had been led into an erroneous conception of this matter, by viewing the result exhibited in account T. as "clear profit," when it was in fact only the "balance" between the "receipts and disbursements" of the concern; and indeed, the designation of that account might well induce the misconception. We are perfectly satisfied that there is no error in the decree of the Circuit Court in rejecting this item of claim. The view which we have taken of the case, in the former part of this opinion, and the conclusion to which we have come upon the whole case, renders it unnecessary to consider the other claims set forth in the complainant's petition of appeal. Upon a view of the entire case, it is gratifying to us to perceive that our conclusion upon the details is strongly fortified by the general result, based upon the evidence of the witnesses examined to the point of the average profits realized by other mercantile houses during the period that this firm was in operation. The weight of evidence on that subject seemed to establish fifty per cent. advance on the sale of goods as the average. If we assume this data as the basis of our calculation, (and we are inclined to the opinion, from the disasters which attended the majority of the mercantile firms doing business at that period, that this average is a very high one,) the result will stand thus:

Amount of merchandise bought during four and a half years, the period of doing business, (in round numbers,)		$44,000 00
Fifty per cent. advance on cost is		22,000 00
Deduct for bad debts		4,000 00
Leaving good assets to be divided		$18,000 00
One moiety of good assets		9,000 00

Which is in round numbers the amount the complainant received for his interest in the concern when he sold out to White—a result with which we think complainant has no cause to be dissatisfied, when we reflect that he embarked in the enterprise only the sum of $2,757.25, and in the brief period of four and a half years, had returned to him, in cash and the selected assets of the concern, the amount of $9,009.00. A result so satisfactory, and achieved through the perilous periods of 1840, 1841 and 1842, is in our estimation the highest compliment which could be paid, not only to the business capacity, but to the honesty and integrity of the respondent. Let the decree of the court below be reversed, and the cause be remanded to the court below, with directions to dismiss the bill; and as to the costs, we deem it right and proper that under the circumstances each party should pay one half the costs, and accordingly so decree.

As a general rule, prima facie, the prevailing party is entitled to costs, as well in equity as in law. 3 Daniels' Ch. Pr., (by Perkins,) 1520, and notes. Yet costs do not always follow the decree in favor of a party; they are in the sound discretion of the court, and are to be awarded or refused according to the justice of each particular case. Ibid, 1515, 1516, and note and case cited. In Jones vs. Morehead, &c., 3 B. Monroe's Reps., it was held that in a case where suit was necessary to wind up the partnership, it is proper to divide the costs. In Taylor vs. Cawthorne, 2 Dev. Eq., 221, it is said costs are usually taxed on partnership effects. In the case of Simpson vs. Feltz, 1 Eng. Cond. Ch. Reps., 213, 219, the plaintiffs, in a suit for a settlement against a co-partner, were ordered, under the circumstances, to pay two-thirds of the costs. A very large portion of the costs, had the respondent (the appellant here,) taken the proper steps at the coming in of the report of the Master Nickels, to get rid of all that portion of it which was beyond the scope of his authority, (which he failed to do,) might have been saved; and he is at fault in relation to other matters, which tended to increase the costs, and especially in the great and unnecessary length of his answer.

Therefore let one half the costs be taxed against each party, both in this court and the court below. Per totam Curiam.

2. Whether or not a contract is usurious, is a question of law, and it is within the province of the court to determine that question, and to instruct the jury accordingly.

3. The case of Gray vs. Belden, (3 Florida Reps., 110,) considered and approved.

4. The court will not disturb a verdict merely on the ground that the facts of the case did not call for a certain instruction which was given by the court, 505 and which instruction was correct in principle, and not calculated to mislead the jury.

Writ of Error to Franklin Circuit Court.

This was an action of assumpsit on a promissory note. The defence set up was usury.

The facts, as shown by the record, were these: Gray was security on a forthcoming bond, given by one Tobey, whose slaves were levied on for a debt of $4,000, and replevied. The slaves were not forthcoming on the day of sale; the bond was returned forfeited, and execution was issued against Gray, whose property was levied on and advertised for sale. On the day of sale, Gray agreed with one T. J. Vickers, the holder of the execution, to give, and did give him a note for $200, payable thirty days after date, upon the consideration that Vickers would stay the execution for that time; and the object of this stay is stated to be that Gray might have time to go to Mobile and get the slaves mentioned in the forthcoming bond, and have them sold in discharge of the execution which had been levied on his property. The note thus given was endorsed to Belden, the plaintiff in error, who brought suit thereon. Upon this state of facts the Supreme Court, at January term, 1850, upon a writ of error, duly prosecuted, determined that the contract was usurious, and remanded the cause to the court below for a new trial.

At the April Term, 1850, of Franklin Circuit Court, a new trial was had, and the following additional evidence was adduced, viz:

"On the day appointed for the sale of Gray's property, Gray applied to Vickers to postpone the sale for thirty days to enable him, Gray, to seek for and surrender the property of said Tobey, (for the delivery of which said forthcoming bond was given.) Vickers declined and said that he wanted to be present at said sale, and that he had 506 come from Montgomery, Alabama, (where he resided,) on purpose to attend said sale, and that if it was postponed, he would have to return to Montgomery, and come back to St. Josephs, (the place where the property was levied on and to be sold,) at some cost and expense. Gray then offered to give to Vickers, his note for two hundred dollars, as an inducement to postpone said sale. Vickers consented, and postponed the sale, and the note was given. The whole of said judgment was subsequently paid to said Vickers. The conversation here stated between Vickers and Gray, took place in presence of witness, on the day the sale was to take place, and about the same time and just before the Marshal was about to sell the property of said Gray.

"The court instructed the jury that if the note sued upon was for the postponement of the sale by Vickers, it was usurious, and could not be recovered upon, although there were other accompanying considerations. If bad in part, bad in whole, and in such case, will find for defendant."

The jury returned a verdict for defendant, upon which judgment was rendered.

W. G. M. Davis for Plaintiff in Error.

G. S. Hankins for Defendant in Error.

DuPONT, J. delivered the opinion of the court.

At the January term, A. D. 1850, this case was brought up to the Supreme Court, by writ of error, sued out by the present appellee, and the judgment of the Circuit Court having been reversed, it was remanded for a new trial. (Vide Gray vs. Belden, 3 Fla. R., 110.)

In obedience to the mandate of the Supreme Court, a new trial was had, at the Spring Term, A. D. 1850, of the Franklin Circuit Court, upon which trial a verdict was rendered for the defendant below, and a judgment entered 507 accordingly. To reverse that judgment is the object of the present appeal to this court.

We do not feel ourselves called upon to review the opinion delivered in the case of Gray vs. Belden, concurring as we do in that opinion, so far as it bears upon the issue which was raised by the pleadings; and in order, therefore, to a decision of the present case, it will only be necessary to consider, first, whether the additional evidence offered at the second trial altered in any material respect the former aspect of the case; and secondly, whether the instructions of the Judge, given on the trial below, were in conformity to the law, as announced in that opinion.

The issue upon which the case was decided, both at the first and second trials, was raised by the plea of usury. The evidence adduced at the former trial to sustain the plea, proved that the note sued upon had been given by Gray, the defendant, in consideration that a certain execution at law, which had been levied upon his property, should be stayed for the period of thirty days. The language of the witness, as we find it in the record, is as follows: "On the day of sale, by agreement, Gray gave the note sued on to Vickers, payee and holder of execution, in consideration that Vickers would stay the execution for thirty days, in order to give Gray time to go to Mobile and get the negroes mentioned in forthcoming bond, and have them sold in discharge of the execution against him, founded on the forthcoming bond." The only additional evidence adduced at the second trial, was given by the same witness,, who testified to this point on the first trial, and was as follows, viz: "Vickers declined," (the offer to take the note) "and said that he wanted to be present at said sale, and that he had come from Montgomery, Alabama, where he resided, on purpose to attend said sale, and that if it were postponed, he would have to return to Montgomery, and come back to 508 St. Josephs, the place the property was levied on and to be sold, at some cost and expense. Gray then offered to give Vickers his note for two hundred dollars, as an inducement to postpone said sale. Vickers consented and postponed the sale, and the note was given."

We are at a loss to perceive how the additional evidence changed or altered the aspect of the case, as it was presented on the first trial. It is true that the counsel for the depellant insisted in his argument that a different consideration for the giving of the note is established by the additional evidence, viz: An indemnity or reimbursement for the traveling expenses of Vickers to and from Montgomery; and in this connection, he contended with great earnestness against the impolicy of preventing a creditor from extending to his debtor that forbearance which a well disposed and benevolent man might desire to exercise. But we differ from the counsel in the supposition that any new or different consideration was established by the additional evidence; and as to the matter of policy, we deem it to be of paramount importance that a statute so salutary in its operation as is the statute against usury, should be sedulously guarded againsth the ingenious shifts and devices so often resorted to to evade its operation. The true question involved in the issue is this: What was the consideration which moved Gray to the giving of the note? Evidently it was the postponement of the sale of his property, or, in the words of the statute, the "forbearance, or giving day of payment," by which the creditor to the debtor. We are, then clearly of opinion that the present aspect of the case is identical with that presented at the first trial, and that it has not been relieved, by the additional evidence offered at the second trial, from the operation of the statute.

The other question which remains to be considered, is as 509 to the propriety of the instructions given to the jury on the second trial. There was some difference of opinion between the counsel as to what was the instruction given by the court, it being apparent that there was a clerical omission in the record; but giving it the reading contended for by the counsel for the appellant, (which we are inclined to think is the correct version,) it was in the following words, to-wit: "If the consideration of the note sued upon was the postponement of the sale by Vickers, it was usurious, and the note could not be recovered upon, although there were other accompanying considerations. If bad in part, bad in whole, and in such case the jury will find for defendant." The first clause of this instruction, we think, is in strict conformity to the opinion delivered at the former hearing of the case, and is otherwise correct in principle. It did not interfere with the legitimate province of the jury to inquire into the consideration of the note; and that being ascertained to be the postponement of the collection of the debt, it was the right and duty of the court to announce the law. Whether a contract be usurious, is a question of law, and in this clause of the instruction, the court did no more than to declare the law, as applicable to the facts of the case.

Nor do we think that the second clause of the instruction, which declares that "a consideration bad in part is bad in whole," is obnoxious to any valid objection. Although the facts of the case might not, perhaps, have called for the giving of the instruction, yet, being correct in principle, when applied to a case of this kind, and not perceiving how the appellant could be injured thereby, we are not disposed to lay any stress upon it.

Let the judgment be affirmed, with costs.

510 JAMES C. JONES, APPELLANT, vs. WILLIAM J. FELL, EXECUTOR OF S. G. CLIFFORD, DECEASED, APPELLEE.

An agreement amongst Pilots to associate together for their business, is not illegal.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Escambia County, in the Western Circuit.

This was an action of assumpsit, instituted by the appellee in the court below, to recover an amount as a balance claimed to be due from appellant to Clifford, the appellee's testator, upon an account stated. Non assumpsit was pleaded, upon which issue was joined.

On the trial of the cause, Edward Onixon, a witness for plaintiff, testified that Clifford, the appellee's testator, Jones, the appellant, and he, the witness, were partners, equal in interest, in piloting; that they were in the habit of settling up every quarter until the month of October; that Clifford was taken sick in the latter part of November, 1850, in consequence of which there was no other settlement until the 6th of March, 1851, when it appeared that Jones had overdrawn his share of the profits of the business to the amount of $192.10, and the witness had overdrawn his share some $40 to $60. Jones acknowledged all in account to be correct. Whether Jones paid anything at that time, or since, the witness says he does not know. The above settlement of accounts was made at the request of Clifford, and it was agreed that whatever had been overdrawn by either, should be paid. To this Jones made no objection.

On his cross-examination, he stated "that the partnership between himself, Clifford and Jones continued for several years; that according to their by-laws, each was on duty 511

one day and off duty two days, and when each was absent, he drew his share of the profits when he returned; that the understanding was, that one of them should at all times be on duty, and not more than one, unless they were needed, and that under this arrangement, they shared alike in the profits; that they had by-laws, which imposed a forfeiture in cases of delinquency. If the pilot on service was on the look out, we did not all go after a vessel, unless there was a second vessel. Clifford's sickness did not affect or abridge his right to a share of the profits. The partnership continued to the 6th of March, 1851. I left at one time, with the leave of the Port Wardens. We had the liberty to go where we pleased during the two days of respite; but if we were not actually on the bar we were there. It was the duty of all three pilots to be there, but under our arrangements but one was on the watch, or look out; but if either was absent when wanted, he forfeited his share of the profits. But this arrangement did not relieve any of them from duty. The one on duty on the bar was the lookout, but none were afloat at such time. No injury resulted to commerce, or the service in which they were engaged, by this partnership, as far as witness knows. Two of the Port Wardens advised this association. On one occasion, he, witness, heard that a vessel could not get a pilot off Pensacola bar."

Mr. Kelly, a witness for defendant, testified that he has been Port Warden for many years, both at this port and elsewhere; that he has always been of opinion that these combinations among pilots were injurious to commerce, and the harbor where vessels come in. This, however, is only his individual opinion; that three pilots were appointed for this port; that it was expected that they should be on duty, except when absent by leave of the Port Wardens. This witness further stated that if the matter 512 had been officially reported to the Port Wardens, he, as one of that Board, would have ordered a dissolution or annulment of such combination. He says that three pilots were considered necessary, but that he does not know that it was necessary for all of them to be constantly on the lookout.

The court charged the jury that a contract in violation of public policy, or in contravention of a public statute, is void in law; and also that if the parties in this case made a contract the tendency of which was dangerous and injurious to commerce and navigation, such contract would be void, as against public policy.

The defendants, amongst other things, asked of the court the following instruction to the jury: If the jurors are satisfied that there were three pilots appointed by the Board of Port Wardens, then they are to presume that the public service rquired these pilots, and that any partnership or combination amongst these pilots so appointed, by which one or two were relieved from duty, even for a day, was therefore in derogation of a public duty, and consequently void. This instruction was refused by the court, and the defendant excepted.

A verdict and judgment having been rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial, which was refused by the court, and defendant appealed.

R. L. Campbell for appellant.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a suit instituted by a pilot of the harbor of Pensacola, to recover from one of his associates, a share of the profits claimed to be due him under agreement to unite in the business of pilotage.

Jones vs. Clifford's Ex'r.—Opinion of Court.

513 The error complained of is in the refusal of the Circuit Court to give an instruction asked in the following terms: "If the jurors are satisfied that there were three pilots appointed by the Board of Port Wardens, then they are to presume that the public service required three pilots, and that any partnership or combination amongst the pilots so appointed, by which one or two were relieved from duty even for a day, was, therefore, in derogation of a public duty, and consequently void."

This maintains the position that all the pilots of a port are to be constantly engaged, and that an arrangement for the relief of one of them, for any time, however small, is illegal and improper. Whilst the act of 1822, providing for the appointment of pilots, prohibits persons from acting who are not appointed, under a penalty, (Duval 62,) yet the regulation of them and establishment of all such ordidances as they shall deem advisable, with the power of removal and to fix and alter the rates of pilotage, is by special law left to the Board of Port Wardens for the harbor. Thompson's Dig., 256.

There is no rule or regulation (as appears from the record,) of this Board of Officers making provision for this constant attention to duty, and it may be questioned, we think, whether one carried to such an extreme of strictness, would be either polite or proper. It would be a different thing to require that a sufficient number of the pilots appointed should be kept engaged to supply the wants of the harbor.

Nor does it follow as a necessary consequence, that because three were appointed, the engagement of them all, without any relief, was necessary or requisite. The reasonable presumption, we think, is that a number was appointed sufficient to provide for casualties and sickness, and to give such relief as the exigencies, not only of a day, 514 but even a longer time might make necessary for one or more of the pilots.

As a general rule, the law gives its command to its officers, with a large discretion as to the mode of execution, yet exacting a faithful performance. Thus, pilots whose business it is, of most delicate and important character, to guide and conduct vessels in safety over the bars, and through the intricacies of a channel into a harbor, are required to be on the alert, to render in due season the requisite assistance. For neglect of duty or other misconduct, they are liable to be discharged or dismissed, and have their licenses revoked; they are also responsible in damages to the parties injured. As already remarked, they are placed under the governance and directions of officers, whose duty it is to give licenses, only to persons possessed of an intimate acquaintance with the particular navigation, of integrity, diligence, activity, sobriety and steadiness, and of the skill to manage all the vessels that may trade to the port.

It seems to be the practice in other ports to require bond and security, and an oath to discharge the duties faithfully. The Port Wardens may possibly possess the power to establish a rule, such as is insisted on, and if one had been shown in this case, it would certainly have received from the court a very respectful consideration. As it is, we have no power to declare or create such a one, or to consider this case as if one existed, and had been disregarded by the pilots.

It is insisted that an association "amongst pilots is in violation of public policy, tending to impair competition between them, and diminish their exertions in the public service; that they share alike in the profits is sufficient to destroy all emulation." It is also insisted that the court shall affirm the truth of these propositions as matter of law, 515 and without reference to the facts.

It will be seen at once that the question is, and would be embarrassing to persons unacquainted with, and having little practical knowledge or experience of the subject, whether such an association is wise or unwise, beneficial or injurious to commerce, and may not be determined by reference to the books, for no authority has been cited, or is to be found on the subject, so far as research has extended, but would best be ascertained by the examination of persons whose interest or duty may prompt them to watch its operation. In this case, one of the Port Wardens, Mr. Kelly, thinks it injurious, while two of the others, Messrs. LeBaron and Mitchell, advised it—the Board not acting nor prohibiting it. At the bar of the Mississippi there are fifty pilots, organized into an association having a principal and Board of Directors, with regular government and rules for distribution of service, pay, &c.

After an experience of ten years, the system was found to work well. The evidence for the good order, faithfulness, decorum and entire efficiency of the pilot union was unanimous. See report of Committee of Legislature of Louisiana, 2 DeBow In Res. 8, 10.

Associations are so common an element, not only in commerce, but in all the affairs of life, that it would be rather perilous on the part of the court, to assert that they impair competition, destroy emulation and diminish exertion. There is scarcely an occupation in life, scarcely a branch of trade, from the very largest to the smallest, that does not feel the exciting and invigorating influence of this wonderful instrumentality. It made and conducts our government, constructs our railroads, our steam vessels, our magnificent ships, our temples of worship, structures for public and private use, our manufactories, creates our 516 institutions for learning, builds up our cities and towns.

Its very office is to do what individual exertion may not accomplish, and in a degree distinguishes civilized from savage life. Why then should this important agency be denied to this meritorious class of our citizens? They are in general men of small means, to whom an association may not only be desirable, but necessary and indispensable. Were our minds less clear on the subject, we are not permitted to assert the invalidity of the act on this account.

"An agreement is not void on this ground, unless it expressly and unquestionably contravenes public policy and be manifestly injurious to the interests of the State." Chitty on Cont., 664.

We are then of opinion, that there was no error in the court's refusing the instruction asked.

The second instruction asked was given in substance by the court, in the last charge, that a contract, the tendency of which was dangerous and injurious to commerce, was void as against public policy, nor is there any reason, that we can perceive, for granting a new trial.

The judgment will be affirmed with costs.

ROBERT MYERS, APPELLANT, VS. BENJAMIN F. NOURSE, ADMINISTRATOR OF O. C. RAYMOND, DECEASED, APPELLEE.

1. Ten years is not a reasonable time within which to perfect the title, after objections by purchaser, under a judicial sale by the master, of real estate.

2. Where time is given, the party should be put under terms to procure the title speedily.

3. The practice of allowing time to perfect title not encouraged; the court and parties should take care before hand that the title is in a state to be sold.

4. A material distinction exists between the actual existence of the title, and the state of the evidence of the title; in the latter event, the court may give time to reform and amend it.

5. A purchaser not permitted to cast about for a title, after a judicial sale; Lord Redesdale's rule in selling land under a decree of court commended.

Appeal from Franklin County Circuit Court.

Benjamin F. Nourse, administrator of Raymond, filed his bill in Chancery against A. K. Allison, and others, claiming that certain town lots in Apalachicola, conveyed by the Trustees of the Apalachicola Land Company to O. C. Raymond and said A. K. Allison, were held by them as tenants in common, and charging that said Allison mortgaged said lots to certain creditors of the firm of Raymond & Allison, for more than was really due, and prayed for a receiver, &c.

It appears that O. C. Raymond and A. K. Allison had been partners in trade, and as such, and for the use and benefit, and for the purposes of the partnership, had purchased the lots in question, and had erected a brick building or store thereon. After the death of Raymond, Allison, as surviving partner, mortgaged the lots, to secure the payment of $7000, alleged to be due the firm of Morgan & Barker, of New York, by Raymond & Allison. At Fall Term 1843, by consent of parties, a decree was entered cancelling the mortgage executed by Allison to Morgan & Barker, and ordering the said lots to be sold by Benjamin F. Nourse, receiver, after giving public notice of the time and place of sale, on terms of one fourth cash, and the remainder in six, twelve and eighteen months, with good joint and several notes for security, and no title to be given until said notes were paid. Nourse, as administrator, was to join in the sale, 518 and in making titles. Pursuant to this decree, the two town lots in question were offered at public sale, to the highest bidder, on the 22d day of March, 1844, and the same were purchased by Robert Myers, for $6,100. Of this amount, $1,525, being one fourth, were paid in cash, and Myers gave three notes, each for $1,525, payable respectively in six, twelve, and eighteen months after date. As a further security, the receiver required that Myers, the purchaser, should cause the property to be insured, for the sum of $4,000, and should regularly assign to him the policy of insurance.

On the 9th day of December, 1844, Robert Myers filed his petition in Franklin Circuit Court, alleging that D. B. Wood and N. J. Deblois who were partners, were jointly interested with him in the purchase of said lots, and that the sole object which they had in view in purchasing said lots and the buildings thereon, was the adaptation and conversion of said property, with other contiguous property belonging to them, into a cotton warehouse; that in case the title acquired by them should be defective, the purposes for which the purchase was made would be frustrated, and the lots would be of much less value to them. He further alleged that he had been advised by his counsel that the decree under which the sale was made was erroneous, and that the title acquired by said purchase was defective, and prayed the court to review its decree, and if it should appear that the sale made by Nourse under said decree, did not operate to convey a good title, that the said sale might be rescinded.

On reading the petition, and after argument of counsel, the court decreed, that the title obtained by Myers, under the sale made by the receiver, was not complete, because the judgment creditors of A. K. Allison, as surviving partner of Raymond & Allison, who obtained judgments prior to the rendition of the decree ordering the sale, on the lia- 519

bilities of the firm, and because the heir, or heirs, or distributees of O. C. Raymond, deceased, ought to have been made parties to said decree. But inasmuch as the court was of opinion that Nourse, administrator, &c., ought to have further and reasonable time to perfect said title, and remove all objections thereto, the prayer of the petition, so far as it related to the rescinding of the sale, was refused; and it was further ordered that Nourse should proceed, by proper steps, to bring in the creditors of Raymond & Allison, and the heir, or heirs, and distributees of O. C. Raymond, to test their claims, or the claim of any of them, to said lots, if any they have, or pretend to have, and to do such other matters and things as might thereafter appear to be necessary to render the title to Myers secure. It was at the same time ordered that Myers have the possession of said lots.

On the 20th March, 1845, Nourse filed his amended and supplemental bill, making the creditors of Raymond & Allison, and the infant heir of O. C. Raymond, parties thereto, in conformity to the previous order of the court. On the same day an order was made appointing A. G. Semmes guardian ad litem for the infant heir of Raymond, and ordering subpoenas to issue against such of the parties as were within the jurisdiction of the court, and publication to be made, as required by law, as to such of the parties as were non-residents; which was accordingly done.

On the 16th of April, 1846, Robert Myers made an affidavit in support of his application for a rescission of the purchase made by him, in which he alleged that since said purchase, D. B. Wood and N. J. Deblois, who were interested with him, became unable to comply with their part of the contract, and that he, Myers, was unable to carry out the same by himself, out of his own means; that the object in making said purchase, was to convert said prop- 520
erty, with the adjacent property, to the purposes of warehousing cotton, but from the losses of said Wood & Deblois, they were unable to carry out said intention, and that the property is of much less value to them for any other purpose. Myers further alleged that had he and his associates obtained a good title to said property at the time of the purchase, they could and would have since sold the same for the same price agreed to be paid for it by them, but were prevented from doing so by the cloud that hangs over the title.

On the 22d of April, 1846, an order was made, granting leave to complainant to amend his supplemental bill, by making A. K. Allison a defendant, who appeared by his solicitor and agreed to answer said bill in thirty days. It was at the same time further ordered that a decree pro confesso be entered against all the parties defendant, except the infant heir of O. C. Raymond, and that his guardian ad litem have thirty days to file an answer.

On the 25th April, 1847, Nourse filed his amendment to his supplemental bill, making A. K. Allison a defendant thereto.

On the 26th January, 1847, the answer of the infant heir of O. C. Raymond, by his guardian ad litem was filed.

On the 14th day of December, 1853, a motion was made, on behalf of Myers, to be discharged from the purchase aforesaid, because Nourse had not completed the title to said lots, and because the delay to do so had been unreasonable. In support of this motion, Myers, on the 15th day of December, 1853, filed an affidavit, in which he renews his application, upon the ground taken in his former applications, and also alleging that in 1847 the buildings upon the lots were destroyed by fire, and thereafter the lots were suffered to remain vacant, because he had no means to im-

521 prove them, and because, had he the means, the defect in the title discouraged him from so doing. He also alleges that he and his associates had not, since the filing of the first petition, been willing to take a title to said lots, but on the contrary, counsel had ever since been retained to oppose a confirmation of the sale.

On the 16th day of December, 1853, Nourse filed a statement by way of response to the petition of Myers, in which he sets forth the various orders and proceedings in the cause, and showing that from April Term 1847, to December Term 1853, the Judge who presided was disqualified to try the case. He also alleges that at December Term 1846, he could have pressed for a decree of confirmation, but as the amount of Insurance money claimed, viz: $4,000 was expected at once to accrue to the fund and thus obviate nearly all cause of dispute, it was thought by himself and counsel unnecessary and harsh towards Myers to press the motion at that time. He further states that by the fault of Myers or his associates in not keeping the policy of Insurance in the name of the receiver, great delay in collecting the money occurred. The policy of insurance was allowed to stand in the name of D. B. Wood & Co. After the fire which destroyed the buildings and before any formal claim could be sent by the Receiver, the creditors of D. B. Wood & Co., attached the money in the hands of the Insurers. A contest arose involving an expense to the fund, which did not end until January 1850, and then only by the withdrawal of the claim put in by the creditors of D. B. Wood & Co.

To this delay in getting the Insurance money and to the absence of a qualified Judge for every term since 1847, Nourse alleges, must be attributed the absence of action on his part.

522 Afterwards and at December term, 1853, the court refused the application of Myers for a discharge and directed the master to make a title to the lots, from which decree Myers appealed.

W. G. M. Davis, for appellant.

George S. Hawkins and Archer & Papy for appellees.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

In the year 1844, Robert Myers filed his petition, praying to be released from the purchase of two lots lying in Apalachicola, purchased by him at a sale made by a receiver or Master in Chancery under a decree of court, to which he insisted he got no title. The sale was made at the instance of Nourse, admr. de bonis non of O. C. Raymond, and the court on the hearing of the case adjudged "the title incomplete for want of the heirs of O. C. Raymond and the creditors of Raymond & Allison and gave farther and reasonable time to the plaintiff Nourse to perfect the title and remove all objections to the same." This decree was made in 1844 and from that time to 1853 the party had not complied, and it was only at the December Term of the latter year, the requisite steps and testimony were taken to obtain a decree making the title sufficient in the opinion of the court.

This tardy action can scarcely, in our opinion, be regarded as a compliance with the order allowing time. The plaintiff alleges, and has urged, that he used due diligence and every proper exertion. Admitting this, it shows very conclusively that a title requiring the labor of near ten years to complete, is not of a kind to be forced upon a purchaser. Surely such a period could not have been contemplated by the Chancellor when making the order. The bare suggestion of so long a time would have struck him with amazement, as unreasonable and unprecedented.

In an affidavit filed at a later period of the case, still ob- 523 jecting to the purchase, the purchaser states "that his object in buying the property, to-wit: the erection of a cotton warehouse, has been defeated by the erection of other buildings sufficient for the purposes of trade—that the partners associated with him have failed and that real property in Apalachicola has depreciated to an extent which prevents investment and makes it not desirable to him. The buildings erected upon it, too, have been burnt down, leaving only the naked ground, and that if he had obtained the title when he contracted for it, he could have sold the property so as to secure himself against loss."

These allegations, if true, show the great injury of delay, and the necessity for despatch and promptness in this, as the other affairs of life. They show conclusively, we think, that a reasonable time for such an object as that contemplated in the present case, any where, and especially in a commercial community, would by no means extend to the period claimed. But apart from this, the usual order in Chancery, "on a Report of the Master that the vendee will have a title is, to put under terms to procure that speedily." 2 Danl. Ch. Prac., 1415; Coffin vs. Cooper, Vesey, 205, and that we apprehend should have been the order in the present case.

But apart from this, we are of opinion that the attention of the Court should have been directed to the state of the title at the time the objections to it were first considered. A material distinction is this, (says the Chancellor, in Meginnis vs. Fallen,) which is to be remembered: the actual existence of title at the time of objecting, and the then state of the evidence of that title. If the title stands ultimately as from the first by the abstract, yet the evidence given of that title differs; if that be so, it is not altering the title, but adducing additional evidence, &c. The requiring additional evidence of title to be supplied by the vendor is consistent 524 with the rule of not keeping the purchaser too long in the suspense of investigation, and the question always is whether it is the same title as existed at first that is followed up, or whether the vendor has been put to cast about for a new title."

"Again, not what the title is now, but what it was when the master ruled his objections, was the state of title to be pronounced upon." 2 Mallory, 561. Tested by this rule, the order giving time to complete the title was improper, as then the administrator had no title and had nothing to sell. If suit had been instituted by him against the creditors and heirs, to settle and adjust the state of his intestate, O. C. Raymond, pay the debts, &c., and sell the real estate for this purpose—or if a like suit had been instituted against the surviving partner of the firm of Raymond & Allison, alleging mal-administration of their affairs, calling in the creditors and the heirs of Raymond, and in the course of the administration by the court, of the affairs of this concern, it become necessary to sell the real estate to pay debts, we are not prepared to say that a sale might not have been had on such a showing. But the case before us is not of this character. The bill and supplemental bill both allege that the property sold was individual property, and not that of the firm, and that on the death of Raymond it descended to his heirs. There is neither allegation nor proof that it was necessary to pay his debts. According to the bill, it does not appear that it was necessary to pay the debts of the firm, or that its assets had been exhausted. Surely, upon every principle, before resorting to the real estate of an individual deceased partner, the joint effects, assets and property of the partnership should be first disposed of. If sold for purposes of division, as intimated in the decree, it was wholly unwarranted, as the Myers vs. Raymond's Adm'r.—Opinion of Court.

525 administrator had nothing whatever to do with this. The suit was originally instituted with other parties, to avoid an illegal arrangement made in reference to a mortgage on the property, and on settling this with the party interested, the order for the sale of the property was made. It is insisted that plaintiff sold the interest of Raymond & Allison "only as far as he was legally authorized, as Master, to sell;" then, in our view, he was not authorized to sell at all. The decree, however, does not admit this interpretation, nor justify this addition. It recites "that the principal estate of Raymond & Allison consists in his houses and lots, to which all adverse claims are now released, and directs the property to be sold, and no title to be given until after payment of the last notes." It contains no direction to the master to sell "the interest so far as he was authorized," and if the result were to make a purchaser pay $6,000 without getting any title, and leave him subject to be dispossessed by the rightful owner, then we say that no such design can be attributed to the court; so far from it, the order made on discovering the state of the title shows, that they considered the purchaser entitled to a good title, and such a deduction the purchaser would be entitled to draw from the terms of the decree.

It is said again, that the purchaser was let into and continued in possession. This was in conformity to the sale and consistent with the order of the court overruling his objection to the title and giving further time to complete it. His retaining the possession was an appropriate respect to the order of the court, and should not be construed to his prejudice.

It is again urged that both parties should have been active in procuring the title. The decree directing the vendor "to proceed to bring the parties interested before the court, and to do such other matters and things as may be necessary 526 to render the title of said Myers to said property secure," is the best answer to this objection.

Again, that plaintiff was not guilty of laches. Of this we are by no means satisfied, and if we were, how is the case of the purchaser affected by it? If the vendor, with all due industry and exertion, cannot get the title, is the vendee to wait and to be held on until by extraordinary effort and exertion he can succeed? We think not. He bargained for the title; not getting it, he objected and complained to the court; they order him to wait a reasonable time; he waits until nearly ten years elapse, and still no title. If not the fault, it has been the misfortune of the vendor not to get it in due time; but surely this should not be visited upon his purchaser, who, during all this time, has been neither owner nor released from his bargain, not at liberty to sell nor improve, nor to invest his money in other property but liable to be called upon for the residue of the purchase money of $6,000, whenever the sale should be confirmed. We are of opinion, then, that this purchaser has a clear right to be relieved. Whilst on this subject it may not be amiss to state that the English Courts have a rule, introduced by Lord Redisdale, the great equity pleader and Judge, which is declared to be an excellent and salutary resolution, that "lands shall not be put up to sale and the parties embarrassed with a purchaser until a true state of the title, with the counsel's opinion thereon, be produced and title deeds deposited." 2 Sch. & Lef., 738. If the contract is regarded to be made by the purchaser, with the court, as some of the authorities hold, then indeed very great caution and care would seem to be requisite that nothing wrongful or injurious be done, and that the utmost good faith and propriety prevail; this is due to the court itself and to protect public interests from jeopardy. We do not hesitate to say that the practice of perfecting a title after a sale should not be encouraged. Besides inviting loose- 527 ness and irregularity on the part of the court and parties, it reverses the regular order of proceeding, by beginning where it should end, assuming jurisdiction, then striving to maintain it; selling property and then seeking to get the title to it. It is as if a workman should construct his edifice of frail materials in the hope of perfecting it by patchwork afterwards. In this respect we would discriminate between substantial objections, and those that do not enter into the intrinsic merits of a title.

In disposing of this matter finally, the court below will cause an account to be taken of matters proceeding from this relation of the parties, crediting Myers with the purchase money paid by him with interest, and charging him with such sums as he may have received, or may be justly chargeable with, on account of the purchase, whether of rents, and the like. The subject of expense in procuring the insurance, will be a proper subject of considearation, adverted to in this court, but we have not the means of determining it.

It is therefore decreed and ordered, that the decree of the Circuit Court ordering the sale of the two lots in Apalachicola at the instance of Nourse, administrator of Raymond, and the subsequent orders confirming said sale and the purchase thereof by Robert Myers, be set aside and reversed, and that he be relieved therefrom, and the cause remanded to the court below, that an account be had and taken between the parties, of the sums due and chargeable to each on account of the said sale, and for other proceedings to be had in conformity with this opinion and the principles of equity.

DECISIONS
OF THE
Supreme Court of Florida,
AT
EXTRA AUGUST TERM, 1854.
HELD AT TALLAHASSEE.

THOMAS ORMAN, ADMINISTRATOR OF SAMUEL SIMPSON, DECEASED, APPELLANT, VS. BARNARD, ADAMS & CO., APPELLEE.

1. It is the duty of the appellant or his Attorney or Solicitor, to see that the original record of a cause, about to be removed into the Supreme Court, is correctly made out and skillfully prepared.

2. It is a practice of doubtful utility and not to be encouraged, to permit in the Appellate Tribunal oral admissions to supply the defects and omissions in the record.

3. Where, in a defendant's answer, the "want of consideration" is formally set up, and is insisted upon in the argument, as a substantive defence, yet the court will look into the whole answer to determine whether the issue intended to be raised is one of fact or only an inference of law.

4. "Want of consideration," as a defence, must be so set up as not to present a double issue—in other words, it must simply negative a consideration; and anything beyond that, showing that the party defendant was only deceived or disappointed in that which he relied upon as a consideration, changes the defence from that of a "want," to "illegality" or "failure."

5. The case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, vs. Cole, (4 Fla. R. 377) so far as it makes the 24th Sec. of the Act of Nov. 23, 1828, regulating judicial proceedings, applicable to Courts of Equity—doubted.

Simpson's Adm'r. vs. Barnard, Adams & Co.—Statement of Case.

529 6. Only such matters of fact set forth in the answer of defendant as are clearly responsive to the allegation of the bill, will be considered as evidence in the cause. Matters of fact set up and insisted upon as a substantive defence, must be established by proof aliunde.

7. The general rule that "a well connected train of circumstances is as conclusive of the existence of a fact, as is the most direct and positive evidence," is as applicable to a Court of Equity as to a Court of Law. And so also is the other general rule, that "the best evidence the nature of the case admits of must always be produced."

8. But the former of these rules is not of universal application, and therefore reference ought always to be had to the nature of the fact to be proved; for there are some facts peculiarly susceptible of positive proof, whilst others, from their very nature can be established only by circumstances.

9. In the consideration of a fact which is peculiarly susceptible of positive and direct proof, the court will not be influenced by mere circumstances to adopt a conjectural conclusion, in regard to its existence.

Appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court from Franklin county.

This was a bill in Chancery instituted by Barnard, Adams & Co., against Thomas Orman, administrator of Samuel Simpson, deceased, for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The bill alleges, that on the 16th day of March, 1839, Samuel Simpson executed his bond, payable to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, on or before the expiration of five years, after date, for six thousand dollars, and that to secure the payment of the said bond, principal and interest, said Simpson, at the same time, executed a mortgage to said Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, on certain town property in the town of Apalachicola. The bill further alleges that the said bond and mortgage were afterwards regularly, and for a valuable consideration, assigned to said Barnard, Adams & Co. Copies of the bond and mortgage and of their assignment to complainants, were exhibited with the bill. The following receipt is endorsed on the bond, viz: "Received, January, 1840, two hundred and forty dollars in full for interest on this to date, it being in 530 full for dividend on sixty shares of Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company stock."

The answer sets forth that the said bond and mortgage were obtained from Simpson by the misrepresentation of the officers of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and alleges that it was represented to Simpson that the company had stock for sale, which stock was represented to be very valuable; that the company was in a very prosperous and flourishing condition, and that said stock would pay large and profitable dividends; whereas it is alleged in the answer that at the time these representations were made, the company was greatly embarrassed, and on the verge of bankruptcy.

The answer further alleges that the said bond and mortgage were given not for the consideration of $6,000 as in said bond stated, but for the consideration of a certificate purporting to entitle said Simpson to sixty shares of capital stock in said company; that the stock, at the time the certificate for the same was issued, was not nor has it been since, of any value, and that the said stock certificate was issued without authority of said charter, or any by-law passed in accordance with its provisions, but contrary to its express letter and spirit, by reason whereof the said Simpson, nor his heirs or representatives, could acquire no legal title to any interest in the capital stock of said company, as the defendants were advised and believe; that said bond and mortgage were fraudulently obtained from Simpson, and that they were given without consideration; that Barnard, Adams & Co. received the same after maturity, and as collateral security merely, and that the assignment thereof was without authority, and conveyed no right or title to complainants; that by the charter of the company, the said bond and mortgage were unassignable, but were to remain as a security for the ultimate payment of the liabilities of the Territory of Florida, assumed for 531 said company.

The following resolution of the Board of Directors of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, adopted 15th February, 1839, appears in the record, viz: "Resolved, That the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, having had a portion of their stock surrendered to them, in pursuance of an amendment to their charter, passed in February, 1838, are prepared to receive applications for their stock, at par, on the pledge of bonds and mortgages, upon approved, unincumbered real and personal estate, held in security in Florida, to the amount of one million dollars, at their office at Apalachicola."

There also appears in the record a copy of a circular issued by the company, dated May 13, 1838, informing the public that bonds and mortgages would be received in exchange for the stock of the company, to be issued at par, and inviting those who wished stock, to make early application to their agent at Tallahassee. This circular represented that the stock of the company was to draw dividends semi-annually, and that according to the dividends theretofore, the stock drew two per cent. per annum more than the mortgages drew interest to the company.

There also appears in the record a copy of an answer of George Field, President of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, filed in another cause, in which it is said that between three and four hundred thousand dollars of consolidated stock was distributed in Middle and West Florida, the stockholders becoming debtors to the Institution generally, both by bond and mortgage and by note, having become purchasers of stock, and received loans from the company.

The evidence of T. R. Betton, in the record, shows that Samuel Simpson was a stockholder in 1839, and held sixty 532 shares of stock. He states that the books of the company do not show any other consideration for the bond than what appears upon its face.

M. A. Long and John Erskine for Appellant.

James T. Archer and W. G. M. Davis for Appellee.

DuPONT, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

Preliminary to stating the grounds upon which we have decided this cause, it may not be amiss to remark upon the condition of the record, and to call to the special attention of the members of the bar the very unskillful manner in which it has been prepared, and consequently the great confusion which prevails in the presentation of the case to the mind of the court. The record does not, as it ought to do, give a history of the proceedings in the cause, but is for the most part only a copy of the files. In no part of the record is it stated what proofs were read at the hearing, but we find only copies of exhibits, depositions and other documents, without any statement going to show whether or not they, or any of them, were read at the hearing, and if read, whether with or without exception. This, in an equity cause especially, where all of the proofs are required to be reduced to writing, and where we have not, as in a court of common law, the benefit of the bill of exceptions, whose office it is to set forth the evidence adduced at the trial, is certainly very irregular and well calculated to produce confusion and uncertainty, and possibly injustice to parties litigant. A corrective ought to be applied, and we know of none more efficient than the personal superintendence of the solicitor of the appellant, whose duty it is to see that a correct and perfect record of the proceedings in the cause is made out for the inspection and information of the appellate Tribunal. In the frequent changes and constant rotation which are continually going on under the operation of our Republican organization, it is perhaps presuming too much to expect of the clerks of our courts that professional knowledge and scientific skill which is to be met with amongst the offices of the English Courts, or even of the courts of the older States. But in making this remark, we would not by any means be understood to offer an apology for, or extenuate, either the negligence, ignorance or unskilfulness of this class of officers; for there is an implied promise on the part of every man, who either solicits or accepts office, that he either is, or will speedily qualify himself for the efficient discharge of his duties.

This particular record does not present an isolated case, for we are constrained to remark that it is but a sample of the larger portion of those which are of file in this court. But, to apply the foregoing remarks to the record under consideration, it is very manifest (if the strict rule of Chancery practice were adhered to,) that the cause would be before us without any proofs; and in order to rescue it from this category, we have been constrained to resort to the oral admission of the counsel on either side—a practice of extremely doubtful utility, and not to be encouraged. The admission to which we refer and which, we understood to have been made at the Bar, was to the effect that the court should consider everything contained in the record, partaking of the character of, and purporting to be evidence, as having been read at the hearing without exception, giving to each item of evidence such weight as its relevancy might entitle it to. It is upon this basis that we have considered the matters of evidence which have led our minds to the conclusion at which we have arrived in the final determination of this case.

The bill was filed by Barnard, Adams & Co., (the appellees,) as the assignees of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, for the foreclosure of a mortgage, which it is therein alleged was executed and delivered to the said Company by Samuel Simpson, the intestate of respondent. The mortgage was given to secure the payment of a bond purporting to have been executed by the said Simpson, for the payment of $6,000, and conditioned to be void upon the full payment of the said sum of money, on or before the expiration of five years from the date thereof. The date of both the bond and mortgage is the sixteenth day of March, A. D. 1839. There is nothing on the face of the bond which indicates the particular "consideration" for which it was given. It purports to be an ordinary obligation to secure the payment of money, and is in the usual form; nor is there any allegation in the bill in reference to the "consideration." The answer alleges that Simpson "was induced to make the bond and mortgage, not for the consideration of six thousand dollars, as in said bond stated, but for the consideration of a certificate purporting to entitle said Simpson to sixty shares of capital stock in said Institution;" and then going into a detailed history of the transaction, alleges that the purchase of the stock by Simpson was induced by the false and fraudulent misrepresentations of the authorized agents of the said company. There is also contained in the answer the former allegation that the "bond and mortgage were fraudulently obtained from the said Simpson, and were given without consideration;" but this allegation is coupled with the further statement that they were given for the purchase of a "stock certificate."

The defence set up against the prayer for a foreclosure, has been considered by the counsel who argued the case for the respondent, under four distinct and independent heads, each of which, it was argued and insisted, appeared in the answer, and presented a substantive matter of defence. The several grounds, as alleged, were as follows, viz: 1st. That the bond and mortgage sued upon were given to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company without any consideration; 2d. "Illegality of consideration," in this that the bond and mortgage were given for a pretended sale of shares in the capital stock of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company; 3d. That the bond and mortgage were given to the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company upon the false and fraudulent misrepresentations of the authorized and accredited agent of the said company, in regard to the solvency and prosperous condition of the affairs of the company, and in regard to the value of its stock; 4th. That the assignment of the bond and mortgage is void, and vests no interest in the assignee, as being in contravention of the inhibition contained in the 6th section of the charter of incorporation, which prohibits the assignment of such bonds and mortgages as should be given to secure the repayment of loans which might be made out of the cash capital of the company. These are the several grounds of defence, as they were considered by the counsel in argument. It now becomes our duty, in limine, to ascertain whether or not they legitimately arise in the consideration of the case.

In order to ascertain the issues upon which the parties contest their respective rights, in any particular case, in a Court of Equity, it is the duty of the court to have reference as well to the allegations of the bill as to the matters of fact contained in the answer or plea; and upon this data, and this alone, can they proceed to adjudicate those rights. A party may, in good faith and with perfect sincerity, insist in argument upon a particular ground of defence, which, upon an examination of the whole answer, turns out to be merely an inference of law, deducible from the matters of fact therein stated. Of this character are we constrained to consider the first ground of defense argued by the counsel, viz: The "want of consideration." As a foundation for his argument, the counsel for respondent referred to that part of the answer in which the following language is used, viz: "For further answer, these defendants say that said bond and mortgage were fraudulently obtained from said Simpson, and were given without consideration, and that the said stock certificate was issued without authority of said charter, or any by-law passed in accordance with its provisions, but contrary to its express letter and spirit, by reason whereof the said Simpson, nor his heirs or representatives, could acquire no legal title to any interest in the capital stock of said company, as these defendants are advised and believe." This is the only portion of the answer which contains the formal allegation that the bond and mortgage were given "without consideration," and in the connection in which the allegation is found, it can scarcely be seriously contended that it amounts to anything more than an inference of law, deducible from the accompanying statement of facts. It is very clear that the existence or non-existence of a consideration, is made to depend upon the result of the question, whether the "stock certificate" mentioned, (assuming that to have been the real consideration for the giving of the bond and mortgage,) was lawfully issued; and hence it will be really perceived that the question involved in this ground of defence, is one of law, and not of fact. Indeed, we would charitably hope that such was the view taken of this matter by the defendant, at the time that he solemnly swore to the facts set forth in his answer, for we can scarcely suppose hat he intended to be understood as swearing in one breath to the fact that there was no consideration, and in the next that there was a consideration. By the common law, a defendant was not permit-

537 ted, (except perhaps under very special circumstances,) to file contradictory pleas; and certainly much less will it be tolerated in a Court of Equity that a defendant should be permitted to set up in the same answer contradictory facts as a matter of substantive defense. It would be to encourage perjury in its worst and most dangerous form. This defence, when made at common law, is always the subject of a special plea, and it must be so pleaded as not to present a double issue. In other words, it must contain simply the negation of a consideration, and anything beyond that, showing that the party defendant was only deceived or disappointed in the value of that which he relied upon as a consideration, changes the character of the plea from that of a "want," to illegality or failure of consideration. We are, then, fully of opinion that the first ground of defence assumed in the argument, does not arise out of the pleadings, and therefore no argument made on that head can have any influence in determining the rights of the parties. The importance to the defendant of establishing this first head as a substantive ground of defence, grew out of the presumed advantage which it might give him in changing the onus of proof, under the operation of the 24th section of the act of November 23, A. D. 1828, regulating judicial proceedings, (Thomp. Dig., 331, chap. 2, sec. 1, art. 4,) and which, although evidently intended for the government of courts of law, seems, in the opinion delivered in the case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. Cole, (4 Florida Rep., 377,) to have been thought to be likewise applicable, by analogy, to Courts of Equity. As to what may be the authority of that case upon the point, it is unnecessary for us to consider in this investigation. We are disposed to dismiss it with the simple remark, that whenever the question may be fairly and fully presented how far a Court of Equity is permitted or 538 bound to adopt in its practice statutes affecting simply the remedy, and professedly enacted for the regulation of courts of law, it will receive that calm and deliberate consideration which its importance may demand.

Having thus disposed of the first head, we now address ourselves to the three remaining ones, viz: "Illegality of consideration," "fraudulent representations," and the "invalidity of the assignment."

Our first inquiry will be to ascertain, from the evidence and proofs in the cause, whether any other consideration than that appearing on the face of the bond has been established. In the prosecution of this inquiry, we first refer to the bill, and from that reference we ascertain that there is no allegation touching the consideration, and consequently no interrogatory addressed to the defendant in reference thereto. All, therefore, that appears in the answer of the defendant touching the consideration, must be taken to be new and substantive matter, pleaded by way of avoidance, and consequently must be proved aliunde; for it is a well established principle of equity practice that only such matters of fact set forth in the answer of the defendant as are clearly responsive to the allegations of the bill, will be considered as evidence in the cause. Matters of fact set up and insisted upon as a substantive defence, and being not responsive to the bill, will be required to be established by proof aliunde.

This is a principle of equity practice, too universally recognized to require the citation of any authority for its support. Proceeding then upon this doctrine in our examination of the various matters set forth in the answer, we are constrained to say that the allegations contained in the answer, in reference to the consideration for which the bond and mortgage were given, afford no evidence of the facts alleged. We are next thrown upon the proofs which were adduced at the final hearing of the cause, and after a 539 strict and scrutinizing examination of the record, we are equally at a loss to discover even the semblance of any direct or positive evidence upon the subject, going to show a consideration for the giving of the bond and mortgage variant from that which their face import. The bond purports to be a simple money bond, and the deed of mortgage is of the usual form, containing no extraordinary or unusual covenants.

The counsel for the respondent, however, have argued with great ingenuity and zeal that there is contained in the record a body "of circumstantial evidence," which as conclusively supports the allegations in the answer, as would the production of the most direct and positive evidence. We readily recognize the position as a sound one, when invoked as a general rule, that in equity as well as at law "a well connected train of circumstances, is as conclusive of the existence of a fact, as is the greatest array of positive evidence." But of equal authority and of no less applicability, is that other familiar rule of evidence, viz: that "the best evidence the nature of the case will admit of, must always be adduced." These are but general rules, and the former especially is not of universal application, for there are some matters of fact peculiarly susceptible of positive proof, whilst there are others which from their very nature, and from the secrecy which invariably attend them, can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In the application of the rule, it therefore becomes the part of wisdom always to have reference to the nature of the subject.

Now the subject under consideration in this investigation is, the true consideration for which an obligation, purporting to be an ordinary money bond, had been executed and is, in our opinion amongst that class of subjects pecu- 540 liarly susceptible of direct and positive proof.

Moreover the bond and mortgage before us are each attested by two witnesses, who may be presumed to have been cognizant of the matter in issue, and might have been required to testify on the subject had suitable efforts been made to obtain their testimony.

It may be that the witnesses are all dead or beyond the reach of the process of the court. But if such be the fact, there is no proof in the record of its existence, which if proved, would, according to all the well recognized principles regulating the admissibility of evidence, have opened a door for the introduction of the circumstantial evidence relied upon in the argument of counsel. In addition to the result of our own examination of the record, it was frankly admitted by the counsel that there was no positive proof upon the subject of the consideration of the bond, and hence they had to rely exclusively upon the weight of circumstances, to establish the several defences set forth in the answer of the defendant. These circumstances, as we find them detailed in the brief which has been furnished us, and which were relied upon as tending to prove that the consideration for which the bond and mortgage had been given by the defendant's intestate Simpson, was a purchase of shares in the capital stock of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company are as follows, viz:

1. The fact that no other consideration (than what appears on the face of the bond) appears from the books of the bank or was known to its President or Cashier.

2. Copy of a resolution of the Board of Directors shortly prior to the date of the bond and mortgage, empowering Samuel L. Burritt to sell certain stock which had been surrendered, for bonds and mortgages.

3. Copy of a circular issued about the same time, by the bank urging the people of Middle and West Florida to take stock on those terms. 541

4. That it is stated by George Field, in his evidence in the record, that stock was sold to divers persons for bonds and mortgages, but he says nothing of such a sale of stock to Mr. Simpson.

5. The inability of the bank to loan the money.

6. The indorsement of a dividend declared in his favor as a credit upon the bond.

7. The correspondence between the amount of the bond and the amount of the stock.

We have carefully considered, severally as well as collectively, the circumstances before enumerated. But after the maturest deliberation and with an anxious desire to accord to them all the weight to which they might be legitimately entitled, we are constrained to say, they have failed to produce in our minds that conviction which it is the legitimate office of evidence to effect. There is not that conclusiveness—that conviction growing out of a well connected train of circumstances, which will authorize us to say that, from the evidence in the record, the consideration of the bond is other than what it purports to have been. In a matter susceptible of proof, a court must not conjecture. This being the conclusion at which we have arrived, it results as a necessary consequence that neither of the three remaining heads of defence arise for our consideration, dependent as each of them is, upon the allegation in the answer, that the bond and mortgage were given for a purchase of shares in the capital stock of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company.

We are not disposed, nor indeed would it comport with judicial propriety, unnecessarily to undertake to discuss the very grave and important questions decided by this court in the case of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. Lanier. Whenever any of those 542 questions may properly present themselves, we doubt not but that they will receive from the court, that patient, impartial, and independent examination, which their paramount importance may demand.

We have carefully examined the record in this cause, and failing to discover any error in the proceedings had in the court below, it is our judgment that the decree be affirmed with costs.

ROBERT A. YOUNG, ADMINISTRATOR DE BONIS NON, WITH WILL ANNEXED, OF ANDREW YOUNG, APPELLANT, VS. HENRY MCKINNIE, ADMINISTRATOR OF RICHARD MCKINNIE, APPELLEE.

1. Testator devised as follows:—"It is my will and desire that my property, including lands, tenements, negroes, horses, and stock of every kind, and everything of value that I may die seized and possessed of, shall be equally divided between my wife E, my daughter E. W., and my son R." Held, That this clause of the will conveys a present gift to the legatees, and is not controlled by the next clause, in which the testator says:—"It is my will and desire that all my property be kept together, for the use and benefit of my said wife and children, unless my wife should marry, or my children become of age, in which event, or events, I wish the property divided as above:" the sole effect of this latter clause being merely to postpone the division.

2. Held, also That upon the death of the daughter, E. W., under age, unmarried, and without issue, her brother, R., became, by the laws of Florida, her sole heir; and that upon the death of the mother, E., leaving a second husband and her son R. surviving, that R. became sole heir to the whole real estate of the testator.

3. It is a general rule that a legacy shall be taken to vest at the death of the testator, unless manifestly against the intention of the will.

4. When a testator directs the whole of his property to be kept together, for the use and benefit of his wife and children until the happening of certain events, making no other provision for their support and maintenance, such circumstances are indicative of an intention on the part of the testator to give the principal, and will have the effect to vest the legacy. 543

5. A devise in the following words: "Also, I direct that all the property, real or personal, that I obtained from the estate of B. M., deceased, be returned to R. M., minor heir of said B. M., or such portion thereof as I may have in my possession," is specific and is not liable to abatement for the benefit of the residuary legatees. Held, also, That under this clause of the will, only such property as had been received by testator, and remained in specie in his possession at the time of his death, passed to the legatee, and that slaves, the after issue of those received from the estate of B. M., were not included in the bequest.

6. The decree of a court directing the sale of real estate, for the purpose of division between an infant and others, to which the infant was not made a party, is not conclusive upon the infant, so far as such decree undertakes to pronounce upon the extent of his interest; but if he take, under the sales made in pursuance thereof, he may be estopped from saying that the sales are void; for by receiving so much of the proceeds as properly belong to him, he affirms the sale, but is not estopped from contesting the other portion of the decree.

7. The intention of the testator to dispose of property not his own, thereby imposing upon the legatee the obligation to elect, must be expressed or clearly implied in the will itself Parol evidence cannot be received to establish it.

8. In stating an account against an administrator, under the laws of the State, annual rests are to be made, and interest charged on the balance found due at the period of each rest.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson county.

The original bill was filed by Richard McKinnie, by his next friend, Henry McKinnie, and on his death the cause was revived by said Henry McKinnie, as his administrator.

The facts as they appear from the bill, answer, depositions, &c., are as follows.

Barney McKinnie, father of Richard McKinnie, died in the fall of 1833, leaving a will as follows:

* * * * "To wit, Imprimis. It is my will and desire that my property, including lands, tenements, negroes, horses and stock of every kind, and everything of value that I may die seized and possessed of, shall be equally di- 544 vided between my wife Elizabeth McKinnie, my daughter Elizabeth Washington, and my son Richard: It is further my will and desire, that all my property be kept together for the use and benefit of my said wife and children, unless my said wife should marry, or the children become of age, in which event or events, I wish the property divided as above: I hereby appoint my friend and relative, Bennett Ferril, my executor, and my wife Elizabeth, executrix, of this my last will and testament."

Shortly after the death of the testator, Elizabeth Washington, being an infant, died intestate. Neither of the persons appointed to execute the will ever qualified or acted under it. After the death of Elizabeth Washington, Mrs. McKinnie intermarried with Andrew Young, appellant's testator; and on the 20th November, 1834, the said Andrew Young was appointed administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Barney McKinnie.

On the 12th January, 1835, an order was made by the County Court of Jackson county, on the ex parte petition of Andrew Young, for the division of the McKinnie estate between Richard McKinnie and Andrew Young, in right of his wife Elizabeth. The commissioners appointed under the order dividing the negroes between the parties in equal moities and recommended a sale of the perishable property, consisting of stock, cotton, corn, &c., and the land, S. E. ¼ Sec. 29, T. 6, R. 11, N. and W., in order that a division of the proceeds might be made. One half of the negroes valued at $3,100 was assigned to Richard McKinnie, and thereafter held and hired out by Andrew Young as the property of said Richard; and the other half was assigned to Andrew Young, in right of his wife, who thereafter held and possessed them as in his own right.

In the year 1837, Mrs. Young, formerly Mrs. McKinnie, Young's Adm'r., vs. McKinnie's Adm'r.—Statement of Case.

545 departed this life, leaving Richard McKinnie her sole surviving child.

On the 9th February, 1835, Andrew Young, as administrator, sold all the personalty of the McKinnie estate other than the slaves. On the 29th January, 1840, Andrew Young believing himself entitled to one-half the realty, filed a petition ex parte in the County Court, praying a sale thereof for the purpose of effecting a division between himself and Richard McKinnie, in which he recites and relies on the recommendation of the Commissioners, appointed under the order of 12th January, 1835, and on the 4th February, 1840, a decree was made by the County Court pursuant to the prayer of the petition. On the 5th February, 1840, the land was sold and purchased by Benjamin Wynn for $1,944.

From the date of the decree of the County Court, January 12th, 1835, up to his death, Andrew Young regarded and treated one-half of the McKinnie estate as his.

On the 2d April, 1841, Andrew Young died, leaving a will as follows:

* * * * "First—I direct that all my debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon after my decease as possible, out of the first monies that shall come into the hands of my executors out of any portion of my estate, real or personal. Also I direct that all the property, real or personal that I obtained from the estate of Barney McKinnie, deceased, be returned to Richard McKinnie, minor heir of said Barney McKinnie, deceased,—or such portion thereof as I now have in my possession: Also I direct that the remainder of my property, which I have accumulated be brought to an equal division among my legal heirs; therefore to accomplish that end I direct that a fair valuation or appraisement be made by three judicious persons, appointed for that purpose, of all my said estate, including my 546 household furniture, and other property real or personal, and after being signed with their names that a copy of the same shall be given by them to each of my executors; and I direct that all that portion of property which I have bequeathed to my legal heirs, real or personal be disposed of as the law directs, in such cases made and provided. And I do hereby ordain my neighbor, John Brett, Jr., executor of this my last will and testament."

At the date of his will and death, he had no property in his possession which he had obtained from the McKinnie estate, in right of his wife, except the negroes assigned him on the division, under the decree of the county court.

The negroes assigned to Richard McKinnie upon the division were delivered to his guardian, the said Henry McKinnie, by Brett, Executor of Young, on the 1st January, 1843; and those assigned to Young, were delivered to Richard McKinnie's guardian, on the first January, 1848, as his legacy under Young's will. The value of the negroes, both sets, at Young's death, was $8,475. The hires of all the negroes have been received by said Richard, his guardian, or administrator, since Young's death.

From the date of Young's marriage to his death, Richard was supported by him.

Between the division under the decree of the county court, and Young's death, two negroes, Tom and Amanda, were born of a negro woman assigned to him on said division and were delivered by John Brett, Executor of Young, to Richard's guardian as a portion of his legacy under Young's will.

The bill insists that complainant is entitled to two-thirds of the personal estate of his father, B. McKinnie—one-third as a legatee, and the other one-third as distributee of his sister, Elizabeth Washington; and the whole of the land, as devisee under his father's will, and heir of his mother and sister: Prays that the decrees of the County Court 547 may be declared null and void; a new division of the estate made, and that appellant be decreed to account, &c.

The answer insists that complainant was entitled to only one-half of the personal estate of B. McKinnie; that under the will Elizabeth Washington's interest was contingent, and on her death, before the marriage of the widow, fell into the residue of the estate for the benefit of the other legatees. That complainant should not be permitted to enforce his rights under his father's will, and as heir of his sister and mother—as to the realty—and yet take his legacy under Young's will; and that if he renounces his legacy under Young's will, he must account for the value of Young's interest in the slaves received by him, as well as their hires. That complainant should account for the value and hires of the two negroes, Tom and Amanda, on the ground that they did not pass by the legacy in Young's will. That the property received by complainant under Young's will should be equally liable for the debts due by Young's estate, as that bequeathed to the "legal heirs." And that complainant is liable to Young's estate for maintenance, &c.

Decree of Circuit Court, November Term, 1853:

1. That the legatees under McKinnie's will took vested legacies and contingent interests in the realty; that on the death of Elizabeth Washington, R. M. McKinnie, as her sole distributee, was entitled to her share of the personal estate; and that her interest in the land sunk into the estate for the benefit of the other divisees.

2. That on the death of Mrs. Young, her interest in the land descended to Richard as her sole heir.

3. That Richard was not bound to elect between his rights as set forth in the bill, and his legacy under Young's will.

4. That he took his legacy without liability to contribute 548 to Young's debts.

5. That negroes, Tom and Amanda, passed under Young's bequest.

6. Decrees of County Court declared null and void.

7. General account ordered: "and that the master take an account of all the property real and personal that said Andrew Young was entitled to, or had received, or had in possession in right of his wife, from said estate of said Barney McKinnie."

R. L. Campbell & G. S. Hawkins, for Appellant.

J. H. DuPont and Archer & Papy for Appellee.

DOUGLAS, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case was brought up by appeal from the Circuit Court of Jackson County, taken pursuant to the provision of the 3d section of the act of the last session of our General Assembly, (see Pamphlet Laws, 101,) and the first question presented for our consideration, is whether the legacy to Elizabeth Washington McKinnie, under the will of Barney McKinnie, was as to the personalty a vested legacy; and we think it was, and that at her death it passed to Richard McKinnie, as her sole heir and distributee. The words of the will are: "It is my will and desire that my property, including lands, tenements, negroes, horses, and stock of every kind, and everything of value that I may die seized and possessed of, shall be equally divided between my wife, Elizabeth McKinnie, my daughter, Elizabeth Washington, and my son Richard." This clause, standing alone and by itself, it is admitted by the learned counsel who argued the cause for the appellant, imports a present gift; but they contended, with great zeal and ability, that it is controlled by the next clause, in which the

Young's Adm'r., vs. McKinnie's Adm'r.—Opinion of Court.

549 testator says: "It is further my will and desire that all my property be kept together, for the use and benefit of my said wife and children, unless my wife should marry, or my children become of age, in which event, or events, I wish the property divided as above," and that no interest vested until one of these events occurred; but to this view of the matter we cannot assent. It renders the first clause entirely nugatory, although, so far as the division is concerned, entirely consistent with it. The first clause amply provides for the division. The words in the second, "in which event, or events, I wish the property divided as above," strike us as redundant, the sole effect of this second clause being, as we think, merely to postpone the division, because the testator believed it would be more beneficial to his wife and children to have the property kept together; and it is worthy of observation that he gives them at once the whole income of the estate—all the use and benefit of it. He does not provide for a future division of the income amongst them, or make any other provision for their maintenance, or for the education of his children, or use the terms of strict condition upon which Ch. Justice Ruffin, in Anderson vs. Felton et al., Battle N. C. Rep., 58, cited by the learned counsel, laid so much stress. It is a general rule that a legacy shall be taken to vest at the death of the testator, unless manifestly against the intention of the will. 1 Roper on Legacies, (2d American from 4th London Ed.,) 555, 556. The cases, too, of Gaskell vs. Harmon, 6 Ves., 159; Stuart vs. Bruere, (in note;) Faulkner vs. Hollingsworth, 8 Ves., 558; Entwistle vs. Markland, and Stilwell vs. Barnard, also cited in 6 Ves., 528, (in note,) very strongly sustain this position. In Packham vs. Gregory, 4 Hare, 396, cited by Roper to this point, residuary personal estate was bequeathed to trustees, upon trust, to sell, get in and invest it, and pay the interest to the 550 testator's wife during her widowhood, and upon her death, to pay and divide the whole of the trust fund into and equally amongst all and every of the testator's nephews and nieces, share and share alike, within six months after they became entitled thereto. Sir James Wigram, V. C., held that the representatives of one of the nephews, who died in the life time of the tenant for life, were entitled to his share, vested on the death of the testator. In remarking upon the words "pay and divide," his Honor referred to his decision in Leeming vs. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 34, in which he had carefully considered the effect of those words, and observed that the authorities confirmed his view, that there was no magic in the words pay and divide. Even though there be no other gift than in the direction to pay or distribute in futuro, yet if such payment or distribution appear to be postponed, for the convenience of the fund or property, the vesting will not be deferred until the period in question. 1 Jarman on Wills, 763; 1 Roper on Vested Legacies, 557, 558. In the case before us, the time of division is postponed expressly for the use and benefit of the wife and children of the testator, and the intention is clear that they should immediately have all the use and benefit, all the rents and profits. The postponement of the division is of his whole estate, and he makes no other provision for the support of his wife and children, or the education of the children, as before stated, except this use and benefit, and it cannot be supposed that he intended to leave them penniless. If this view of the case be correct, then this bequest falls within the principle of that large class of cases where giving the interest on stock or money bequeathed, vests the stock or capital immediately on the death of the testator, although, by the words of the will, the enjoyment of such stock or principal is postponed to a future period; and it has in many cases been held that a legacy, to be paid when the legatee attains his majority is 551 vested, though contingent. See Dawson vs. Killett, 1 Brown's C. C., (Perkins' Ed.,) 123, note A.; Barnes vs. Allen, Ib., 182, note B.; Carbin vs. Mead 2 Ashmead, 178.

Richard McKinnie was therefore entitled to all the real estate of which Barney McKinnie died seized and possessed, one third in his own right, one third as heir of his sister, Elizabeth Washington, who died soon after her father, and one third as heir of his mother, who died in 1837. He was also entitled to two thirds of all the personal property left by Barney McKinnie; one third in his own right, and one third as heir and distributee of his said sister. Andrew Young took one third only of the personal property in right of his wife, the widow of Barney McKinnie; and so much of this one-third as he had in his possession, he by his last will and testament, directed to be returned to Richard McKinnie. By the first clause, he directed that all his debts and funeral expenses should be paid as soon after his decease as possible, out of the first moneys that should come into the hands of his executors, out of any portion of his estate, real or personal. The second clause is as follows, viz: "Also, I direct that all the property, real or personal, that I obtained from the estate of Barney McKinnie, deceased, be returned to Richard McKinnie, minor heir of Barney McKinnie, deceased, or such portion thereof as I now have in my possession." He had previously sold all the real estate, and all the personal property except the negroes. These were in his possession at the date of his will and at the time of his death, and one third of these, which he had received in right of his wife, is, we think, all that he by his will bequeathed to Richard McKinnie. It appears from evidence in the record, (evidence dehors the will,) that Mr. Young supposed that he was entitled, in right of his wife, to one half of all the property, real and personal, of the estate 552 of Barney McKinnie, deceased, and it has therefore been contended that this raises a case not strictly of election, but in the nature of election,—a quasi election on the part of Richard McKinnie; but it is difficult to perceive how the doctrine of election could be applied to such a case. It is, however, a sufficient answer to this position to say that there is nothing upon the face of the will of Young which seems to indicate even in the remotest degree an intention on his part to bequeath anything that was not his own. His intention clearly was that all the property that he had received of the estate of Barney McKinnie, and was then in his possession (in specie,) should be returned to Richard McKinnie, and that the remainder of his property, which he had accumulated, should be brought into an equal division among his legal heirs, and were we allowed to speculate upon the matter, we see no reason to suppose that he would have made any other provision, if this alleged misapprehension had not existed; but we are not permitted thus to speculate. 2 Story's Eq., page 486, sec. 1093, and authorities there cited. In Stratton vs. Best, 1 Ves., 285, Lord Chancellor Thurlow said: "All the argument in Noys vs. Mordaunt, (2 Vern., 581,) and the whole suit of cases, have turned upon the expression in the will. If I were to receive the evidence of the testator's fancy, it would introduce a very desperate rule of property in this court." In order to impose upon a party claiming under a will the obligation of making an election, the intention of the testator must be expressed or clearly implied in the will itself. Roper on Legacies, (2d American from the 4th London Ed.,) 1582 to 1586; 3 Bac. Abr., (Ed. by Bouvier, 1848,) 316, and authorities there cited; Judd vs. Pratt, 13 Ves., 174, confirmed on appeal, 15 Ves. 390; 1 Jarman,

Young's Adm'r., vs. McKinnie's Adm'r.—Opinion of Court.

553 on Wills, 391, 392, (and authorities there cited,) 1 Amer. Ed.

Again, it has been insisted by the counsel of the appellant that "Young's bequest to Richard McKinnie is so connected with the decrees of the County Court, that if he takes under the will, he takes under the decrees, and hence he is estopped, until he renounces his legacy, from alleging that the decrees are void." However this may be, he is not, we think, estopped from saying that they are erroneous, at least so far as they undertook to pronounce upon the extent of his interest; but if he takes under the sales made pursuant to the order of the County Court, he may be estopped from saying that the sales are void, because the County Court had no power to make the orders under which the sales took place. By receiving so much of the proceeds of the sales as properly belong to him, he affirms the sales; but we do not perceive how by this he affirms anything more or is prevented from contesting that portion of the decrees of the County Court which declared that Young was entitled to one-half of all the property. Such decrees may be good in part and void in part.

It is further insisted on behalf of the appellant that if Richard McKinnie takes under the will of Young he must take cum onere; that is, that "the portion given to McKinnie must contribute to the payment of the debts; not only the portion that actually passed, but what he intended should pass." We do not think that such was the intention of the testator, or that it is the legal import of the will, and the surrounding circumstances negative the idea. The direction is: that all his debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon as possible after his decease, out of the first monies that shall come into the hands of his executors, out of any portion of his estate, real or personal. The natural presumption resulting from this provision is, that he meant 554 such as would naturally first come into the hands of his executors, and from the proofs in the case, it would appear that there was a large amount of the monies which resulted from the sale of the McKinnie estate, in the hands of Young at the time of his death. This would be the first to come into the hands of his executors, and next such as would be received upon a sale of the perishable property of his own estate, or from debts due his estate. But aside from this, the bequest to Richard McKinnie was specific. The remainder was to be equally divided amongst the legal heirs of the testator—it goes just where it would have gone, if nothing had been said in the will about it; and in such a case the law casts the payment of the debts first upon such remainder. 1 Roper on Legacies, 2d Amer., from 4th London Ed., 191, 192, 356 to 363; 2 Williams on Executors, 972, 973.

The appellant also complains of that portion of the decree of the court below which requires the master in stating his account, to "make annual rests, charging legal interest on the balance found due at the period of each rest." Our statute, Thompson Digest, page 207, Sec. 9, No. 1, declares that "it shall be the duty of executors, administrators and guardians, annually at the first term (of the Probate Court), to render a full and correct report of the receipts and expenditures of all estates of which they may severally have the control." No. 2, same page provides, "that executors, administrators, and guardians, may, by leave of the court, retain in their possession the money of any minor, paying for the same lawful interest, or shall, under the direction of the court, put out the money of the minor at interest, upon such mortgage security as said court shall allow, &c., &c: Provided, That the day of payment of the money so put out at interest, at any time, shall not exceed one year from the date of the obligation or other security given for the same, and also 555 at the end of each year, the interest due, if not paid, be made principal and a new bond or obligation taken, and when the executor, administrator or guardian, retains the money on interest himself, the same rule shall be observed, the interest being added to the principal annually, but executors, administrators, and guardians, shall not be liable to pay interest, except on the surplus of the estate of the deceased remaining in their hands, and unemployed as aforesaid, after the settlement of their accounts." Duval's Compilation, 177.

That portion of the decree complained of in relation to this matter, was doubtless intended by the learned Judge who made it, to meet this peculiar provision of the statute, to which of course, we are bound to adhere: but without such a statute, we should have doubted the propriety in a case like this, of applying so stringent a rule.

The general rule of the courts is not to allow compound interest. Hoffman's Master in Chy., 109. "There may (he says, page 104,) be a case of such gross violation, in an executor, of duty imposed upon him by the will, as to lead the court to allow compound interest; but it is singular, that in the whole range of English decisions upon the unwarrantable conduct of executors, in all varieties, there is but a solitary case giving compound interest, and that placed by the court upon the peculiarity of the trust."

In this country, cases can be found where compound interest has been given, but they are generally if not universally founded upon some peculiar cause, and the general rule deducible from the cases here, is believed to be the same as in England. In the case of the State of Connecticut, vs. Jackson, 1 John. Chy. Rep. 14, the Chancellor says, "Except in some special cases, interest upon interest is not allowed, and the uniform course of decision is against it, as being a hard and oppressive exaction, tend- 556 ing to usury." In Black vs. Blakely, 2 McCord's Chy. Rep., 9, 10, this case was cited and approved, and Mr. Justice Nott, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "I have never known it (compound interest), allowed on a mere neglect to pay over money." In Teague vs. Dendy, Ibidem, 207, it is said that an administrator will be charged with interest only upon the annual balances retained in his hands; and in Darrell vs. Eden, 3 De Saussure, 241, that an executor who has unnecessarily kept money of an estate in his hands, which might have been rendered productive, will be charged with interest on the annual balances. It will occur, in a large class of accounts (says Mr. Hoffman, page 107,) that the mode of stating, by giving interest upon each sum from the moment it is charged, will make the amount against the accounting party greater than by compounding interest at the end of each year; that is, by carrying the interest upon the balance found at the beginning of a year, into the balance struck at its close, and computing interest for the next upon the whole; no interest being computed upon the sums when received. This is evidently the method intended by our statute; and Mr. Hoffman, before cited, says: "It is clear that when compound interest is charged, that is the only allowable mode of doing it."

The decree in Raphael vs. Boehm, 11 Ves., 92, 111 and 112, the solitary case before mentioned, gave interest upon sums from the time of reception, and then half yearly rests for the purpose of compounding. And in the former as well as the latter particular, Lord Eldon, that eminent Chancellor, who, for more than twenty years, held the great seal of England, censures that decree, stating that it was peculiar in these points, and was expressed in terms which he hoped would never be found in a decree again.

Young's Adm'r., vs. McKinnie's Adm'r.—Opinion of Court.

557 We find in the record the following statement of facts, signed by the counsel of the respective parties, to wit: "That after the divison of the negroes belonging to the estate of Barney McKinnie, between Andrew Young, in right of his wife, and complainant, on the 29th January, 1835, and before the date of Andrew Young's will, two negroes, Tom and Amanda, were born of Jenny, a negro woman assigned to Andrew Young on the said division, who are still alive, and that after the death of Andrew Young, said negroes were delivered over by his executor, John Brett, to Henry McKinnie, as guardian of complainant, under the impression that they were embraced in the bequest of said Young to the complainant." In that impression we have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Brett was mistaken. They were not embraced in the bequest to Henry McKinnie but were the property of the estate of said Young, part of the accumulation spoken of by him, and if they were not needed to pay his debts or funeral expenses, they passed with the remainder of his estate to his legal heirs. They were not a portion of the property which he had obtained from the estate of Barney McKinnie, but were "servants born in his house." We are aware of and recognize the rule, "Partus sequitur ventrem," which has been so forcibly pressed upon our attention by the counsel for the appellee, and admit that in ordinary cases the issue follows the mother, but we think it does not apply to this case. Here the intention of the testator, as declared in his will, must govern. If we could travel out of it, and seek evidence of that intention dehors that instrument, we might perhaps find a different intention; but we feel ourselves constrained upon this, as upon the question of election, to confine ourselves to the will and not to speculate upon the testator's intention, not therein expressed or clearly implied. This we deem the safest rule.

558 The first, second, third, fourth and sixth clauses of the decree was consider right, and they are therefore affirmed. The fifth is eroneous, and is consequently reversed, and a decree must be entered by the court below, awarding the two slaves, Tom and Amanda, in the said fifth clause mentioned, to the appellant.

At the time of the intermarriage of the said Andrew Young with said Elizabeth McKinnie, widow of said Barney McKinnie, (which it appears by the pleadings in the cause, took place in the fall of the year, 1834,) said Young became entitled, in right of his wife, to that portion of the personal estate, including slaves, to-wit: one-third thereof, which he, the said Barney McKinnie, by his last will and testament, bequeathed to his wife, the said Elizabeth McKinnie. For this portion of one-third, the said Young was not liable to account; nor was he liable to account, during the life time of his said wife, Elizabeth, for the use or hire of the same one-third of the said slaves, or for the use or rent of the one-third of the real estate of his said wife, of which she was seized by virtue of the devise of it to her by the said last will and testament of the said Barney McKinnie. But for the use or hire of the said one-third of the said slaves, since the death of the said Young, the appellant is liable to account; and the said Young, in his life time, was, and the said appellant is, liable to account for the use and hire of the other two thirds of the said slaves; and the said Young was also liable to account for the rents and profits of the two-thirds of the real estate of the said Barney McKinnie, of which he became possessed in right of Henry McKinnie, who had become seized thereof as aforesaid, up to the time of the death of his said wife, Elizabeth, and also for the rents and profits of the whole of the said real estate from the time of the death of the said Elizabeth to the time of the sale thereof, in the year 1840; and the said Young was also liable to account after the said sale 559 to the time of his death, and the said appellant has, since the death of said Young, been and still is liable to account for the whole of the proceeds of all the real estate which was of the said Barney McKinnie, deceased, which was sold by the said Young, together with all the interest that has accrued on the said proceeds of the said real estate since the said sale thereof.

In taking the account for the hire of the slaves, the estate of said Young should be credited with the hire of the said Tom and Amanda, since the time of their delivery by John Brett, Executor, &c., to the guardian of Henry McKinnie, and in taking the account of the hires of the slaves, a due allowance should be made for clothing said slaves, for loss of time by sickness or other casualties, and for the support and maintenance of such of them as by reason of infancy, old age, or other cause, were unable to earn a livelihood.

We do not doubt that the learned Judge who made the decree in the court below, intended that the seventh clause thereof should be so construed as that the account might be taken in the manner we have indicated, except as to the two slaves Tom and Amanda; but as from the general terms in which this clause is expressed, the master might perhaps, in some particulars, construe it differently, we have considered it proper to add this much, as explanatory of our views in regard to it.

From the peculiarity of this case, the decree being in part sustained, and in part reversed, and the fact that both of the parties are administrators, we deem it right and just not to decree costs in favor of either. but to leave each party to pay his own costs.

Let the case be remanded to the court below, for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion. Per totam Curiam.

St. Andrews Bay Land Co., vs. Campbell.—Opinion of Court.

561 ter W. Gautier, Sen., purchased from the Government of the United States an undivided interest in the tract of land situate on St. Andrews Bay, and known in the map of Government surveys, as lot number (5) five, in section six, Township four, Range fourteen, south and west, containing eighty-six 50-100 acres, a certificate for which issued to the said Loftin and Gautier, and the heirs of said Clark (he having in the meantime departed this life,) by the Register of the Land office, and afterwards in like manner a Patent issued to said parties from the United States." "That afterwards an agreement was made between said parties to 'divide' the said fractional lot so as to give to each their respective improvements, making a fair, equitable division thereof, giving to each as near as possible an equal fronting on the Bay, that is one half to said Loftin, one half of the other half and two acres over and above that half, to the heirs of said Clark, and the remainder to said Gautier." And further "that the said parties, Loftin, Gautier and Wilie P. Clark, (who, with your oratrix, are the only surviving heirs of said Clark,) together with the late husband of your oratrix, John W. Campbell, sold and bargained to the said Land Company, or to Jesse H. Willis, Isham G. Searcy, and Richard H. Long, parties of the said Land Company, all their interest and right in the said lot No. five, so that a division thereof became necessary," and "that after the death of the said John W. Campbell, she became desirous of having the right and interest which she was entitled to in the said property set off and divided to her, amounting, as she conceives, to eleven acres and 76-100, she having an interest equal with her brother, the late Wilie P. Clark," and prays "that her portion and share of said lot be assigned and set off to her by metes and bounds," &c. These are all the allegations of the bill which are deemed material to the decision of this case.

562 The answer of the Appellant, (respondent in the court below,) states, "that it appears from the receipt of the Receiver of the Land Office at Tallahassee, and a patent issued thereon, November 5, 1841, that the land mentioned in the bill was purchased from the United States by Loftin, Gautier, Wilie P. Clark, John R. W. Clark, and John W. Campbell, heirs of John Clark, deceased; that on the 13th July, 1839, the said Wilie P. Clark and the said John W. Campbell, sold their respective interests in the said land to the said company or its trustee; that a town has been laid out thereon, and valuable improvements made by said company on said land, and that the respondents have been informed and believe the land in question was settled by one Allen, but that no certificate of purchase or patent had issued to him; that Loftin, Gautier, and John Clark purchased Allen's claim, and afterwards divided the tract according to their respective interests."

A replication was filed March 1st, 1852. The certificate of the Receiver, which appears in the record as exhibit B., is as follows, to-wit:

No. 554. } Pre-emption under Act of 1826, RECEIVER'S OFFICE AT TALLAHASSEE.

Received from William M. Loftin, Peter W. Gautier, Sen., and Wylie P. Clark, John R. W. Clark, John W. Campbell, heirs of John Clark, deceased, of Florida, the sum of one hundred and eight dollars 12 1-2 cents, being in full for lot No. 5, Sec. 6, Township 4, Range 14, south and west, containing 86 50-100 acres at the rate of $1.25—100 per acre. $108.12 1-2. (Signed) R. K. CALL, Receiver.

The patent, which is in accordance with the receipt, the articles of association of the company, the deed from John W. Campbell to the Trustees of the Company, and the following admission of the parties, are also in the record, 563 viz:

"In this case the respondent admits that John Clark died in Washington County, Florida, on or about the twelfth day of October, A. D., 1832, leaving three children, to wit: Complainant, Ann W. Campbell, wife of John W. Campbell, Wylie P. Clark and John R. W. Clark, and that John R. W. Clark died in May, 1835, leaving no children;" "and the complainant admits that John W. Campbell died anterior to the commencement of this suit, and that he, the said Campbell, left a number of children by his marriage with the complainant."

This is all the evidence which the record exhibits. The allegation in the bill, that John Clark purchased the land from the United States, is negatived both by the answer and the proof; and there is nothing in the record to show that he had any title whatever to the lot of land in controversy or any part thereof. The answer to be sure states, "that Loftin, Gautier and John Clark, purchased Allen's claim and afterwards divided the tract according to their respective interests;" but there is no averment or suggestion as to the nature of Allen's claim. It may have been merely for improvements, or he may have had a pre-emption right. The certificate of the Receiver of the Land Office, before mentioned, is headed "Pre-emption under act of 1826," and from this it has been argued that Allen's claim, which Loftin, Gautier, and John Clark purchased, must have been a pre-emption right, but it by no means follows. Again it has been urged that the certificate and patent are to the heirs of John Clark, that Mrs. Campbell is an heir, and therefore entitled to a share as such; but here we are met by the difficulty that both the certificate and patent were issued to certain persons by name, as heirs of John Clark, and that her name is not mentioned in either. To get over this difficulty, it has been suggested and urged, 564 with some plausibility, that Mr. Campbell's first name, John, was probably inserted in the certificate and patent instead of Mrs. Campbell's first name Ann. This may be so, but there is no evidence to that effect, and we do not see how this, in the present shape of the case aids the complainant, (the present appellee:) she does not allege in her bill any such mistake, or ask to have the certificate or patent reformed. If Loftin, Gautier, and John Clark purchased of Allen a pre-emption right, and if John Clark, during his life, in good faith aided in carrying it out, this may have raised an equity in Mrs. Campbell after his death, as one of his heirs, to a share of the tract; and if the company purchased with notice of such equity, they would be bound by that notice, and estopped from defending themselves against it.

Mrs. Campbell appears, from the record, to have a valid claim to the share of her brother, John R. W. Clark, deceased, whatever it may be.

The Master to whom, by the interlocutory decree from which this appeal was taken, "it was assigned to ascertain the several propositions of the respective parties," states that Mrs. Campbell, as the heiress of her father, and entitled to one half, is entitled to eleven acres and eight-hundredths, and the Land Company is entitled to the like quantity, as holding the interest of the other heir, Wilie P. Clark, the said interest of the parties to embrace the improvements respectively made by the said parties, Gautier, Loftin and Clark. How or upon what evidence he ascertained the proportions of the respective parties, does not appear, and as the decree under which his report was made was appealed from, this is not a matter for our enquiry. The report is not in strictmenss before us; but having come to the conclusion that the matters in the record do not justify the

St. Andrews Bay Land Co., vs. Campbell.—Opinion of Court.

565 decree complained of, we think that we may with propriety look into it, with a view to ascertain whether any good would be likely to result from sending the case back for further proceedings; and without intending to express any opinion as to the nature of the claim purchased of Allen by William M. Loftin, Peter W. Gautier, Sr., and John Clark, we may be permitted to say that the record discloses enough to render it proper that the appellee should have a further opportunity, by amending her bill, or filing a supplemental one, to place her claims fairly and fully before the court, to shew, (if the fact exists), that her father, John Clark, had an interest in the tract of land in question that descended to her; that the appellant purchased this interest with notice of her equity, and especially to show her right as heir of her brother, the said John R. W. Clark. In the bill now before us, she makes no claim as heir of this brother, nor is his right admitted by the answer, although it appears from it, and the proofs in the case, that he had some interest in said tract. But no facts are properly in issue unless charged in the bill, and of course no proofs can generally be offered of facts not in the bill, nor can relief be granted for matters not charged, although they may be apparent from other parts of the pleadings and evidence; for the court pronounces its decisions "secundum allegata et probata." Story's Eq. Pl., Sec. 257; Crockett vs. Lee, 7 Wheaton, 522; Jackson vs. Ashton, 11 Peters, 229. In Jouhan vs. Child, 1 Bro. C. C., 94, Lord Thurlow would not listen to any evidence that went to prove a deed fraudulent, because there was no allegation of fraud in the bill; and in James vs. McKernan, 6 John. Rep., 543, 565, the court said: "It is not a sufficient answer to the objection in this case that it must be deemed to have been waived because not raised upon the hearing. The counsel might well have presumed that the testimony to that point (a 566 matter not charged in the bill,) would not have been taken into consideration;" and in the case of New England Bank vs. Lewis, 8 Pickering, 113, it was held that "the answer of a defendant in equity, of facts which are not enquired of in the bill, is not evidence of such facts." And in the case of Jackson vs. Ashton, 11 Peters, 249, the court say: it may be proper to observe that no admission in an answer, can, under any circumstances, lay the foundation for relief under any specific head of equity, unless it be substantially set forth in the bill. With such authorities before us, (and numerous others might be cited,) we feel warranted in witholding our assent to the decree complained of in this case. It has been urged that we can decree for the complainant upon the proofs in the cause, nothwithstanding they vary so materially from the case made by the bill. But besides that variance, we do not consider those proofs sufficient to justify such a decree.

We are aware that there are cases, where, on a bill for the specific performance of a contract, the court has made a decree upon a contract set up in the answer varying from that alleged in the bill, as in Bradford vs. the Union Bank of Tennessee, 13 Howard's U. S. Rep. 69, and cases therein cited, the answer being treated as a cross bill, and made "the foundation for a proper decree by the court." And that court says, the same principle seems to be equally applicable to the complainant, where he insists upon a decree for a specific performance of the contract as established by the proof, although different from that set up in the bill; but to warrant such a decree for the complainant in such a case, the answer must, it is conceived, set up the variant contract and submit to a decree upon it, otherwise it would contravene that sound, salutary and well established rule, that a party is not to be surprised by proof offered by his adversary, at the trial or hearing, which is not in accord ance with some charge in the pleadings. "The rule, (say 567 the court in Small et al. vs. Oewns and Green, 1 Maryland Chancery Decisions, 368,) cannot be questioned that a complainant in his bill must put in issue whatever he intends proving, otherwise the evidence will be excluded.

The Court of Chancery decrees secundum allegata et probata,'" citing Haywood vs. Carroll, 4 H. & J., 518. "This rule is necessary (that court adds), to prevent surprise, but the abrogation of it would enable the complainant to take from his adversary the benefit of his answer, which, if responsive to the bill, would require a stronger measure of evidence to overcome, than if the fact to be proved was not noticed in the pleadings;" and Mr. Justice Story in his Eq. Pl., Sec. 264, says, "If an admission is made in the answer, it will be of no use to the plaintiff unless it is put in the issue by some charge in the bill, and the consequence is that the plaintiff is frequently obliged to ask leave to amend his bill, although a clear case for relief is apparent upon the face of the pleadings. So far, then, as this rule is relaxed, it is, we think, intended to be confined to cases where the defendant sets up a variant contract in his answer." Such is not this case: here the bill is for a partition. The right of the complainant is not admitted by the answer. She is bound, therefore, to make such proof as would entitle her to a recovery in an action of ejectment. 2 Barbour's Chy. Prac. 295; Larkin vs. Mann, 2 Paige, 27-28.

Let the decree of the court below be reversed, and the cause remanded with leave to the appellee to amend her bill or file a supplemental bill in that court, and for such other and further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, as the interests of the parties may seem to require.

The costs to be taxed against the appellee.

DUNCAN MCDOUGALD, APPELLANT, VS. ARABELLA HEPBURN, 568 APPELLEE.

A wife is not entitled to dower in shares of stock of a land company disposed of during the life time of the husband.

Appeal from a decree of Franklin Circuit Court.

Arabella Hepburn filed her bill for dower in the court below, against the appellant and several others, defendants, in which she alleges that Burton Hepburn, deceased, of whom she is widow, during his life time and during the coverture of complainant was seized in fee simple of an undivided one fifth part or interest, in common with Daniel K. Dodge, James C. Watson, Daniel McDougald, and James S. Calhoun & Charles L. Bass composing the firm of Calhoun & Bass, of and in sundry lots in the city of Apalachicola; that said lots were conveyed to the above named parties and their heirs by the Trustees of the Apalachicola Land Company, by deed bearing date the first day of October, 1837. The bill claims dower in the premises conveyed by the deed aforesaid, and prays that one third part of the proportional share of Burton Hepburn be assigned to complainant as and for her dower therein.

McDougald in his answer, admits that during the coverture of complainant, Burton Hepburn, her late husband, took two deeds in fee simple, in common with said Dodge, Watson, Daniel McDougald, and Calhoun & Bass, of and unto certain lots in the city of Apalachicola, one dated the first day of October, 1837, and the other dated the 14th day of September, 1836, which deeds covered the property set out in the bill of complaint. The answer further alleges that prior to the execution of either of the deeds aforesaid, Daniel McDougald, Burton Hepburn, Daniel Dodge, 569 Calhoun & Bass, Jonathan A. Hudson, John W Campbell, John Dill, and others, formed themselves into a company, or co-partnership, by the name and style of the Franklin Land and Town Lot Company, in the city of Apalachicola, and the said company associated Daniel K. Dodge, Daniel McDougald, Burton Hepburn, and the other parties named in the deeds aforesaid, agents to make a contract for the purchase of lots in the city of Apalachicola; that their said agents, in pursuance of said trusts, did make a contract for the benefit of said company, for the lots conveyed in the two deeds aforesaid; that after the terms of said contract were complied with, the company directed Burton Hepburn, and the other parties named in said deeds, to receive from the trustees of the Apalachicola Land Company deeds for the lots in Apalachicola, which deeds were to be taken in the name of said Burton Hepburn, and the other parties therein named, as Trustees of the Franklin Land and Town Lot Company, for the uses and purposes set forth in their articles of association, but by mistake the said deeds were made to Burton Hepburn, and the other parties therein named, in fee simple, instead of being made to them as Trustees aforesaid; that as well as himself, (the respondent,) said Hepburn and his co-Trustees were ignorant of the mistake, and always regarded said deeds as deeds of trust, and so regarding it, continued from time to time to execute the trusts reposed in them by the company.

The answer further alleges that the whole property of the company was divided into sixty-four fractional parts, and that scrip or certificates were given to each shareholder, defining his quantum of interest, and binding the Trustees to make title to each shareholder for his share, so soon as the liabilities of the company, then existing and therefore to accrue, in the erection of buildings, &c., should 570 be discharged, which liabilities were to be discharged by instalments, to be called in by the Trustees; that said scrip or certificates were transferable only on the books of the company; that Burton Hepburn received a certificate, signed by himself and his co-Trustees, for eight fractional shares, being eight sixty-fourths, or one full eighth, and that on the first day of February, 1851, Hepburn transferred to James C. Watson seven sixty-fourths of his share and on the sixth day of February, he transferred to S. R. Bonner his remaining one sixty-four, or one eighth of a share of one eighth, and that by other transfers, he, McDougald, became the owner of the share originally belonging to Hepburn, to which he afterwards obtained a deed. The answer further alleges that the share of Hepburn, after the transfer of his interest, was levied upon as the property of Hepburn, and sold under execution, and respondent, McDougald, was obliged to purchase the same to quiet his title previously acquired.

The answer also alleges that the interest of Hepburn was indebted for improvements made, &c., and that a decree was rendered against said interest by Franklin Circuit Court, and paid off and discharged by respondent, McDougald; and it is insisted, by reason of the premises, complainant is not entitled to the prayer of her bill.

The answer of the other defendants admits the coverture of complainant, and that Hepburn was seized of one eighth of said real estate; that the conveyance on its face seemed to be in fee simple, in his own right, for one fifth, but that as to all except one eighth, they believe he held in trust for others. These defendants allege that the interest of Burton Hepburn has been set apart, and can be traced into the hands of the present owner, and they insist that if complainant is entitled to dower, the same must be allotted from the separate interest of Burton Hepburn, where- 571 fore they pray to be dismissed, &c.

There appears in the record a copy of the minutes of a meeting of the Franklin Land and Town Lot Company, purporting to be held on the 2d April, 1836, composed of Daniel McDougald, Burton Hepburn, Daniel K. Dodge, and others, at which was adopted the articles of association referred to in the answer of McDougald, accompanied by a copy of said articles of association, by which Daniel McDougald, James C. Watson, Burton Hepburn, D. K. Dodge, and James S. Calhoun, were appointed agents and Trustees for all concerned, and were authorized to receive titles in their names, for the lots purchased, and to sell and dispose of the same on such terms as they might think most to the advantage of the company.

It was further stipulated that the Trustees should issue scrip, as stated in the answer of McDougald, and after payment of the purchase money, the Trustees were to distribute the remainder of the lots to the company, according to their respective shares and interests. No transfer of such interest was to be binding unless entered on the books of the company.

No other evidence appears in the record.

On the 16th April, 1851, and order was made by the court below, directing McDougald to employ counsel in the stead of his former counsel, who had died, and on his failing to do so, the complainant was allowed to proceed ex parte. At the April Term, 1853, the court below, by decree, awarded dower to complainant as prayed in her said bill, from which decree McDougald appealed.

By consent of counsel in this court, it was agreed that the general replication to the answer of the defendants be considered as having been filed in the court below, and deemed to be inserted in the record.

T. J. Eppes for Appellant. 572

W. G. M. Davis for Appellee.

1. The bill alleges the seizure of Hepburn during the coverture; this is all that is necessary to give dower.

2. The answer admits this allegation and no proof was necessary to sustain what the answer admitted.

3. The matters set up in the answer to avoid the fact of seizure alleged in the bill and admitted in the answer, not being supported by any proof, cannot be considered by the court. This is decided at this term, in the case of Orman vs. Barnard, Adams & Co.

BALTZELL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a suit in chancery, instituted by Mrs. Arabella Hepburn, to obtain dower in certain land and lots lying in and near Apalachicola, which she claims through her deceased husband, the late Burton Hepburn.

The counsel of McDougald having died, a rule was taken upon him to employ new counsel, which he failing to do, complainant was allowed to proceed ex parte. It does not appear how the case was submitted to the court no order for the hearing having been made. In the final decree rendered it would seem to have been tried upon "the bill, answer of the defendants, and evidence." In this court, it was agreed that a replication had been filed in the court below, so that we are to treat the case as if tried upon bill, answer, replication and evidence. If the object of the plaintiff was to establish his case by proof, not satisfied with the admissions in the answer, he has most signally failed, as there is not, independent of the answer, a word of proof in the record, no deposition of a witness, and no writing of any character. Reliance seems to have been placed 573 in argument upon the answer of the other defendants, but we think it very clear that this is not evidence. The other defendants were but nominal parties, and had no identity of interest with plaintiff. "It is a general and almost universal rule that the answer of one defendant cannot be read as evidence against another." 1 Green., § 178; 2 Dan'l Ch. Pr., 981.

If the answer of McDougald is to be excluded as evidence, as has been contended in argument here, there is not the slightest foundation for the decree. We, however, proceed to ascertain the extent to which it may be used, desirous of disposing of the case as far as possible on the merits. "If a replication be filed, the answer is not evidence in the defendant's favor, but the plaintiff may use any portion of it, without admitting the remainder to be read, except so far as it is explanatory of the portion used." Adams' Equity, 20, 21. A difficulty arises in the present case from the want of the order submitting the case to the court. If part only of the answer was read, it should have been so stated, and then the question would arise of reading the other passages, or of throwing the burthen of proving independent facts upon defendant. As the case was tried ex parte, the presumption is against complainant, that the entire answer was read. Regarding it in this point of view, we proceed to examine if plaintiff has shown an equity, for in this event we should incline to remand the case, with permission to amend the pleadings, and for further hearing.

The answer, whilst admitting that Hepburn and others took deeds in fee, alleges "that prior to their execution, a company was formed by these parties, and others, to be called the Franklin Land and Town Lot Company, and that they appointed Hepburn, Dodge and others, agents to purchase lots in Apalachicola; that these agents did make a pur-574 chase of the lands and lots, and were directed to take deeds in their names, as trustees of said association, and they file copy of the articles of the association; that by mistake the deeds were made to them in fee simple, and not as Trustees; that they always regarded it as a trust; that the whole property was divided into 64 fractional parts, and that said trustees gave certificates, or scrip, to each shareholder for his share, binding themselves to make titles to each share holder, so soon as the liabilities of the company, then existing or to accrue in the erection of buildings, &c., should be discharged; that Hepburn took a certificate, signed by himself and co-trustees, for one full eighth which was assigned and transferred by him, in his life time, to Bonner & Watson, and by them to others, who transferred to defendant."

McDougald vs. Hepburn.—Opinion of Court.

The complainant has confirmed this view of the answer, by taking her decree not for an interest to the extent which she would be entitled to by the deeds, but regulated by the extent of the shares which her husband held. Is this interest or ownership of shares in a company, such as is here described, subject to dower of the wife? In the case of Blake vs. Jones, the Supreme Court of South Carolina treated "a certificate of this kind as nothing more than an equitable agreement, a chose in action," although the land vested in the scripholder by the original grant. 1 Bailey, 147.

In Gilman vs. Brown, Jr., which involved the validity of the title to shares in the land of the New England Mississippi Land Company, plaintiff was declared entitled to shares of the common stock of the company, and not to the interest of one of the original grantees. 1 Mason, 210. It is there stated that one amongst many reasons for the forming a company, was to give a negotiable quality to the stock or property, which without impairing the great objects of the association, might facilitate the transfer of shares 575 in the property, and give it a marketable value. Now it is readily perceived that if certificates of shares were liable to a claim for dower in the hands of every assignee to whom they might be transferrd, the very objects designed in forming such an association would be dedeated.

These authorities, with those cited in the very conclusive argument of defendant's counsel, and which were not controverted on the other side, leave no room to doubt that the complainant is not entitled to the relief she prays.

It is therefore decreed and ordered that the decree of the Circuit Court be reversed and set aside, with costs, and the cause remanded to that court, with direction to dismiss the bill, with costs.

A petition for a re-hearing was presented by the appellee in this cause, which was refused by the court.
